CONFEREES EXPECTED TO REPORT OUT EOA BILL TODAY The House-Senate Conference Committee on the Economic Opportunity Act is expected to meet and report out a compromise bill today -- a bill which accepts the Senate's earmarking and funding authorizations, but which also makes key concessions to the administration's viewpoints. During their meetings last week, the Conferees presented yet another compromise to the administration on the income ceiling for free services under the Child Care section and reached tentative agreement on all major points, including provisions for the new Independent Legal Services Corporation.

$2.95 Billion for Fiscal 1972 The Senate authorizations, which the Committee has tentatively agreed to accept, provide for more money than the House bill allowed and earmarks these funds extensively. The Senate bill authorizes total appropriation of $2.95 billion for EOA programs in fiscal 1972, including $900 million for Title I work and training programs. An additional $500 million for Neighborhood Youth Corps programs, $500 million for Head Start and Follow-Through programs and $950 million for all other EOA programs are earmarked.

$61 Million for Legal Services The Senate earmarks also require the reservation of $61 million in fiscal 1972 and 1973 for the Legal Services program. All other programs administered by the Office of Economic Opportunity (as well as Title VIII VISTA program) are earmarked for fiscal 1972 and 1973.

The Senate also provided that if Congress does not appropriate sufficient sums to cover these earmarks, these figures (with the exception of the amounts required to be reserved) will be prorated to determine the allocation for each program. If additional monies are appropriated the following "add-ons" would be effective: $2 million for Title VII (Community Economic Development programs) in fiscal 1972 and $62 million in fiscal 1973, as well as $79 million for Legal Services in fiscal 1972 and $109 million in fiscal 1973.

The House bill had authorized a total appropriation of $2.194 billion for EOA programs in fiscal 1972 and $2.75 billion for fiscal 1973 and did not have extensive earmarking provisions. The Senate conferees accepted the provisions for an Environmental Action program and for a Rural Housing Development and Rehabilitation program which were included in the House bill. The Conferees then authorized $5 million for the Environmental Action Program -- a program which would provide jobs for the unemployed poor in programs to improve the environment -- and $10 million for the Rural Housing program. CONFEREES EXPECTED TO REPORT OUT EOA BILL TODAY (Cont.)

Child Care Compromise The Conferees apparently conceded -- but not completely -- to the administration's child care position. After HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson had rejected their first compromise on who would be eligible to receive free child care services (EOR, Nov. 8). Conferees agreed upon and sent to the administration for approval, a second compromise which is more in line with Richardson's demands. The new compromise states that children from families of four with an income below $4320 would be entitled to free child care services. Those from families with incomes between $4320 and $6600 would pay 10 percent of the difference between those income levels and those between $6600 and $6960 would pay 15 percent. The HEW Secretary would set fees for families with incomes above $6960. For example, if a family earns $4500, the yearly fee would be $18 per child. If the income was $6700, the family would pay $357 per child.

While the administration has not yet endorsed the latest plan, Secretary Richardson indicated that some such plan would be more in line with the administration's position. The administration had wanted the fee schedule above the free services limit to be left entirely to the discretion of the HEW Secretary.

$2 Billion for Child Care The tentative compromise also adopts the Senate's original authorization of $2 billion for the first full fiscal year of operation of the child care program (fiscal 1973). The House-passed bill had authorized an open appropriation of "such sums as may be necessary" and House conferees reportedly tried to trim the Senate figure to $1.2 billion during the Conference sessions. The Conferees also reached agreement on the population eligibility requirement for a locality to become a prime sponsor of a day care center. The Senate bill set no population requirement while the House bill stipulated that localities of 10,000 or more population could become prime sponsors. The Conferees finally agreed on a population requirement of 5,000.

Delivery System Conference aides indicated that the section of the bill dealing with the delivery system for child care -- the Local Policy Council for a child care center -- is not yet entirely finalized but the Senate provision would probably be accepted. The House Conferees were divided on this issue but were able to get approval of a section which opens up the policy boards to more participation for parents. This was accomplished by acceptance of the House provision that only one member of the LPC had to be a child care expert.

Plan for Legal Services Board Approved The amendment which removed the Legal Services program from under OEO administration and established an Independent Legal Services Corporation was approved after the Conferees resolved the key issue of the composition of the Board of Directors of the Corporation. Again, the administration forces won a major concession. The compromise accepts the House version of a 17 member board with all members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The board would be appointed in the following way:

 six from individuals in the general public, at least three of whom must be attorneys practicing with the highest court in the area.
 two from individuals eligible for assistance under the Act, after considering the recommendations of client members of the Advisory Council.
 two from among former legal-services attorneys, after considering the recommendations of attorney members of the Advisory Council.
 five from lists of nominees submitted by various legal associations.
 two from lists submitted by the Judicial Conference.

The President is given the power to reject all lists and request new ones, with the new provision that all lists must contain not less than three and not more than ten names.

Other provisions concerning the Legal Services Corporation which were accepted include:

 a prohibition against the Corporation contributing to or supporting all partisan and non-partisan political activity.
 the House-bill prohibition against the Corporation attorneys soliciting clients
 the Senate prohibition against Corporation attorneys undertaking private practice of law unless that practice is pursuant to the Corporation guidelines.
 the House's more stringent prohibition against the Corporation representing clients in criminal proceedings.

Increases CAA Board Members Term The Conferees approved the Senate's provision which increases the term an individual (other than a public official or his representative) may serve on a Community Action Agency board from three to six consecutive years, and increases the overall number of years such an individual may serve from six to twelve years.

The Committee also gave tentative approval to the provision which gives the OEO Director more flexibility in the use of funds. His authority to transfer funds under section 616 of the EOA would be increased to 25 percent and the maximum which could be transferred to a particular program would be removed. The House version had reduced the amount which could be transferred to 10 percent and did not permit transfers which would increase the amount available for a program above 10 percent of the amount otherwise available for it.

The Senate Conferees also accepted House provisions that provide for the investigation of State Economic Opportunity Offices by the OEO Director if he receives a complaint from a CAA board and the House provision which prohibits the Director from requiring non-Federal contributions in excess of 20 percent of the approved costs of community action programs or activities.

Technically Not Finished The Conferees basically followed a rule of accepting one chamber's provision, if the other body's version did not contain a comparable clause. While the Committee is expected merely to give formal approval to the compromise bill at today's session, technically either side is still free to reopen negotiations on any point.

HOUSE PASSES HIGHER ED, DESEGREGATION BILL After four days of debate capped by a midnight session November 4, the House passed a massive Higher Education Act that would provide $24 billion over five years for student assistance, direct aid to institutions, and a host of other programs. In the final bitter session, which did not end until 2:21 A. M. November 5, House members adopted the administration's desegregation aid bill as a title of the Higher Ed Act, but only after attaching five separate amendments to prohibit the use of Federal funds to pay for busing.

Student Aid Same Basic Program Heeding warnings of Education Subcommittee Chairman Edith Green (D-Ore.) that the middle class student was being priced out of the college market without compensating government assistance, the House rejected a reform of the student aid package passed by the Senate in August (EOR, Aug. 16). Under the Senate bill (S. 659), a basic $1400 grant is available to all qualified college students, but it is adjusted for family income under nationally-administered guidelines. The House bill (H. R. 7248) retains the present student aid approach based on three categorical programs: Educational Opportunity Grants (EOG), which are intended for students most in need; Work-Study Grants; and student loan programs under the National Defense Education Act and Guaranteed Student Loan programs. Rejecting national administration of the programs as giving too much power to the Office of Education, the House continued the practice of leaving final decisions on each program up to the financial aid officers at individual institutions.

Changes Although retaining the basic program, the House made some detail changes, some to aid the middle class:

 A need component has been added to the state allocation for mula for EOG and National Defense Student Loans similar to the one in the Work-Study Grant Formula. All three program allocation formulas now consider the number of families in a state with income below $3,000 a year.

 The basic EOG is raised to $1,500 a year from $1,400 and students at proprietary schools are made eligible.

 A $15,000 adjusted income criteria for Guaranteed Student Loans is replaced by an institutional decision that the student needs the loan; and the loan limit is increased to $2,500 a year.

 Eligibility for Work-Study Grants is modified to give preference to students with "great financial need", rather than preference to students from low-income families.

 A Student Loan Marketing Association is established to buy and to warehouse student loan paper to free private sector money for more loans.

Programs for Disadvantaged Consolidated Three programs specifically designed to aid the disadvantaged have been consolidated to provide more flexibility. Talent Search, Upward Bound, and Special Services for the Disadvantaged would "retain their separate identities", but separate authorizations and separate program requirements are no longer in the legislation. The Education and Labor Committee report recommended expansion and suggested an appropriation "in the order of $100 million annually" if the programs were to be expected to double in the near future.

Emergency School Aid Act: No Busing Before adopting the $1.5 billion Emergency School Aid Act as an amendment to the Higher Ed bill, the House accepted by votes of nearly 2 to 1 amendments which would prevent the use of Federal funds for busing students or teachers to achieve racial balance and prohibit any Federal agency (specifically HEW) from requiring busing as a prerequisite for receiving Federal money and from forcing local educational agencies to spend their own money on busing. Another amendment would delay the effect of any court order requiring busing until all legal appeals were exhausted. The ESA itself contains a specific prohibition against the use of any of the ESA money for busing and included a definition of "neighborhood schools."

With busing expenditures excluded, programs to achieve "quality integrated education" assume more importance under the House bill. Provisions for an assortment of programs aimed at upgrading desegregating schools are still in the bill, including bilingual education programs, remedial education, counseling, programs using innovative techniques, repair and remodeling of buildings, and public information efforts.

OEO HEAD ATTACKS "EDUCATIONAL MONOPOLIES" ON R&D Describing "some" education groups as "old and tired," Office of Economic Opportunity Director Designate Phillip Sanchez charged teacher organizations with having waged "frantic campaigns replete with wild rhetoric to stave off" OEO experiments in performance contracting and education vouchers. Speaking to the Education Committee of the National Association of Manufacturers meeting in Washington November 12, Sanchez said the teacher groups, thwarted by community support for the OEO experiments, had mounted an "undercover campaign in the Congress" directed against the entire OEO research and development program.

OEO funded 20 performance contract experiments in 1970-71, and plans three voucher demonstration projects -- in San Jose and San Francisco, California, and Seattle, Washington -- for 1972-73.

OEO speaks "for the unhappy, for the people not well-served by our educational industry," said Sanchez. But "in community after community, some teachers' unions and their professional organizations have waged frantic campaigns replete with wild rhetoric to stave off -- what? Two rather small-scale experiments designed, of all things, to help children." He said he found hope in the refusal of citizens to "accept the argument that the status quo is sacred..."

ARKANSAS POVERTY OFFICIALS ACCUSED OF HARRASSMENT The Arkansas Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission, meeting in West Memphis, Arkansas, heard charges last week that Federal poverty programs in eastern Arkansas had only a slight impact on poor blacks because of indifference and harrassment by program officials, white leaders and policemen.

The committee heard rebuttal testimony from several state and Federal officials who said that blacks were being helped by anti-poverty, manpower training and welfare programs. However, most of the witnesses who appeared told of intimidation, election fraud, police indifference to violence against blacks, and discrimination in hiring and the administration of government programs.

Olly Neal Jr., administrator of the Lee County Cooperative Medical Clinic, -- a VISTA supported program which offers health care to poor blacks -- said he had to operate under harrassment by government officials, including United States Senator John McClellan (D-Ark.). Earl Anthes, of Respect Inc., a West Memphis organization, said that the people who operated the Federally financed programs did not support program objectives. Robert Morehead, a black Assistant State Attorney General, testified that he had witnessed irregularities and intimidations of black voters in the last election.

Morton Gitelman, a law professor at the University of Arkansas and chairman of the advisory committee, said the committee would file a report, including recommendations, to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

STUDY DISPUTES WELFARE RECIPIENT STEREOTYPE A study of the welfare population of New York's Westchester County -- which has more than doubled in the last five years -- refutes some of the popular stereotypes concerning the welfare recipient and his attitudes. The report, based on spring 1970 interviews with a representative sample of 1079 welfare recipients, found that most recipients either lived in the county for years or came there to find jobs that they obtained but later lost. The study also found that most relief recipients had strong ties to the local community and most would choose to remain in their neighborhoods even though housing conditions were often poorer.

Equal Number of Blacks and Whites According to the study, welfare recipients were almost equally divided between blacks and whites although blacks made up only nine percent of the county's population. The white recipients were older than the blacks and had smaller families. Both groups averaged about 10 1/2 years of education, more than two years lower than the county average. Nearly twice as many blacks as whites listed "better job opportunities" as their reason for moving to Westchester.

The study is the seventh in a series of reports covering all aspects of housing in Westchester and was financed by a $172,000 Federal grant to the county's department of planning. The 149-page report, entitled "Welfare: Households and Housing," was prepared by the Economic Consultants Organization, of White Plains and Syracuse, N.Y.

OMB EVALUATING EO ADVISORY COUNCIL REPORT The long-delayed (EOR, April 5) report of the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity was approved by Council members October 8 and is now under evaluation by the Office of Management and Budget. A draft of the report was prepared at the September meeting of the Council, then circulated by mail to members for any further comments or criticism and final approval.

A spokesman for NACEO said the report was officially transmitted to the White House on October 8. White House sources say OMB has been evaluating the report since that date in terms of the budgetary implications of any proposed programs which may result from the report's recommendations. After the OMB review, the report will be sent to the President's Domestic Council for further review and comment before it reaches the President, who actually sends the report to the Congress.

On October 4, President Nixon appointed eight new members to the NACEO. These members were not involved in the approval of the report but will begin their duties as the Council prepares its next report.

RICHARDSON MEETS WITH "MAD HILLBILLIES" Several hundred protestors from seven Appalachian states marched on HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson's office November 8, in an attempt to air their grievances about food stamps, school lunch programs, Black Lung disease, and "farm subsidies for rich farmers." The group, referring to themselves as "mad hillbillies", was met at the Secretary's door by three government policemen and were told that Richardson was not in the building. Later in the day, however, Richardson made an unannounced appearance before the mostly white group in the HEW auditorium and listened to their complaints for nearly half an hour.

Leaders of the so-called "Appalachian March for Survival" said the group represented poor people in Georgia, North Carolina, West Virginia, Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio and Tennessee. Earlier in the day, the group had asked the Appalachian Regional Commission "to work as a pressure group for all our needs rather than just building roads."

After their three-day "march," group spokesmen complained of tight security, government indifference and official snubs to their pleas. One spokesman said only 10 of 33 invited Congressmen in the seven states agreed to attend one of their meetings on Capitol Hill. The coalition opposes the administration welfare reform program as being inadequate, considers government Black Lung disease control programs and benefits inferior, and demands school breakfasts and lunches "for all our children."

INDIAN "TERMINATION" POLICY REJECTED BY SENATE COMMITTEE The Senate Interior Committee has approved a resolution repudiating the so-called Indian "termination" policy. Under the controversial policy, abandoned several years ago, some Indian reservations were broken up, with the land and other assets being divided among tribal members as the government "terminated" its special responsibilities to the Indian tribe.

OCTOBER UNEMPLOYMENT RATE DOWN TO 5.8 PERCENT The unemployment rate edged down once more to 5.8 percent of the work force in October from September's 6.0 percent as the total number of employed persons increased by a seasonally adjusted 320,000 to a record 79.8 million, the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) announced November 5. The number of jobless persons totaled 4.6 million, 270,000 less than in September. This decline was greater than is usual for this time of year, so after seasonal adjustment unemployment was down by 135,000, largely among adult men.

Jobless levels were down for: all adult men (from 4.5 to 4.3 percent); married men (3.3 to 3.0); all adult women (5.6 to 5.5 percent); teenagers (17.1 to 17.0); and white workers (5.4 to 5.3 percent). But the rate for minority workers increased from 10.5 to 10.7 percent for a return to the earlier 2-to-1 ratio. The BLS termed the slight statistical decreases for women, teenagers and whites "little changed." The jobless level for married men was at its lowest level in a year.

For Vietnam Era veterans ages 20-29 the job situation was described as "better in October 1971 than it had been all year," despite the fact that military discharges in this age group continued at a rate of about 50,000 a month.

$9.9 MILLION FOR 104 MORE AREAS UNDER EEA An additional 104 areas with 6 percent or higher unemployment rates in 22 states have been allocated $9,879,700 for public service jobs under Section 6 of the Emergency Employment Act (EEA), Secretary of Labor James D. Hodgson announced November 5. The allocations are from the $50 million held in reserve September 21 when $200 million of the $250 million Section 6 appropriation was distributed nationally. The new allocations go to cities, counties and neighborhoods that did not receive funds in the first distribution and that have had 6 percent or higher jobless rates for three recent months. These include:

 Areas of "substantial" unemployment that had not been identified previously;
 Areas newly-eligible because of a recent increase in joblessness; and
 Areas eligible before -- but for an amount less than the established minimum grant of $25,000 -- that now are eligible for a higher amount because of increased unemployment.

In making the $9.9 million announcement, Hodgson said his Department is "moving as rapidly" as it can "to get all Public Employment Program funds into the hands of employing agencies." Allocations for more areas in other states "will be announced shortly." The Department said that $930 million has been allocated under the EEA since August.

TENANT ORGANIZATION MAY MERGE WITH WELFARE GROUP Discussion is under way which may lead to the merger of the National Tenants Organization with the larger National Welfare Rights Organization. At the annual convention of the tenants group in San Francisco, leaders of the two groups talked merger and George Wylie, Executive Director of the welfare rights organization, said that even if the outright merger was not achieved, there would be some kind of "linking together" of the two groups.

The National Tenants Organization is only two years old but has already established affiliates in 40 states. The five-year-old National Welfare Rights Organization is even larger, with a membership estimated at 150,000.

At the convention, the tenants group held a series of workshops, dealing primarily with devising ways of achieving its national objective -- guaranteeing that the government assume the responsibility for housing people at rates they can afford to pay. Jesse Gray, National Director of the tenants organization said the group would continue the use of rent strikes as its primary weapon in dealing with landlords.

THREE FEDERAL AGENCIES URGE NEW METHADONE UPGRADING Three Federal agencies have urged Congress to shift the synthetic opiate methadone from "investigatory" category to "new drug" status. If such a shift is approved it would mean a more widespread use of the drug in heroin addiction programs. The use of an investigatory new drug is limited to research purposes. New drug status would mean that the drug had been accepted as safe and efficacious for widespread medical use.

In testimony before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate Commerce, Dr. Jerome H. Jaffe, Director of the President's Special Action Office for Drug Abuse, and John Ingersoll, Director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, asked that the new drug application regulations be given legislative sanction. Dr. Charles Edwards, Food and Drug Administration Commissioner, held that it would be sufficient for the agency to make new regulations available for comment for a few months and then to promulgate them.

NEW YORK FINDS JOBS FOR SIX PERCENT OF WELFARE CLIENTS New York State welfare and labor officials report that jobs were found in September for six percent of the welfare clients who, under terms of a new state law, are required to pick up their aid checks in person at state employment offices. According to the report issued last week, 7.7 percent of the employables were dropped from relief roles in the month for noncompliance with the law.

The law requires employables on home relief to report to state employment centers to get welfare checks, instead of receiving them by mail, and to be available for work or training referrals. The September figures bring the three-month scorecard for the new law to 8913 welfare recipients who had taken jobs and 12,100 who had been terminated for noncompliance. September placements were 3323 and September terminations, 4269.

HEW STARTS HEALTH SCREENING OF CHILDREN The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, under Congressional and legal pressure, has ordered all states to begin health screening and treatment of needy children under a law signed by former President Lyndon Johnson in 1967.

About 13 million poor children would be eligible for preventive diagnosis and treatment under the law, part of the $6.2 billion Medicare program. HEW estimates it would cost about $200 million by 1974.

Lawsuit, Congress Pressure on HEW to publish guidelines requiring states to undertake the program has been mounting recently. Senator Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) and Representative William Ryan (D-N.Y.) have pushed for implementation, and the militant National Welfare Rights Organization finally gave up a lobby effort and filed suit last month in an attempt to force HEW to act. NWRO said at the time they would withdraw their suit if action were taken.

Preventive Medicine The original idea for the program is generally attributed to former HEW Secretary Wilbur Cohen, who said the plan would save money by offering needy children relatively inexpensive preventive treatment rather than waiting for them to develop something sufficiently serious to rate treatment under the regular Medicare program.

Regulations were supposed to be published for the children's program in July, 1969, but HEW, reacting to state complaints that it would be so costly as to force cutbacks in other welfare programs, delayed publication of final regulations. Under the rules published by HEW November 9, all states must begin the medical screening within 90 days or face a cut off of all Federal welfare funds.

NIXON URGES SWIFTER EEA HIRING President Nixon on November 7 urged governor, mayor and county Emergency Employment Act program agents to act quickly in filling the public service jobs funded under the Act. In a letter to government officials that was released through the Florida White House, Nixon said that "hiring has not kept pace in some areas of the nation" (he did not specify where), and urged the officials "to move with speed and vigor to fill the job vacancies now funded in your jurisdiction." He told them he is "sure that you share my commitment to reduce the level of unemployment in our country," and said he hoped that they would assign a "high priority" to the hiring of Vietnam Era veterans. (The Emergency Employment Act contains the stipulation that veterans be given "special consideration" in the public service hiring. The provision was one which finally made the overall bill acceptable to the administration, which at first strongly opposed it.)

Public Jobs Watchdog Group Forms Meanwhile, an organization concerned with the development of an effective public service employment program has formed. The National Conference on Public Service Employment, based in New York, has set its first major priorities as: monitoring implementation of the Emergency Employment Act; a public education campaign focusing on comprehensive manpower legislation and welfare reform; and the development and dissemination of further designs for public service employment.

Vol. I. No. 3 Winter 1965

TITLE VI, SNCC, KEPPEL & CHICAGO

The curious series of events that transpired last summer climaxed either a long series of blunders or a blatant conspiracy not to enforce Title VI of the Civil Rights Act.

Although the civil Rights Act was passed in July of 1964, it was not until December that regulations intended to achieve desegregation were adopted by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW). Later in the month HEW published Instructions to School Districts Regarding Compliance with Title VI, which Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) analysis found "at best sketchy and at worst so vague as to render them absolutely meaningless and ineffective."

In effect the instructions required school districts to submit desegregation plans to HEW by March 4, 1965 (this time the limit had to be extended to April 17th because HEW had insufficient staff reviewing plans).

On April 29 the Title VI compliance section, called Equal Education Opportunities Program (EEOP) issued a General Statement of Policies which was intended to clear up some of the previous vagueness. Yet SNCC again found "innumerable loopholes and muddy language" and then went on to cite names of school districts which had discriminatory plans approved by EEOP. Much of the blame was attributed to EEOP director, David Seeley.

Many of the examples noted by SNCC dealt with "free choice" plans as in the case of Mississippi where by September 15 EEOP had approved 62 integration plans. Five called for desegregation of all grades under "free choice" while the remaining 57 provided for desegregation of two or four grades in 1965 but still with the "free choice" proviso.

So-called "freedom of choice" supposedly is justified because overcrowding might take place when shifting from segregated to integrated facilities. SNCC field workers found the "free choice" system being used to maintain segregation because the burden of integration is put on Negro families who ask to have their children enrolled in white schools instead of placing the blame for integration on school boards. Also the parent who exercises "free choice" is open to economic reprisals, threats and intimidation.

SNCC analysis found "free choice" opened the door to "tokenism" because a school board could admit one or two students and thereby give the impression of compliance with Title VI. Yet, some school officials would not even go this far. Instead they use "free choice" to cover administrative decisions that amount to outright evasion

Reinforcing the SNCC arguments, PEO's freedom planner, Robert Dennis, reports that in Knoxville, Tennessee the Federal District Court refused to allow "free choice" as part of the desegregation plan submitted by the local school board. In that City the board zoned the whole city and then let children transfer to other schools so that white children would not have to go to Negro schools.

SNCC field workers named other localities where school officials had refused admission to Negroes because of "bad character" and "poor record." Many other equally blatant schemes are employed to keep Negro children out of white schools, but HEW is contented to approve them EEOP's field inspectors number twelve so it accepts compliance reports from school districts without checking their accuracy.

In July, Dr. Martin Luther King focused national attention on discrimination in Chicago much to the embarrassment of the Democratic Party faithful in the North, but the pressure was evidently enough to get five of the EEOP investigators into that city

Then in late September SNCC published its findings about southern evasion of Title VI and called upon HEW Secretary John W. Gardner to get rid of David Seeley and "seriously evaluate the work of Commissioner (of Education) Keppel."

The SNCC criticisms were directed at HEW's inaction in the South. Just how much pressure the 50 page report created is not clear, but a week later Commissioner Keppel announced he was withholding payment of a $30 million aid program for Chicago schools. This tactic, in light of subsequent events suggests several interpretations including the contention that Keppel was trying to pres pressure Chicago school superintendent Benjamin Willis who has been repeatedly criticized by civil rights groups. Since it required only four days for Chicago's Mayor Daley to have funds restored, the most broadly shared view is that Keppel's action was ill-conceived.

Why Keppel picked a Democratic fiefdom like Chicago for a test case when he could have started with any number of the examples cited by SNCC defies logic. Some observers have concluded he did not wish to win while others see EEOP enforcement powers badly eroded and the prestige of Title VI completely undermined.

Perhaps skepticism is justified when this series of mistakes is contrasted with Assistant Secretary of HEW James M. Quigley's observation in Atlanta last April. "As the Vice President has made clear, we will enforce the law if we are forced to do it. But we hope we don't have to."

QUOTAS AND HOUSING

The bankruptcy of the New York State Commission on Human Rights was recently demonstrated in a report of Case No. CH-11047-64, a complaint filed by a Negro who contended that the Yonkers Housing Authority had established a quota system and was denying him available housing. Bernard Katzen, Investigating Commissioner, found no evidence of quotas or of discrimination based on them.

During the investigation a member of the Housing Authority intimated to Mr. Katzen that if one of the buildings were to become racially homogeneous, tenants might be transferred to regain racial balance. Commissioner Katzen siezed the opportunity to caution the Authority against such action and quoted himself to the effect that "quotas once established, become a part of the mores and are as difficult to eradicate as is (sic) every other type of discrimination," and that such transfers may "open the way for the unbridled use of a quota system for restrictive and discriminatory ends."

The Commissioner's conclusion is that a governmental agency operating housing projects must be color-blind when as a matter of uncontestable fact most projects were originally planned for occupancy by one race or another.

Although it was necessary to create the New York State Commission on Human Rights and laws against discrimination in housing in order to achieve integration, Commissioner Katzen opposes positive action by housing authorities.

His categorical imperitive that a quota system could be used for restrictive and discriminatory ends excludes the real possibility that it could also eliminate discrimination and segregation. Quotas are not bad per se. They tend to reflect real conditions, that is, the concern over numbers.

Who gets what in jobs, housing or education is the issue and it will be with us for a long time. It will not be obscured by the smokescreen that quotas are restrictive and discriminatory.

WEAVER URGED TO CLOSE 701 GAPS

Members of the Housing Committee of the New York Chapter recently wrote Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver recommending administrative and legislative changes needed in the 701 Urban Planning Assistance Program and the Workable Program for Community Improvement. This letter urged "changes that would promote equal opportunity and eliminate discrimination."

The Committee found that anti-discrimination controls over the 701 program "touch only hiring practices of the planning agency, not the proposals contained in the planning documents prodiced." It called for a pledge to URA by the planning agency that plans produced with Federal aid will not discriminate.

To implement the pledge the Committee proposed that a section of each plan be devoted to an examination of the impact of the plan proposals on minorities.

Also questioned was the limitation in Federal legislation that restricts 701 programs to "physical" planning. It was pointed out that this limitation does not exist under the Community Renewal Program or the Urban Renewal Program.

Pointing to the Community Renewal Program which requires "survey, analysis, and program of action to aid in achieving equal opportunity in housing" the letter recommended that a similar provision be required under the 701 program.

Concern was expressed over the peculiar distinction made with respect to the 701 program inasmuch as it is omitted from programs covered by Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The letter objected to the interpretation that community planning is too general to discriminate while other public works planning is not.

The final point was a recommendation that the Workable Program for Community Improvement be expanded to require fair housing legislation, calling it "an important anti-slum tool" which should be required before a community receives Federal housing and planning funds.

General language which might be useful in such regulations was suggested by the committee, and it indicated its willingness to assist in the further development of suitable administrative and statutory provisions implementing these concerns.

PLANNERS AND SCHOOLS

Into the traditionally inviolate territory of school planning which has usually consisted of taking school administrators' requirements and assigning them a school site, comes the civil rights movement. It threatens the security of school officials and the aloofness of planning because it calls into question many accepted techniques to school planning. Bussing, pairing, neighborhood school, educational parks, 6-3-3, 4-4-4, etc. All ideas about what makes a good school system now get good and bad marks for the integration, as well as the quality of the learning they produce. Issues become both technically complex and emotional in a turbulent sea of words in which right and wrong vie with good and bad strategy as points of contention, yet for PEO members recent events raise an additional issue. Is there a special role for planners in achieving integrated education?

Is our traditional hands-off attitude toward education still desirable?

Every integration battle is not a planning problem although many current battles derive from planning decisions of the past. For example, school locations have been based upon patterns of segregation in most American cities. The planner in collaboration with school officials could determine what size school to build for the neighborhood to be served--Negro or white. Now that segregated schooling is unlawful, can planners apply their skills to untangling segregated school patterns? What skills do they have which may contribute to the process?

The New York City chapter's education committee has evaluated educational proposals and appeared at public hearing to give its views. Along this same line the zoning plan of Knoxville, Tennessee's school board was mapped to compare the location of non-white families with school district lines. This simple map proved what many people suspected and is evidence that the school board still follows a discriminatory policy.

PITTSBURGH SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Under pressure from civil rights groups, particularly the Urban League, the recent annual report of the Pittsburgh Board of Education was titled Racial Equality. It dealt in some detail with plans of the school system to obtain quality education and promote desegregation. While the Board has already rejected mass bussing to achieve integration, the annual report commits it to work for desegration in other ways.

The Harvard Center for Field Studies has been brought in to study means of desegregating the secondary schools.

Ringed, as Pittsburgh is, by incorporated suburbs with their own school systems, there is speculation that the Harvard study will recommend that surrounding school districts in these suburbs open their doors to Pittsburgh children. This was the conclusion of a recent report analyzing the problems of the Hartford, Connecticut school system.

ELECTION RESULTS

Election of officers, the first to be elected under the PEO constitution, was announced at the PEO annual meeting in St. Louis. October 17th.

Walter Thabit, temporary chairman of PEO's organizing group, was elected as president for a one-year term. Kenneth Green (Springfield, Illinois) was elected Vice President and Janet Reiner (Philadelphia) was elected Secretary-Treasurer.

The twelve-member Policy Committee is composed of two groups--one elected for two years and the other for one year. Those elected for two years are Paul Davidoff, Justin Gray, Robert Heifetz, David Popenoe, Larry Reich, Tom Reiner; one-year members are Peter Abeles, Jerrold Allaire, Carla Cohen, Louis Dolbeare, Chester Hartman, and Henry Hightower.

RESUME OF ACTIVITIES BY THABIT

At the St. Louis meeting where the relationship between planners and civil rights was a dominant topic of conversation, there were pledges by members to organize new chapters, entreaties for PEO members to involve themselves in the civil rights struggle and foot-dragging by Washington planners.

The annual meeting of PEO (held during the AIP convention for convenience of members) included a discussion of the PEO program, distributed copies of Equalop and invited new members to join. Newly elected Vice President Kenneth Green assumed responsibility for helping organize a Chicago PEO chapter while delegates from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cambridge, Washington and New York reported on progress by local groups. A Washington representative observed that planners were reluctant to organize under the PEO banner because they lacked confidence in the ruling group dominated by New Yorkers and suggested that the President visit Washington to help allay doubts among colleagues.

Among groups with which National PEO has been asked to work are:

* Harlem Parents Committee, a group which wants PEO support for better education in keeping with a thick report just published.

* Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, which meets in Washington and may have need for PEO help.

* Commission on the Delta Ministry that is developing a long-range program for the Mississippi Delta.

* Citizens Crusade Against Poverty organized by Walter Reuther to watchdog the Federal program and may wish to have PEO technical assistance.

* Congress of Racial Equality, which wishes help in its leadership training program.

* League for Industrial Democracy which wants help in its Leadership Training Institute.

"As word circulates about the existence of PEO and as volunteers step forward to undertake assignments with these other groups, PEO members see a broad and effective basis for participation in civil rights and anti-poverty efforts," Thabit concluded.

REPORT ON FREEDOM PLANNING

A report on PEO's first summer project was distributed to a joint meeting of the Policy and Steering Committees October 2nd. Written by Robert Dennis, who volunteered to go to Knoxville, Tennessee during last August, it describes the effects of various public programs on the Negro community.

Among other things Dennis found that public housing is segregated, that urban renewal has concentrated in Negro areas without opening new housing to the displaced, and that school desegregation plan zones Negro areas for Negro schools.

In an urban renewal project involving the University of Tennessee he found a fraternity row planned. It is to include several fraternities (including Sigma Chi about which there has been much publicity) well-known for discriminatory practices in the past. He questioned the appropriateness of helping fraternities that cannot demonstrate that they no longer discriminate.

He called for a Human Relations Commission which could work in sections of the city where racial tensions exist, and noted that the area of East Knoxville is now in flux because many white property owners are selling and moving.

While the 40-page memorandum covers many topics including voting behavior, interstate highway construction and annexation, city planning was singled out because the Metropolitan Planning Commission in Knoxville has had a long and productive history. Yet, he found "almost total disregard of Negroes in Metropolitan Planning Commission reports!"

A suggestion for correcting this situation was that the HHFA require an evaluation of the impact of plans on minorities as part of reports it helps finance.

The report was favorably received and endorsed for distribution by a vote of 8 to 2 by the Steering Committee. On the basis of Dennis' report Walter Thabit, PEO President, has established a committee to arrange for a larger effort during the summer of 1966.

Copies are available by writing to PEO.

N.Y. CHAPTER HOUSING PAPERS

The Housing and Renewal Committee of the New York Metropolitan Chapter has recently distributed nearly 100 copies of two papers to city officials, civil rights and citizens' groups. Written by Hall Winslow, they are concerned with the failure of government programs at all levels to provide real relief for the most urgent housing needs of the poor and minority groups in New York City.

The first paper, a study on The Inter-racial Status of Publicly Aided Housing in New York City, brought to light the fact that less than one quarter of the 102 middle income and publically aided housing projects studied were inter-racial to an acceptable level of 10 to 15 percent. Nineteen of the 23 satisfactorily integrated projects (83%) lay in mixed (fringe or cluster) areas of the city near Negro concentrations or in communities where smaller clusters of Negroes are found. Less than half of the total number of projects were found in these areas.

The PEO study group deplored the suppression of information on the interracial status of aided housing projects as unwarranted and recommended that such data be made public for all projects. Since the simple expedient of placing public housing in mixed areas appears highly effective in positively influencing their degree of integration, the study group recommended that this method be favored for new housing.

The statement on Equal Opportunity in New York's Housing and Urban Renewal declares that it is high time for the drive toward equality in New York to specify its aims and find programs to attain them, and that "practical concrete action within the broadest urban context is long overdue." The New York Chapter seeks to aid in the search for precise planning techniques to help in solving not only minority ills but related city problems.

The following suggestions were offered for solving the problems of the underpriveleged: Large social welfare and rent subsidy programs and higher relocation payments were proposed to raise the effectiveness of renewal in residential areas. Long range job development programs to elevate skills and wages of unskilled workers whose jobs are threatened by renewal in non-residential areas were also advocated.

A huge increase in aided housing is imperative as a relocation resource. In it discriminiatory eligibility requirements against the lowest socio-economic levels must be abandoned and percentage rentals and private ownership instituted to help promote project stability by retaining upwardly mobile families.

The hope is that informed, unofficial professional recommendations and criticism may help to inform the public and officials and influence decisions concerning housing and rehabilitation of the poor and underpriveleged.

Copies of both papers are available by writing to PEO. Please write for

PHILADELPHIA STRATEGY

Members considering the formation of a local PEO chapter will find an interesting example in the work undertaken by Philadelphia members who have three ad hoc committees at work, have responded to requests from the Community Action Program and have met four times this fall.

One ad hoc committee working with the Urban League Education office is applying campus plan criteria to Philadelphia. Another is working with a metropolitan fair housing committee training volunteers in the intricacies of urban renewal while a third committee is analyzing expenditures in the ghetto, a job much needed in most cities.

Meetings of Philadelphia PEO have attracted an average of twenty people, half of whom are planners. (About half are members of PEO National.) Announcements have appeared in the AIP chapter newsletter at the University of Pennsylvania's planning school and have been sent to a list of fifty interested people.

One recent meeting was devoted to exploring methods of linking opportunity planning with comprehensive planning, a subject with great potential impact appealing to the planner's planner more than the service-type committee activities. This, as other subjects being investigated by Philadelphia PEO, was introduced on the premise that there is a wide need for planning skills and that PEO workers with special interest in a particular subject will be brought together through such discussions.

ARTICLES OF INTEREST

Several articles touching on equal opportunity and the planning process have been written by PEO members during the last year. Among them are:

"Advocacy and Pluralism in Planning" by Paul Davidoff (Journal of the American Institute of Planners, Vol XXXI, Nov. 1965) which is concerned with enlarging the concept of the planning process as a means for determining policy. Both the profession and proper city development, the article asserts, will benefit through an enlarged view of planning wherein full participation by all citizens permits consideration of equitable planning alternatives.

"The Failure of Urban Renewal" by Herbert J. Gans (Commentary, April 1965) and "The Housing of Relocated Families" by Chester Hartman (JAIP, Nov. 1964) take a similar view of planning in evaluating the urban renewal program. They both attack the relocation process as untenable under any representative system of planning, and they suggest changes needed. They call for a review and evaluation of the use of urban renewal within the framework of an enlarged view of the planning process.

In "Towards Equality of Urban Opportunity" by Bernard J. Frieden (JAIP, Nov. 1965) lack of residential choice among non-white, low-income citizens is emphasized. The combination of suburban politics, status [illegible]rs, city relocation policies, and the de[illegible]res of commercial interests combine to restrict residential choices open to poor Negroes. Several strategies for reform are proposed including "rebuttal" planning by disadvantaged groups.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

In the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, The Central Brooklyn Coordinating Council, Inc., a anti-poverty and renewal group, has begun publishing a neighborhood newspaper, The Central Brooklyn Coordinator. Two PEO members, Donald F. Benjamin and Ronald Shiffman are on its editorial board. Copies may be obtained from the Council, 1121 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

FIRST ANNUAL CONFERENCE

Saturday, December 10, 1966

District 65 Headquarters

AFL-CIO

13 Astor Place, Fourth Floor
New York, New York

At this, our First Annual Conference, Planners for Equal Opportunity will set forth its policies on the housing and planning issues of the day. We will try and state just how much local communities should have to say about their own renewal and housing futures, what the federal responsibilities for the urban poor really are, what is wrong with Demonstration Cities and other government programs and what the impacts of the Logue approach would be on our cities. PEO is also going to discuss steps which will wake the planning profession to its responsibilities.

Our concerns at this conference are not simply to create policies, but to strengthen our relationshipa with other groups fighting for equal opportunity: the civil rights movement, local action organizations, Negroes and other minorities and concerned public agencies. In our discussions, we will be exploring ways in which planners can work with these groups in ways which will help to unify and strengthen all our efforts.

As participants we have assembled an active and knowledgeable group of people. Most are professional planners, with wide experience in working with local communities or on problems of deep concern to the poor. We have included on our program non-professional activists, civil rights leaders and others who have the same depth of experience in these areas. From this group, we hope to get a dramatic and focused critique of current policies and programs as well as sensible guides to future PEO action.

Planners for Equal Opportunity

Vol. 1 No. 5 Spring 1967

FIRST ANNUAL PEO CONFERENCE

The first annual conference of Planners for Equal Opportunity was held in New York City on December 10, 1066. Under the theme of "Planning Action for Equal Opportunity", the 213 conferees in a morning general session heard addresses by Congressman William F. Ryan, Charles Abrams and PEO President Walter Thabit. Afternoon panels and a plenary session discussed policy recommendations on sixteen issues ranging from the Johnson Administration's Model Cities program to relations with the American Institute of Planners.

Demonstration Cities Criticized

1 "Resources allocated to Demonstration Cities are totally inadequate," asserted the PEO afternoon panel discussing the Logue Report for New York City and the new federal Demonstration Cities program of HUD.

This highly publicized Great Society program was criticized for other deficiencies as well. Federal officials were called on to create 2 "significant amounts of jobs for local people in target areas," place greater emphasis on 3 "metropolitan-wide planning and renewal," 4 and minimize displacement of the poor when new or rehabilitated housing is not available.

Members assembled at the session gave overwhelming endorsement to these four points and tabled a fifth calling on Demonstration Cities regulations to include "options for residential freedom" as an underlying policy.

The tabled resolution underscored a morning discussion between panelists Piven and Davidoff.

Dr. Frances Piven, Columbia University School of Social Work Professor, urged the conference to drop demands for integration because of their political repercussions and concentrate instead on rebuilding the ghetto, a position contrary to the proposed resolution. Earlier in the day Paul Davidoff, Hunter College Professor, had counseled the conference not to give up on integration without a concerted drive.

Since the earlier discussion had revealed deep differences of opinion within the membership, the motion to table was eagerly adopted.

PEO-AIP Matters

An afternoon panel discussed subjects of mutual interest to PEO and American Institute of Planners members and reported one resolution and one recommendation.

The resolution, adopted by the Plenary Session, asserted "that it be considered unethical conduct for a planner to prepare a planning document that does not evaluate that document's impact on minority groups and the poor."

Before passage of the resolution, it was pointed out in debate that the American Institute of Planners' code of ethics has no similar provision as a standard for professional conduct.

The recommendation of the panel called for creation of a committee "to prepare proposals for the AIP's 50th Anniversary Conference." Subsequently, Paul Davidoff, on behalf of PEO, presented to the AIP Board of Governors a series of proposals that emerged from the Conference panel.

Those adopted by the Board of Governors dealt with (1) a strong affirmation by HUD that the purpose of the Model Cities program includes creating equal opportunity in employment, education and housing both inside and outside the ghetto; (2) repeal of the Fino amendments which prohibit the direct use of Model Cities funds to secure racial balance; and (3) an evaluation of the connections between do-

This highly publicized Great Society program was criticized for other deficiencies as well. Federal officials were called on to create 2 "significant amounts of jobs for local people in target areas," place greater emphasis on 3 "metropolitan-wide planning and renewal," 4 and minimize displacement of the poor when new or rehabilitated housing is not available.

Earlier in the day Paul Davidoff, Hunter College Professor, had counseled the conference not to give up on integration without a concerted drive.

Since the earlier discussion had revealed deep differences of opinion within the membership, the motion to table was eagerly adopted.

PEO-AIP Matters

An afternoon panel discussed subjects of mutual interest to PEO and American Institute of Planners members and reported one resolution and one recommendation.

The resolution, adopted by the Plenary Session, asserted "that it be considered unethical conduct for a planner to prepare a planning document that does not evaluate that document's impact on minority groups and the poor."

Before passage of the resolution, it was pointed out in debate that the American Institute of Planners' code of ethics has no similar provision as a standard for professional conduct.

The recommendation of the panel called for creation of a committee "to prepare proposals for the AIP's 50th Anniversary Conference." Subsequently, Paul Davidoff, on behalf of PEO, presented to the AIP Board of Governors a series of proposals that emerged from the Conference panel.

Those adopted by the Board of Governors dealt with (1) a strong affirmation by HUD that the purpose of the Model Cities program includes creating equal opportunity in employment, education and housing both inside and outside the ghetto; (2) repeal of the Fino amendments which prohibit the direct use of Model Cities funds to secure racial balance; and (3) an evaluation of the connections between domestic and foreign affairs, particularly as they effect the ability of current national budgets to meet critical domestic needs. A resolution favoring the cessation of bombing in North Vietnam was rejected because the Board felt it was outside its area of direct concern.

Local Matters

The hurried plenary session heard suggestions on many other points, some of them non-controversial and therefore not voted on. There was agreement that PEO should hire a staff and that it should develop procedures so that it could be heard on public matters.

Similar agreement was voiced on the proposal that PEO organize a committee on Advocacy Planning to develop the advocate planning function. On this subject the Conference declared that PEO should maintain a resource file through which advocacy planning experiences can be shared.

A related demand on which there was also general agreement was that housing and planning projects should be certified by neighborhood representatives prior to final approval by city and federal agencies.

Of interest to New Yorkers was the unanimously adopted recommendation to form a Task Force to submit proposals to the State Constitutional Convention.

A larger concern--the Heller Plan which proposes giving federal revenues to state governments to spend as they choose--was discussed, but no position was taken.

National Fiscal Policies

In addition to the parochial interests of housing and city planning that usually draw most attention of planners, the PEO plenary session questioned the allocation of federal resources. A resolution was introduced from the floor urging the Federal Government "to re-evaluate budget priorities with a view towards reducing defense allocations and enlarging expenditures in cities." The debate, confined by time limitations, generated heated exchanges including the contention that the subject was beyond PEO's ken, but the assembly overwhelmingly endorsed it.

Likewise, it approved the resolution that "PEO support guaranteed jobs and guaranteed incomes as Federal responsibilities."

PEO CONFERENCE PRESS BLACKOUT-NOT TOTAL

Silence in Sunday's New York City papers following PEO's first Annual Conference last December 10th was irritating to people who attended the lively proceedings. But the press blackout was not total.

Monday's York, Pennsylvania Gazette & Daily (it does not publish on Sunday) carried a 1300-word account of the day's proceedings highlighting the Piven-Davidoff debate over the goal of open occupancy, Charles Abrams' assertion that the federal government has an "anti-city bias", Walter Thabit's proposal for boycotting "the entire renewal program" and Paul Davidoff's contention that because of Vietnam "The Great Society has become the polluted society."

PLANNERS AND VIETNAM

PEO's Conference anticipated by four months the arguments over mixing civil rights and human rights that Dr. Martin Luther King's outspoken condemnation of the Vietnam War emphasizes. When Paul Davidoff asked the PEO morning gathering, "and what about Vietnam?" the audience fell silent.

"How long will we acquiesce, hold government jobs, sit by and let the federal government continue the war in Vietnam?" he asked the stunned, if sympathetic, gathering.

"We are sitting back and taking it...I personally haven't had guts enough to do anything about it yet, but maybe if one of you leads the way, I will follow. Maybe we shouldn't work with Federal funds? Perhaps not? We are all responsible and I think it is about time we do something about," he said.

When the issue was again raised in the plenary session, dissenting voices argued against mixing civil rights and war policies. Opponents of declarations about Vietnam contended that PEO's effectiveness in the civil rights and anti-poverty fields would be reduced by introduction of an extraneous issue, an argument similar to the one sounded against King after he spoke out.

Supporters of Davidoff's position argued that until the war was stopped, national resources would be drained away from urban needs into war production.

When brought to a vote, the Conference approved the resolution "that the goals and sentiments for American contained in the Demonstration Cities program and in the Logue report are sharply at variance with the destruction of cities and city-dwellers simultaneously occurring as a result of our government's policy in Southeast Asia."

At the May AIA Convention a meeting, attended by several hundred architects and others in the design professions, was held on "The Planning Professions and the War in Vietnam." The meeting, chaired by Percival Goodman of Columbia University, heard, in addition to Mr. Goodman, Sybil Moholy-Nagy of Pratt Institute, Mario Salvadori of Columbia, and Christopher Tunnard of Yale speak on various aspects of the war and the actions people in the design professions could take.

The meeting was organizaed by the Committee of the Planning Professions to End the War in Vietnam. PEO members interested in supporting its activities can write to it at Room 331, 101 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

The reaction of the professional press to the Committee's efforts has been mixed. The Journal of the American Institute of Architects refused an "Open Letter to the President" advertisement, while Progressive Architecture rejected an advertisement for the AIA Convention meeting. However, Architectural and Engineering News did print the "Open Letter."

STOLOFF, NATIONAL PEO COORDINATOR

As newly designated National Coordinator, E. David Stoloff is donating one day each week to PEO business, promoting the organization with civil rights groups and establishing contacts with funding organizations, both public and private.

"Dave Stoloff's volunteer service comes to us at a critical time," Walter Thabit announced. "He has been a member of PEO since its inception and he has been closely involved in planning for the Negro community in New York for several years. His generosity brings to PEO time, energy and experience we sorely need."

In addition to canvassing foundations, civil rights groups and public agencies to develop means through which PEO can provide program and research services, he is organizing the national PEO meeting to be held in conjunction with the October conference of the American Institute of Planners in Washington, D.C.

THE PRESIDENT'S CORNER

PEO hasn't yet turned the corner. It is not yet the organization we are working to have it become. We are still virtually unknown; our bids to speak at the Ribicoff hearings have not yet been answered affirmatively. Our positions on many issues have not been formulated, nor do we have a paid staff.

But the horizon never looked brighter. Our first annual conference was a great success. The numbers of participants and the heavy turnout of students demonstrated our growing appeal. At the conference, a new shape for planning was articulated, based on local control of the planning process. Our resolutions were militant and far-reaching, providing us with the core of our organizational position.

We did take a nap for several months after the conference, but we are moving forward once again. The rest may have done us some good, because the mood around the Steering and Policy Committees is one of new confidence in and dedication to the organization.

On April 16, 1967, at a joint meeting of the Continuations, Policy and Steering Committees, a number of resolutions were adopted for final voting by the Policy Committee (a majority not being in attendance). It was decided to vigorously confront the AIP during its 50th Anniversary conference in Washington, D.C. and an AIP/PEO Committee was formed to pursue this objective.

On governmental policies, we adopted several basic positions. First, we decided to ask for a reduction in the federal budget for defense and an increase in the budget for cities and the poor both at home and abroad. Secondly, we supported in principle the Freedom Budget. Fourth, we called on HUD to eliminate discriminatory practices and fully implement anti-discrimination throughout the agency.

In the Steering Committee, we have appointed David Stoloff as volunteer National Coordinating Secretary. He is developing fund-raising programs, new ideas for action programs which might be funded, and will coordinate activities on the AIP/PEO front.

The Policy Committee will soon meet again to take up advocacy planning and Demonstration Cities resolutions of the first annual conference. We are heartened by the events of the last few months, and look forward to increased participation by our members. Walter Thabit

OPEN HOUSING AND MODEL CITIES

Thanks to Washington Post reporter William Chapman, worried city officials throughout the country learned on March 16th that HUD will remain passive on integration in Model Cities. Chapman unearthed HUD's views that it:

*Will not require open occupancy ordinances to qualify for Model Cities funds;
*Does not think that Model City laws permit an "aggressive" policy of desegration;
*Intends to rely on volunteers to produce housing in white neighborhoods for Negroes displaced by Model City clearance; and *Hopes improved neighborhoods will attract both races.

Model Cities Administrator Walter G. Farr told Chapman, "We are not telling the mayors what they have to do. The heart of this program is that they--the local people--have got to do their own planning." Subscribing to the argument advanced by Cloward and Piven in their New Republic article, Farr announced, "Our position is that improving the quality of the neighborhood is more important than dispersal."

The following day H. Ralph Taylor, HUD assistant Secretary for Model Cities, told members of the Federal Bar Association (in what the New York Times described as a "sharply worded speech") that discrimination in either employment or housing would not be "tolerated."

Taylor re-emphasized Farr's point that fair housing laws would not be required of cities applying for Model Cities funds. Rather he emphasized that job priorities must go to neighborhood residents in projects funded by Model Cities.

For families displaced, he asserted, relocation housing must be availalbe on a non-discrimination basis.

Some observers have not been reassured by these statements. The National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH) began its own investigation to see what cities themselves were planning under the new program. It called a regional conference in New York City April 13-14 on "Model Cities: Promise or Threat."

Discussion centered around the part of Model Cities applications dealing with "housing choice." Philadelphia was cited as a typical example of city proposals. It contained a long section about the injustices of discrimination, yet its only affirmative policy was to call on volunteer groups to help open white neighborhoods for Negro occupancy.

The rhetoric of the New York City proposal also avoided the issue. In its proposal to HUD the City took an evolutionary view as represented by the statement that, "Traditionally, New York has been a receiving city for the poor--first from Europe, now from the rural South and Puerto Rico. There have always been groups at the bottom of the ladder striving to get ahead, then moving out to better neighborhoods as they succeed."

As observers of the NCDH conference noted, both Philadelphia and New York have adopted a distant view of municipal responsibility for open housing, a view corresponding to Farr's statements.

His position that ghetto improvement is the first order of concern, observers not, ignores deeper problems of racial bias and discrimination that produced the ghetto. "Isn't Model Cities going to be like sergregated public housing in the past?" one critic asked.

Several issues for planners arise out of Farr's statements and the applications submitted by Philadelphia and New York. One is the Philadelphia contention that professional responsibilities for an integrated society can or should be assigned to volunteers. Few other planning functions are given up with such celerity.

New York's application inadvertently points to the troubling fact that midle-class Negro families seeking good housing run into a wall of discrimination in white sections.

And Farr's guidelines highlight a basic fact of ghetto life, namely that poor Negro families who may never "succeed" are to be given no help if they strive to move to a non-ghetto, low-income area.

Farr's contention that rebuilding is more important than dispersal, a question that PEO members are heatedly debating, seems responsive to political realities. Cloward and Piven contended that integration is a red flag in the face of Congress that will halt housing legislation, a position the Johnson Administration seems to have adopted.

Yet, even this approach was insufficient to get House approval for the rent supplement and the Model Cities budgets requested by the Administration. Rent supplements, which have some potential for fostering open housing, were scrapped by a coalition of Southern Democrats and conservative Republicans. This program was apparently sacrificed by Administration leaders to the ghetto-rebuilding Model Cities bill, which itself was slashed from the $400 million Administration request to $150 million.

NEW YORK CHAPTER REPORTS TO URBAN LEAGUE ON OPEN HOUSING

Findings and recommendations of PEO consultants to the New York Urban League's Operation Open City were published in April. Eugene S. Callender, Executive Director of the League, presented the report titled, "Planning for Open City" to Housing and Development Administrator Jason R. Nathan, who appeared on behalf of Mayor John Lindsay.

Nathan's attention was directed particularly to the report's findings dealing with public agencies and open housing which emphasized the City's passive policies in this area.

Among the findings was that the City waits for Negroes to initiate discrimination complaints even in projects heavily subsidized by tax abatement and cheap mortgage money. "If [public agencies] are justified in establishing architectural and planning restrictions because they correspond to public policies over density or open space, why are they not justified in requiring some minimal percentage of occupancy to be non-white?" the report asked. At another point the report asserted that "the indifferent attitude of [City] agencies toward Negro occupancy of these projects is little short of amazing."

The report took the Departments of Welfare and Relocation to task for what it termed "convenient ignorance" of the race of clients. "On the misguided notion that notation of race on official records causes discrimination, the Relocation Department, like the Welfare Department, has no idea of the impact it has on the Negro population," the report said.

The effect, according to the authors, was "selective placements, sending white, Negro or welfare clients to particular landlords, depending on a prior understanding of whom the landlords will accept."

Another matter the report found damaging to Negroes' chances for living in integrated housing was the discrimination often inherent in apartment house "waiting lists". "In reality," the report asserted, "they are a convenience to management, not to home-seekers. To Negro prospects they are a subtle but effective form of discrimination."

On other subjects the report noted that separation of suburban whites and central city Negroes is being rigidly maintained and therefore, open housing programs "must be conducted on a regional scale."

Of particular interest was the report's finding that 27 percent of the placements reported by the Open City offices were achieved only after a complaint had been filed with City or State Human Relations Commissions.

The report did not accept the general belief that only middle- and upper-income Negroes can make the move from the ghetto. It found that "57 percent of recent registrants and 44 percent of recent placements have family incomes under $6,000 per year."

The report identified "target neighborhoods" with low or nonexistent Negro populations and inexpensive housing as places in which Operation Open City should concentrate placing families.

Since publication, the New York Chapter has continued to provide assistance to Open City in implementing the report's recommendations. This has included shaping a plan for placing families in the "target neighborhoods" and seeking changes in City policies impinging on open housing opportunities.

The PEO report was developed by Thomas Gale and Robert Dennis and a committee of New York Chapter members: Harry Schwartz, Bob Bogen, Peter Abeles, Walter Thabit and Hall Winslow.

PEO members may obtain free copies of the report by writing to the New York Chapter at 289 Seventh Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10001. Non-members may purchase copies for $1.00 each from Operation Open City, 217 West 125 Street, New York, N.Y. 10027.

PEO COMMITTEE ON AIP CONFERENCE

National Coordinating Secretary David Stoloff will coordinate the efforts of a committee to prepare proposals for and direct the program PEO will offer during the AIP's 50th Anniversary Conference in October. All members wishing to participate in this important work should contact him at the national office.

NEW YORK PEO ENTERS RENT CONTROL FIGHT

An Ad Hoc Committee on Rent Control formed by members of the New York Chapter prepared an analysis, "A Crisis in Rent Control", plus supplementary documentation urging New York City Council to retain and strengthen the City's 24-year-old program.

The material, which was sent to 300 civic, tenant and anti-poverty groups, was the only generally available analysis of the data on which the City's rent control legislation is based. As such, it was quoted in the press and radio and PEO members spoke on the rent control issue before several organizations.

Walter Thabit, chairing the Committee, presented at a Council hearing in March a 4-point program to preserve rent control and eliminate inequities inherent in current practices. One of them is the "15 percent voluntary increase" in rent which a landlord is allowed every two years if there is a change in occupants. Where turnover has been high, allowable rents have become excessive.

The PEO brief showed that of the City's 1.2 million low-rent units under rent control in 1960, one-third had disappeared by 1965 either through demolition, decontrol or rent increases. It also cited the 1965 Vacancy Survey of the U.S. Census Bureau to show that rents are increasing faster than income.

PEO advanced a solution before City Council which would eliminate the 15 percent "voluntary" increases to be replaced by more systematic cost-of-living increases, and it urged the City Administration to actually study the operating costs of buildings to gain a better factual basis for its rent control regulations.

Most emphatically, in face of landlord hostility, PEO argued for the retention of rent control to protect low and middle income families in the tight New York City housing market.

AIP COMMITTEE ON MINORITIES

PEO member Robert Heifetz has been named chairman of an AIP committee to study the impact of public planning on minorities. Any PEO member, belonging to the AIP, who is interested in serving on the committee is urged to write to Robert Heifetz, Department of Architecture, Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.

RADICALS IN THE PROFESSIONS

A conference on "Radicals in the Professions" will be held in Ann Arbor, Michigan, July 14-16. It will bring together students, professionals and others in the fields of education, planning, social work, medicine, law, journalism and the ministry to discuss problems and issues common to radicals in these professions. For more information, write to the Radical Education Project, 510 E. William St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

DUES DELINQUENCY

Despite numerous notices, several dozen early supporters of PEO have not paid any dues over the last three years. These members will be dropped from the mailing list and membership roll if delinquent dues for at least one year ($10) are not paid by July 1. No additional notices will be sent.

PLANNERS FOR BLACK LIBERATION

For you, PLANNERS FOR EQUAL OPPORTUNITY, to continue to exist in terms of your premise "relating yourselves to the Black struggle"--Now what does that mean? Equal opportunity for whom to do what? Equal opportuniry for the Black and Puerto Rican urban masses to sit down at a table with the white planning power structure with one card in their hands, while the planners hold 51 cards, all trumps?

Equal opportunity for a powerless Black and Puerto Rican mass to continue to be used in a vicious urban chess game? or maybe/..

Equal opportunity for young white planners to come into our community and further befuddle, confuse, and cloud the real issues confronting us (landless, powerless, exploited, dictated to, et cetera).

Equal opportunity for young white planners to become "Doxiaduses", "Ed Sogues", "Albert Mayars", et al, at the expense of experimenting with Black people?

Equal opportunity for young white planners and white planning schools to be the first in line to rack up huge chunks of money (the hush money that Sam is now willing to pay in order to keep his shit together) that is supposed to be speaking to the plight of the Black community?

The poiht here is just what the hell do you mean by "Equal Opportunity"? That is not the question with which the Black people are being confronted. Our problems, as we have identified them, are essentially Urban Domestic Colonialism and Rural Feudalism. By now it should be obvious, even to the most casual observer, that Colonialism can be dealt with in only one way: through liberation... Black Liberation! Of course, by definition will, by definition, be brought about by Black people. That is not to say that there is not a supporting role for idealistic or guilt stricken young whites; but as in all liberation movements, those striving for liberation must lead!

All that is to say that either your title must be something reflecting "Planers for Black Liberation", or "Planners for the Elimination of White Domestic Colonialism and Urban Feudalism", or else we must label you, in the eyes of Black people, as anti-Black, anti-Black Liberation, anti-Black revolution, and "Front Men for the Real Front Men! AIP, AIA, ACPO, NAABO, et cetera....one or the other.

Young Idealistic arrogant whites ran a game on us down in the rural south: it won't happen again to us in the urban north.

As we have said, either you will be one thing or the nother. If you choose the former, then we welcome your support, and will be very interested in proceeding to discuss the issue of leadership reform in this organisation: Black Leadership.. architects, planners, lawyers, economists, sociologists, urban technicians, etc/ As Mrs. Piven has stated, "In the city, our time has come as a people. And we ain't blowing it!"

Now, having dealt with the name and new theme (Urban Crisis Equals NonWhite Planning Approaches and NonLand Reform), let us proceed to what the specific purpose of this conference must be:

You state that "this conference has been called to assist urban affairs professionals to seize the planning opportunity facing our cities..." but this conference has to be "to assist Black people and Black planners to seize control of the planning process, planning mechanisms, planning theories which have heretofore rendered them politically, economically, and culturally indistinguishable from the Bantusans of South Africa"/ You say that this is "a national organisation of city planners and urban affairs specialists committed to the principle that the facilities and opportunities of this society should be made available to all citizens through positive public policy and actions". But this conference must begin to talk about "a national organisation of people with Black leadership and direction, including archets, planners, lawyers, economists, sociologists, students, etc., committed to the idea that public policy and public action must be geared to the immediate evolution of the power of self determination, self development, and self definition for Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Mexicans, Indians, and other powerless colonialised nonwhites in America, so that they can then decide what the nature of their relationship to the broader American society is to be. You go on to state that "Its members seek to apply their energy and skills to the investigation, exposure, and correction of programs which are discriminating or which fail to meet the needs oftthe urban crisis." Fine!! But for those white members who wish to remain in the organisation as we have redefined it,do that from within the organisations you already work for, or have recently left: AIP, AIA, ACBO, Social Planning Establishment, etc. In other words, civilise, reform, and spy on your own people, your own communities, your own white professional organisations. Don't think for one minute that it has escaped us that it has been precisely those organisations within which you are inextricably implicated that has put us in the position we are in today. Remember, we have all of the results before our eyes as to what you have been doing. Now, let's talk about what we are going to do.

CONCERNING THE WORKSHOP AND THEIR FOCUS

I - Revolution in Planning Education

Let's rename that "Revolution in Environmentalist Education", which then allows us to shift the emphasis back to Architectural education, but include planners, economists, etc. Since your whole insidious premise rests upon the myth that Black people do not possess within their ranks the formally trained planners, etc. needed to speak to the urban crisis, we move immediately to redefine the whole concept of "qualified planner".

It has also not escaped us that you and your cocalled qualified planners are no more than brainwashed front men for the urban real estate market and interests now wiping out nonwhite people and nonwhite cultures. When we destroy that whole planner syndrome, we then open up for discussion the seven Black schools which have fully developed architectural and/or planning programs, not to mention those Black schools who could begin to institute such programs. That will be the primary source of Black advocates for Black communities. We can also talk about the Black architects and Black archectural graduates now drawing stair details in white downtown offices, but who should be in the Black community aiding the liberation struggle. We can talk about Black architects now practicing off of anti-Black crumbs and back porches as payment for their anti-revolutionary posture. We can also talk about proposals for strengthening and revising the curriculum of those aforementioned Black schools toward their students becoming environmentalists, so that they become an unlimited supply for the liberation of, and the maintenance of that liberation, of nonwhite urban and rural people in America. That unlimited supply of leadership can begin to talk about a totally new architecture and environment based upon values and culture, as opposed to the present gods you worship, whatever they might be. Then we can talk about "recruitment" from white schools at the faculty level in the terms of the community organisers, community poor people, etc.

ADVOCACY IN MODEL CITIES (II)

You talk here, among other things, about the "problems of white planners in Black communities". (At least you do admit there is such a thing as a Black community!) That we instead talk about the role which Black communities and Black people will define for white planners. That definition essentially will be that of spies and catalysts inside the white planning establishment---to break their grip on Black necks (i.e., the role will be that of leakers of information at an early stage of plans or suspicions of plans that the establishment has for Black people, which essentially, again, will be that of statistic and survey compilers of white planning establishments instead of Black people, which ultimately will lead to the moral, financial, and even live body support for Black people and Black environmentalists in their liberation struggle.

III - HIGHWAYS VERSUS THE POOR

First, let's subtitle that with the words of Sam Abdullah Abbot "White Men's Roads Through Black Men's Bedrooms". Now we can proceed to talk about the underlying cause of those highways: convenient access of white urban colonial administrators into the areas which they have fled because of encroaching Blackness, yet still maintain their political, economic, and military control.

City Blacks and Puerto Ricans don't need highways: they are strictly for the white sub urbanites. If whites don't want to live in cities heavily populated by and controlled by nonwhites, then they shouldn't work in those cities. Besides, hasn't it always been a planning axiom that the optimum situation is to work close to your abode? Then let sub-urban whites work in their suburbs, in those same jobs they're always telling us Blacks that freeways, if built, can take us to. We aren't interested. Let whites take them, and let us have the city jobs you now occupy near our abodes.

IV - HOUSING AND MET OPOLITAN DEVELOPMENT

You liberal whites deal with the metropolitan and national development. Yes, by all means fight, through your own communities and your own organisations, for our rights to metropolitan alternatives should we so desire to take them. Meanwhile, we will deal with the housing questions, housing concepts in our communities.

V - ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF POOR COMMUNITIES

It has not escaped us that economic development these days in our communities usually means additional businesses and services above and beyond and oftentimes different from the existing white businesses. The strange illogical twists here are that those new businesses are either established white corporations in search of new profits or Black "rugged individualists" entrepreneurs set up by SBA. The last thing in hell Black people need is to have their white sub-urban exploiters augmented by a ditional Black sub-urbanite exploiters. We want, instead, to talk about Black peoples' cooperatives to replace present forms of community commerce. No business, Black or white, can be allowed to come into Black communities unless it immediately and significantly effects the economy of that total Community.

VI - ADVOCACY AND COMMUNITY CONTROL OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

First of all, in those cities where we are an impending or actual majority, we want to talk about how we can thwart decentralisation of power. It is only in those cities which we have no hope of achieving a majority that we wish to talk about "decentralisation" of power We aren't waiting around for the evolution of "long range strategies".

VII - NATIONAL PROGRAM TO ELIMINATE POVERTY

Assist white people in the elimination of Poverty; Let us get on with the question s which confront us: Black Liberation and the elimination of white domestic colonialism and rural feudalism!

VIII - COMMON STRAGETY FOR ADVOCATE PROFESSIONS

Y'all are really hung up on this "Equal Opportunity" bag, aren't you! Just remember: all of the professions you mention in your programs either advocate total liberation of Black, Puerto Rican, Indian, and Mexican communities and people, or they advocate devious, sophisticated pacification and disperaal. It's either one or the other; take your choice.

The question of an interracial society shall be resolved by those liberated people, no liberals. Besides, we're quite satisfied with the work that the NAACP, the ACLU, the Urban League, and the Supreme Court are doing insofar as our right to "integrate" are concerned. Meanwhile, let us today resolve to get on with the real issues at hand.

IX - VIET NAM WAR AND AID TO CITIES

It should be hardly necessary for us to waste time and rhetoric on the Nam other than to express our best wishes to the people of Viet Nam in their struggles to complete the elimination of the white race as an influence in South East Asia.

X - ORGANISING LOCAL CHAPTER ACTION

Fine! Only this must be done in terms of our stated priority of Black control and Black Leadership. No stones will be unturned with respect to Black students, Black schools Black organisers, Black professionals in the following areas:

Planners for Equal Opportunity

Vol. 2 No. 1 Spring 1968

ROUND-UP OF PEO WASHINGTON CONFERENCE

The week of October 1, 1967 witnessed the first direct confrontation between PEO and American Institute of Planners. While the AIP was celebrating its Fiftieth Anniversary convention at the Shoreham Hotel with a look into the next fifty years, PEO called a conference on the theme "Planning: Black and White: Today" to speak out on the pressing issues of discrimination, the redistribution of economic and political power and the impact of the war in Vietnam.

The intention of the meeting was to discuss these issues and develop strategies that would enable planners to play an active role in assisting minorities and the poor, and understanding the interrelationships of these issues with larger questions of national direction and policy. Secondly, it was hoped that these concerns would ultimately be brought to the governing board of AIP so that the largest group in the planning profession might be persuaded to take a stand on them.

The most notable success in reaching AIP came when the resolutions from the PEO plenary session were presented to the AIP at its general assembly. Bayard Rustin, of the A. Phillip Randolph Institute, in sympathy with PEO's goals, relinquished part of his scheduled speaking time for the presentation by Irving Rubin. The resolutions drew considerable interest from the AIP membership assembly, and at the subsequent Board of Governors meeting they were referred to the appropriate AIP committees for study and reporting.

Workshops Held

The first day of the PEO conference consisted of a series of workshops. In the first, "The Community as Client," Robert Jackson of the Washington Planning and Housing Association, Mrs. Sherry Arnstein, of the HUD Model Cities staff and Robert Goodman, from the architectural faculty at MIT considered such issues as achieving effective citizen participation, the planner's role as both advocate and technician and pluralistic planning and plural plans.

In "Planning for Racial Equality" James O. Gibson of the Potomac Institute, Neil Gold, and Harry Schwartz of PEO and Martin Sloane from the Civil Rights Commission, discussed housing and economic development and implications for integration and separatism. The essence of social planning, its relationship to traditional planning efforts and current Federally funded programs which attempt to mesh the two, were examined by Janet Reiner, of PEO, Arnold Katz, from HEW, and Joyce Whitley, of the Model Cities Program.

Michael Mazer, of the OEO Housing Programs, chaired a workshop on "Housing the Poor' with Cushing Dolbeare, Managing Director of the Philadelphia Housing Association and William Grigsby, of the University of Pennsylvania. Mazer offered five suggestions for low income housing policy: subsidies to families through interest rates, write-down and tax incentives; private involvement in housing; increased home ownership and control by the poor; surrogate ownership as in tenant councils and cooperatives and government reforms such as the transfer of 221 (d) (3) housing from FHA to HUD. Mrs. Dolbeare described an HAA proposal that would give all poor families a subsidy equal to the difference between 20 percent of their income and the local rate for standard housing. The estimated annual cost, she said, would be between $2 billion and $9 billion.

Grigsby, in calling poverty a political rather than planning dilemma, named political compromise and timidity as barriers to sound Federal programs. In addition, he noted our inability to see the value of housing in solving social ills, and the low political priority accorded the poor in Congress. The audience, in response, divided between who demanded structural revisions of the dominant "systems" and those who proposed that groups such as

THE MYTHS OF THE NEW TOWN

Herbert J. Gans
Professor of Sociology
Columbia University

Vice President Agnew, like many planners and other Americans, believes in what I would call the two myths of the new town:

(1) that a new town just by being new can somehow solve problems not dealt with by older settlements.

(2) that it is possible to innovate more spectacularly in new towns than in old towns.

Needless to say, neither myth is realistic. A new town is nothing more than what its name implies, a town that is new, and such a town can be bad as well as good. Moreover, new towns do not develop in a vacuum; as I pointed out in The Levittowners, the people who finance, plan, build and populate them are members of their society and work within the cultural, financial and other limits of that society.

For example, there is no reason to believe that American homebuyers will mix more freely with neighbors of lower status and different skin color in a new town than in the city or the suburbs. Also, there is no reason to believe that industries will change the basis on which they make location decisions, and will come to a new town just because it is new.

This is why almost all American new towns built so far are either one-industry quasi-company towns, or bedroom communities, but with a higher level of community facilities than the average suburb. (cont. on page two)

NEW COMMUNITIES AND THE GHETTO

Britton Harris
Professor of City and Regional Planning
University of Pennsylvania

The question of whether the cities will contain black communities, whether the suburbs will contain black communities, or whether there will be a great deal more integration than at present is a political and cultural issue which I will not presume to judge. I would guess, however, that the ultimate solutions may be quite different from those suggested by people's current rigid postures. There are, however, a couple of other matters with regard to the future expansion of our urban living space which deserve brief discussion.

in this issue two prominent planner-educator-writers give us their thoughts on a current planning puzzle

A relatively minor but not trivial issue revolves around how we are going to go about providing adequate housing for the lowest income groups. We have essentially three courses of action open to us.

First, we can use various means, including subsidies such as negative income tax, to increase incomes, and let the recipients spend the money according to their own best judgment. This will mean that they will not always choose to purchase adequate housing.

Second, we can provide subsidies which are earmarked for various purposes such as medical care, food supplements, and housing.

Third, we can provide public or semi-public housing with a built-in subsidy allocated on the basis of tenant qualifications.

There are various compromises and mixtures between these plans, and I am not at all sure that the average planner has thought through the implications of the various alternatives. The first two alternatives provide much greater freedom as to the improvement, expansion, or dissolution of the ghetto,

Consequently, it is irrational to discuss new towns without deciding what kind of a new town is being considered. A higher quality bedroom suburb is a plus, but it does not solve any of the basic problems of American cities. A new town planned according to the Ebenezer Howard vision is also a plus, particularly for people who want a shorter journey to work, but it also does not solve any basic problems. A black new town is only another form of ghetto, unless it becomes a voluntary community for black militants who want to segregate themselves. A new town for the poor strikes me as an economic ghetto even if it could provide jobs and other sources of income not available in the city, which it cannot.

If the federal government were willing and able to provide job opportunities for the poor and housing they can afford, as well as incentives that would attract working class and middle class people -- and workplaces -- to a new town with poor people, I would be in favor of such a new town. But if such political and economic innovation is feasible for a new town, it should also be feasible for cities and suburbs. And unless it were possible to build hundreds of such new towns, the basic problems of the cities would still remain.

In short, I have little faith in the new town as a solution. I think we planners should divest ourselves of the myths of the new town, and deal directly with the major issues of American society, which are basically national in character, and are roughly similar in cities, suburbs and new towns. ■ and do not impose any decision in advance.

The second issue of interest is the possible size, character, and organization of new communities. If we do nothing in this sphere, the new urban housing stock will be built in the typical fashion of suburban sprawl. Our existing metropolises will get bigger, more polluted, and less amenable. Even if the ghetto decentralizes, living conditions will not be ideal. On the other hand, small new communities will not solve the problem and will lock their populations into isolated situations with inadequate facilities and opportunities. A broad range of opportunities is particularly important for the less skilled portion of the population.

Finally, new communities will not be able to accommodate the lower-income portion of the population in new housing without special solutions to the housing problem. I am not terribly hopeful that the large mobilization of forces, both political and economic, which will be necessary to create large new communities is feasible within the immediate future. Certainly the prospects of achieving these objectives under a Republican administration and largely with private enterprise means are very slim. ■

NEW TOWNS - THE OPTIMIST

Edward J. Logue, New York State Urban Development Corporation boss, included the following prospectus for his agency in his speech at NAHRO's 1968 Workshops in Community Development:

With UDC, we expect to be in the new town business in New York state on a major scale. Although we want to do business in the backyard I know best--the urban slum--it wouldn't bother me at all if we spent every dime that we have building new towns.

In urban renewal, we have been very slow about new towns. Our mayors--our bosses--have actually opposed federal legislation for new towns ... we have to face directly, in every way we can, the proposition that until this nation decides that low-income black people can have a place to live that they can afford, a place to send their children to school, outside Cleveland, outside Boston, we are just kidding ourselves.

It can be done, if we all try. Around our central cities is vacant land. If we have the guts to go for it, and our mayors have the guts to understand and to say that they are incapable of solving this problem by themselves, we may solve this problem in a way that we can all be proud of.

PITTSBURGH "HILL" FIGHTING

By Clifford Ham
PEO Policy Committee
Professor of Planning
University of Pittsburgh

In January, the Pittsburgh Model Cities program ran into a snag. After several months of well-conceived planning with Area Planning Teams, the Model Cities staff submitted tentative plans to the City Planning Dept. for approval. All plans for housing and neighborhood improvement in the Lower Hill, in Pittsburgh's Negro ghetto, were vetoed.

Citizens led by Tim Stevens requested a public hearing before the City Council. At this hearing, January 28, twenty-two representatives of black and white organizations - several from white communities - protested plan changes and demanded low and moderate income housing in the Hill district. At issue also was the right of citizens to have their plans seriously considered and carried out by the City. Did the Planning Department have the right, without consultation, to strike down plans by the citizens?

The Model Cities staff was conspicuously absent from the hearing. Only one professional staff member provided testimony. Roland Hayes, the assistant director of Model Cities in the Lower Hill, challenged the Director of City Planning, stating that no disagreements were found among the residents of the area but between the residents and the CPD. Some concessions were made by the CPD as a result of the hearing, including certification of the area for urban renewal.

PEO members are to join with the Hill residents on Feb. 14 and 15 to discuss all plans. Pitt students are taking a hand in mobilizing support for the citizens.

Bus Changes

Bus fares were raised in Pittsburgh on January 1. The basic fare is now 35¢ with an additional 5¢ for a transfer. Downtown area fares were raised to 25¢, but this special zone does not include the Hill District where a large proportion of Pittsburgh's low income Black population lives.

Virtually no public protest was noticeable although service to the Hill district is poor, busses are overcrowded, and residents find it necessary to supplement PAT public transport with illegal jitney service.

PAT made some concessions to the Hill district at the time of the fare raise. Improvements in service were promised to citizens of the Hill, mainly through bus re-routings rather than additional busses or a CBD zone expansion to reduce the impact of the fare increase.

ADVOCACY & PLURALIST PLANNING

Heard and reported (by Bob Bogen) at the National Conference on Advocacy and Pluralistic Planning, Jan. 10 & 11, Brotherhood-in-Action, NYC, sponsored by Hunter College and the National Institute of Health:--

Paul Davidoff (Hunter College) assigned credit for the current pluralistic trend to the Interstate Highway program and the Urban Renewal bulldozers. He also identified two poverties -- material poverty in the ghettoes and moral poverty in white middle class racist America. He suggested that a portion, perhaps one-tenth, of various agency and project planning funds to be allotted to communities affected so that they could identify and advocate their interests.

Matthew Dumont (National Institute of Health) asserted that for the first time in our history, social change is necessary for survival. The "new professionalism" is ready to get its hands dirty in politics, willing to risk change; there is no fail-safe. We must find a balance between the imperative of human need and the imperialism of bureaucracy.

Paul Cobb (Model Cities Citizens Committee, West Oakland): I could say, "we always farm the nigger problem out to the Jews" -- we got to make all that into what they call a coalition.

Samuel Dardick (consultant, St. Louis Model Cities): Community corporations must deal directly with city operating agencies, not through a central Model Cities bureaucracy.

Dennis Blackett (Foundation for Housing Innovation, Boston): The problem, especially in the Nixon era, is to propose broad positive programs to rebuild, not just react to official project atrocities as a crisis reponse. We should build a comprehensive long-term program through mobilization of community understanding and pressure through more effective political organization.

PEO is grateful to students of Homeroom 306, Fifth Grade, P. S. 16, Jersey City, for providing drawings for this issue.

= PEO has mounted a drive to influence policies of the American Institute of Planners through AIP elections. As a step in this effort, the Committee on AIP Elections chaired by David Stoloff has drafted a platform. Candidates seeking or accepting PEO endorsement would be pledged to promulgate the points in the platform. This draft has been circulated to PEO members for comment.

Radical expansion of membership, a strong advocacy position, a national planning lobby, a minority recruiting effort, a tightened ethics code, changes in planning education, and a stand for peace are the objectives included in the draft.

This PEO action coincides with similar membership reviews in AIP, where Task Force recommendations are being circulated for comment by April 1, pursuant to Board of Governors Action at the ASPO Conference in April.

= Plans for PEO's Third Annual Conference are being formulated, but it's too soon for announcements of place and time. Watch for special announcements in your mailbox in the coming weeks.

= For the ASPO Conference in Cincinnati, April 20-24, PEO is considering running a booth for jobs in advocacy planning, where both prospective employers and employees could register. Watch for our arrangements at the conference.

= The Nominating Committee is preparing a slate for the annual PEO elections, and members will be receiving ballots soon.

= National Coordinator David Stoloff has agreed to assume responsibility for stimulating, encouraging, and maintaining liaison with PEO Chapters in various cities.

= Yale Rabin has been asked to prepare a draft of a PEO policy statement on transportation, to include not only findings of the 2nd Conference workshop but to handle public hearings, alternative forms of transportation, and subsidy of fares (free transit).

= PEO National Coordinator Stoloff, along with Clarence Funnye and Reginald Griffith, attended a December 6-7 meeting of the Task Force on AIP Program and Budget. Convened by AIP President Voorhees, the meeting was intended to bring a sense of direction of the Institute and relate AIP spending to its goals. (AIP distributed the recommendations to its members in January.) Coordinator Stoloff reports that AIP cannot go much beyond the recommendations under its current structure and mandate. If AIP were really to implement the goals enunciated by the Task Force, it would need to radically expand membership and move to politicize the profession.

PEO AND GOVERNMENT RELATIONS

Steering Committeeman Felix Obinani attended the fifth AIP Biennial Government Relations and Planning Policy Conference, January 23-26 at Hotel Americana in Washington, D. C. PEO had been invited specifically to respond to a paper by Marshall Kaplan, one of eight commissioned papers. Obinani, in his comment, was able to point out that in calling for coordination of federal programs at various levels, Kaplan and other speakers had neglected to go beyond the mere value of efficiency to the more critical levels of how and where and when will efficiency lead to social change. He warned against regionalization of Federal programs or other decentralization schemes that might tend to further alienate deprived communities. He advised, instead, actions to reinforce community institutions that could in turn act as coordinating forces.

= An Administrative Committee to handle routine matters and relieve the Steering Committee agenda is now in operation.

= The PEO Foundation is now incorporated and application for tax-exempt status is proceeding. The Foundation is intended as a vehicle for handling money under the tax-exempt aegis, leaving PEO itself able to carry out possible lobbying and other political activity.

PEO CHANGES ADDRESS

17 Murray Street, New York City 10007 is the new address for the National PEO office. Membership matters, Equalop Newsletter subscriptions, and publications are handled there.

289 Seventh Avenue, New York City 10001 continues as the address of the New York Metropolitan Chapter, Harry Schwartz, Chairman. Direct communications to Hall Winslow, Equalop Editor, may also be sent to 289 Seventh Avenue.

PEO MEMBER CRITS HOLYOKE PLANS

Invited by Urban Ministry Inc. and Community and Regional Opportunity Program of Holyoke, Mass., PEO Member Harry Schwartz last summer made a quick exploration of Holyoke and reviewed its master plan, its Model Cities application, and the Riverview Urban Renewal Project. His report was summarized in the Transcript-Telegram in late August, and three days later, Planning Director Douglas Guyett replied to Schwartz' criticisms.

These criticisms underlined the need for changing the master plan, for ensuring that Model Cities planning and redevelopment programs reflect closely the desires of the inhabitants, and for training anti-poverty community groups in the details of plan-making and plan approval. He advised the community groups that a proved lack of compliance with federal requirements can help communities block unwanted projects.

In his response, the planning director stressed that the master plan was regarded mainly as a guide and indicated that changes could be discussed. But to Schwartz's point about a complete lack of relocation thinking in the project plans, no convincing rebuttal was made.

This "instant advocacy" experience continues to have impact on the planning climate of Holyoke. Without doubt, it furnished community groups real ammunition in their drive for recognition by planning authorities.

PUBLIC HEARINGS ON HIGHWAY PLANS

On the occasion of the December hearings in Washington on a two-stage hearing system proposed by the Federal Highway Administrator, the PEO President sent the following letter to be read into the transcript:

Planners for Equal Opportunity, with 400 members in urban planning, architecture and related professions dealing with urban problems, is in accord with the proposed regulations for planning interstate highways as published in Federal Register, Oct. 23, 1968. Highway planning and construction is one area that prompted the PEO 1968 Policy Statement to declare that many public policies and programs, and most planning, ignore poor and minority needs-- if they don't simply ride roughshod over them. Yale Rabin has noted in Guidelines for Citizen Participation: "Dislocating minority tenants, often poor, to facilitate construction of a highway which is far more apt to be used by whites, coupled with lack of suitable attention to the possibilities of mass transit, is highly questionable public action."

The proposed regulations take substantial steps towards mitigating one aspect of this inequity-- that such action has been done without involved communities being properly consulted. The two public hearings suggested - one before a route is chosen - and the appeal feature to the Secretary of Transportation, incorporate sound principles.

Results: As released by the Administrator in late January, the revised system was downgraded from regulation to policy and procedure memo (PPM), with assurances that they would be equally binding. Also, the proposed system of open appeal to the Administrator was omitted, with the Administration promising that this would be taken up in another PPM.

AIP TASK FORCE MEMBERSHIP RECOMMENDATIONS

David Stoloff, National PEO Coordinator

The AIP Task Force membership recommendations now being circulated to AIPers represent a definite step toward making membership easier. (The alternate recommendations of the National Membership Standards Committee being circulated simultaneously are slightly less liberal, but not significantly so.) If the Task Force proposals are finally adopted, all current provisional and student members would be given the vote (excpet on constitutional issues) and immediate voting membership would become open to all those with college degrees of any sort now holding planning jobs - or after four years experience to those without college degrees. Unhappily, the Task Force retained the exam for membership and did not recommend anything to encourage non-"planner" urban professionals to join AIP. In spite of these shortcomings, the proposals are a beginning and should be supported by those in PEO who are AIP members. Let Alan Voorhees or Bob Williams know how you feel before the Board of Governors meets in mid-April.

CHICAGO WOODLAWN REPORT

On last December 4, the Chicago Chapter, American Institute of Planners, invited Robert Gordon to speak on his experiences in advocacy planning. Gordon is community planner for the Kenwood-Oakland Community Organization on loan from the Jewish Council on Urban Affairs. Following is the core of his speech:

With the creation of new community centers of power, there is again raised the old conflict between city- or metro-wide interests and local community interests. In the past, planners have argued that these conflicts are impossible to resolve without a centralized planning agency to make these kinds of decisions.

This is only half-true. Without community power, this is simply the ideological rationale for putting power into the hands of the civic elite. In fact, decentralized power centers with great autonomy exist throughout the country, in most suburbs. They exist successfully enough so that as a whole they are strong enough to be parasitic on the city. For instance, suburbanites use expressways through the city, polluting city air, to reach the central business district, from which they derive large private incomes.

Yet suburbanites do not support the city school system. They can therefore afford two and three times as much money per student in their essentially private school system. And with large lot single-family zoning, they can keep poor people out.

In other words, we need a distinction between what power is legitimately centralized and what can be legitimately decentralized, which would apply to suburbs and city communities alike, and a combination of the two authorities. This is not likely to be easy. Ocean Hill-Brownsville in Brooklyn is one example of this conflict.

There have, however, been some great strides made along these lines in Chicago. A prime example is The Woodlawn Organization Model Cities Plan. TWO is attempting to gain community control over its own health services, school system, welfare system, housing and businesses, in order to make them more responsible to the residents. This is the structure for the physical plan. Without this structure, there is no reason for people to believe that they will benefit from any planning, and thus no real citizen participation. People would merely be dreaming if plans weren't related to actual control and ownership.

In Kenwood-Oakland, we're attempting to set up this kind of decentralized structure. Individual tenant unions organize to solve problems in their own buildings. Tenant unions on a given block, or block strip, will then be formed into block councils, to determine plans for their own block. These would include which buildings should be torn down, if any, what should be placed on vacant lots, the location of a possible commercial facility or child care center, which social services are needed, and the priorities. This would imply that there would be no massive zoning areas.

These block councils would clearly not determine the location of a community-wide facility, such as a high school, but would send representatives to a community council to determine community-wide policies and plans. At a larger scale, representatives from these various community councils could meet in a metropolitan council, to deal exclusively with metropolitan planning.

In order to maintain the independence of these organizations, at every level, it is necessary that the funding not be tied to existing political structures. This should not be a mere extension of the patronage system. It should be built into Federal programs because it is a necessary cost. The precedent already exists in the FHA, where architectural, legal and organizational fees are build directly into the mortgage.

FROM THE NEW YORK FRONT

Drive for a Black Planning Commissioner

A Black appointee to the New York City Planning Commission is expected soon, in response to a drive mounted by a number of concerned organizations sparked by the NY Chapter PEO and spearheaded by ARCH - the Architect's Renewal Committee in Harlem.

Letter from organizations went to Mayor Lindsay pointing out that over thirty years was too long an exclusionist record for any seven-member commission, least of all one that deals with many questions affecting minority communities.

Legal Appraisal of Open Housing Laws Published

"Enforcing Open Housing; An Evaluation of Recent Legislation and Decisions" is the title of a significant study by advocate-lawyer Alex Kolben, done for the New York Chapter of PEO under a grant from Open City.

The sudden emergence of a new body of fair housing law, in the form of the 1968 Civil Rights Act, the Jones vs. Mayer Supreme Court decision, and laws of 23 states and 170 localities, gives rise to numerous questions. "Enforcing Fair Housing" is an attempt to deal with them.

The paper evaluates the effectiveness of the new legislation and case law both in terms of meeting the present basic problems and of providing procedural remedies. It also analyzes the inter-relationship of the different laws now in effect. A major point made by the author is that the laws are unhelpful in defining discrimination.

To illustrate the function and value of state and local laws in this area, the paper also examines the New York State Human Rights Law and the New York City Law on Human Rights.

Finally, the paper suggests ways in which planners and civil rights groups might make effective use of the existing laws in an overall attack on racial discrimination.

The Executive Committee promises publication for early March. Copies may be ordered directly from the New York Chapter, Planners for Equal Opportunity, 289 Seventh Avenue, New York City 10001. Please include the Chapter's charge to cover printing costs: $1.

Fight Against Luxury Housing Zoning

The NY Chapter has joined a number of concerned organizations opposing the City Planning Commission's proposed changes of three midtown Manhattan areas from general commercial (at present, mainly loft manufacturing and services) to high-rise residential, where high land prices will effectively prevent any sort of income/race balance in future housing. Hearings were Feb. 19th, where it was hoped that the usual "save New York" realty-oriented statements would be effectively stymied by a broad-spectrum community opposition.

MIGRATION AND WELFARE RISE

Disputing the Moynihan emphasis on Negro family disorganization as the factor accounting for the relief rise, Professors Richard N. Cloward and Frances Piven, the latter a PEO Policy Committee member, have reached other conclusions, according to the New York Times.

They have found, for instance, that the large continuing migration from rural to urban areas and from South to North is the "main cause" of soaring ADC rolls. Another important factor in the increase in welfare loads is the rising rates of acceptance in all cities studied, even in the four Southern examples.

Relief rolls, they found, continued to rise even when employment among Negro men was rising, thus casting doubt on the family disorganization hypothesis first announced by Moynihan.

Relocation services offered to residents of urban renewal projects include information about welfare eligibility, they point out, thus leading many to apply.

Increasing applications and rise in acceptances, say Cloward and Piven, show the growing political potential of the Negroes. The professors were the authors of the 1966 "strategy to end poverty," aiming at encouraging potential welfare clients to apply so that the resulting flood would effect national reforms.

THE BLACK UNIVERSITY

"...A Black university will of course not pretend to encompass the whole of science except theoretically, but will specialize in fields of interest to the community it serves. Given the material conditions of life for people of African descent in the USA and in the Americas and for people in Africa itself, Black scientists should explore chiefly the life sciences. In the practical realm they would deal with problems of demography, public health, nutrition, and housing..."

--"Towards a Black University," by Keith Lowe, Southern Student Organizing Committee.

PSYCHOLOGY AND LAND USE

Dynamics of Community Change: The Case of Long Island's Declining Gold Coast.

Empire State Historical Series 59, Friedman Inc., Port Washington, N. Y. 200 pp. illus. map.

By Dennis P. Sobin, planner and PEO member. Reviewed by Daniel F. Pawling, planner and North Shore resident.

Mr. Sobin quickly leads the reader thru the land use change theories of Burgess and Firey. These are inadequate, he feels. Chapin's model, which takes social, economic and political factors into account, is an advance, but claims Sobin, "even this broad model fails to explain all instances of community change." To complete the picture Sobin adds psychological factors.

To illustrate, he reports on the forces which led to the rise and decline of the "Gold Coast" on the North Shore of Long Island, New York. At its zenith, this 110 square mile area contained 600 virtually contiguous estates of 50 or more acres in size. He reveals how the owners ruled the destiny of the estate employees and other residents of the area and how and why in time this power faded. The liabilities and advantages of the large tracts of land now on the market are examined, as are the residual effects of this power group.

The book shows well the interaction between one income group and its social and physical environment. As such, it is a pilot study in a hoped-for series which would add the psychological ingredient to the classic explanations of land development patterns.

JOBS FOR ADVOCATES

With a little help from its members and friends, PEO is going to increase its efforts to bring advocate and community oriented planning jobs and advocate planners together. The requests for information about such jobs, particularly from students, is rising. The number of jobs is also rising, though not as fast. PEO will list all the jobs called to its attention, and we ask all our members to help with this task. Post this sheet where it can be seen by those who may have jobs for advocates. They can fill in the job description and we'll publish it in Equalop.

But that's only half the job. There aren't enough jobs for those who want to do community oriented planning work. The market has to be enormously expanded, both to give would-be advocates a chance to train in community oriented planning work and to increase the amount of expertise available to communities. Student groups such as NASPA (National Association of Students in Planning and Architecture) and a few schools such as Harvard are expanding the opportunities by seeking out places for students to work. We will carry their announcements too. But much more needs to be done. Give this sheet to organizations who may need advocates; suggest that they employ students during the summer or establish planning lines in their budgets.

APRIL CONFERENCE WILL HIGHLIGHT LOCAL PLANNING, LOCAL CONTROL, NIXON FAILURES, AND CALL FOR NEW CITIES

PEO's 4th Annual Meeting Conference, being held simultaneously with the American Society of Planning Officials conference April 4-7 at the New York Hilton, is an escalation of the strategy pursued in Washington in 1966 when PEO held a rival conference to the 50th Anniversary Conference of the AIP (American Institute of Planners). At that conference, PEO pointed up the lack of relevance of the planning profession, winning significant national press coverage for its views. Among actions exposing the failures of the AIP were [1] trips to Washington ghettos while the AIP toured the new town of Reston, [2] sharp, vigorous criticism of the war and war spending while cities were crumbling at home and [3] concentration on the "NOW" problems while the AIP worried about the year 2000.

This year, PEO will focus attention on the deepening urban crisis in a new but equally vigorous and dramatic style. We are pinpointing issues, attacking injustice and inaction at the points where quick, positive response can be expected or where significant impacts can be made.

Four Task Forces will develop conference programs on their respective subjects: programs which expose, criticize, project solutions, confront or educate. A special part of the program will confront ASPO with the issues and demands developed by the Task Forces.

We have a number of important objectives and potential outcomes:

- It will be a major opportunity to speak before a national audience on the disastrous course of the Nixon Administration's urban policy—particularly the "no housing" policy and its implications for the poor and the shape of metropolitan growth.
- By bringing community advocates and indigenous leadership together with planning officials and traditional professionals, a new dialogue will be opened which may lead to clearer understandings of the need for and the essentials of community participation and local control.
- A unique opportunity will be provided for minority groups and poor communities to participate in

HARTMAN AND HARVARD'S G. S. D

Chester Hartman, one of PEO's Policy Committee members, has been informed that his teaching appointment will terminate this spring at the end of a three-year contract as assistant professor of city and regional planning at Harvard's Graduate School of Design. He is also director of the Urban Field Service, a highly praised, innovative program permitting students from many disciplines to work with community groups for academic credit.

Announced reason: he is "too narrow in his knowledge and experience in housing." He does not, according to the dean, cover industrialized housing, financing and implementation, economic aspects or design. The fact that he is a recognized authority in the field of housing and social policy is apparently ignored.

Real reason: he has been outspoken in his criticism of the way policies are made and money allocated both in the university and in the G. S. D. and forceful in his efforts to improve the quality of planning education. He has supported poor communities with which both the university and his colleagues' firms collide. He has criticized the university's expansion policy and the decision to build Gund Hall (the new G. S. D. building). The administration had the effrontery to charge that his loyalty to Harvard had "lessened."

The New University Conference, a group of 40 faculty and students dealing with campus issues, detailed the affair in a press release and called for campus-wide action. The student Senate of the G. S. D., supported by a petition signed by over 200 students, demanded that Hartman be rehired as an associate professor.

Those protesting recognize the issue behind the Hartman ease-out—participation by students, junior faculty and alumni in matters of hiring, firing, tenure and promotion. But they choose to concentrate first on the issue of Hartman's contract.

PEO is adding its weight to the pressure to reinstate Hartman, and urges its members and others to telegraph or write Harvard expressing their support for Hartman and the better approach to housing that he represents.

discussions of basic urban issues such as the future of public housing, new cities, etc., and to learn of common problems and defects of programs as now designed and implemented.

- The PEO event will dramatize the issue of community participation and control, the anti-participation policies of the Nixon Administration, and the need for continued pressure.
- An important national organization of professional planners and planning officials will be confronted with the restrictive and discriminatory implications of official planning upon poor and minority group communities. Pressure will be brought to have this organization use its influence to change planning practices and expand urban opportunities for minorities and the poor.

Out of this conference may grow a number of continuing activities including followup pressures on ASPO if appropriate, expanding the dissemination of information about the implications of Nixon Administration policies, and further welding the relationships between planners and community groups.

The conference leadership is a Who's Who of advocate and local community planning in both black and white communities and in every phase of local and national planning interest. More than one-third are black or other minority, most being directly engaged in local community planning and development efforts. White planners in the conference leadership are long tenured advocates, some with more than 15 years of varied experience in a variety of localities, as well as on the regional and national scene.

Where other conferences have had their black-white confrontations (including PEO more than once), this conference will bring blacks and whites together on a mutually agreeable program. Where previous conferences were dominated by either white or black forces with difficult communications problems, this conference has been jointly planned and conceived. If it achieves nothing more, it will provide one of the first forums on urban problems in which minority and white people can discuss problems and press solutions on equal terms.

It will stress action demands rather than position papers. It will give public exposure to local community problems, demands and aspirations. Because we are bridging this professional-community gap, we have great hopes for the success of the conference. PEO will have a headquarters open throughout the conference. Spokesmen will present a list of demands to ASPO sometime during the conference for its consideration and approval.

NOTES ON THE NATIONAL SCENE

NATIONAL URBAN POLICY—STILL WANTING

The mayors of America have finally been given a walk-on part in the drama of setting national urban policy. They have their voice and listening post in the vast urban turmoil of Indianapolis. Mayor Richard Lugar of that city was elected president of the National League of Cities in San Diego, Ca., last December on a platform of more Federal money to cities and straighter talk from Vice President Agnew. He defeated John Lindsay and the usually sophisticated New Yorker's unsophisticated rabble-rousing crusade for a national urban lobby.

Lugar's return to Indianapolis after his triumph came just in time to host President Nixon and the Urban Affairs Council—meeting for the first time on the scene of the country's urban dilemma. It was an unbeatable place and time to announce a national urban policy. In ten generalities, the Nixon team promised the mayors of America, represented by young, Republican and acquainted-with-Spiro Mayor Lugar, all the things they had worked so hard for. As described by The New York Times, the ten points were nothing new, but in Indianapolis they were passed off as the great policy breakthrough. It was, in fact, a pantomime presentation for silent America based on the great Nixon theme, Get the Show out of Washington.

SUBURBAN ZONING

The movement to make suburban zoning less specious is growing. The NAACP has undertaken a major campaign against snob zoning. In a test procedure in Oyster Bay, N. Y., the NAACP and Suburban Action Institute have first requested that the town rezone 20 percent of its land to render it suitable for low-income development. A lawsuit with that goal has followed the initial request. Exclusionary zoning was the subject of a New Jersey conference held by the National Committee against Discrimination in Housing. At this meeting, Harold Finger of HUD stated the Federal Administration's intention to use federal programs both to induce and coerce localities to relax their zoning restrictions .

There are at least five constitutional challenges to zoning in the courts at present. The President's Committee on Urban Housing (Kaiser Commission) has recommended that the Federal Government preempt local zoning. State agencies, following the lead of legislation creating New York State's Urban Development Corporation, are being empowered to overrule local zoning. Massachusetts' new law empowers a state board to overrule local zoning upon petition by a nonprofit or limited-profit developer.

THINGS TO COME

The National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence has projected a vision of the future urban environment based on current trends. Central business districts will be safe in the daytime due to concentrated work forces, but will be evacuated in fear at night. In-city luxury apartments will be fortified sanctuaries, as will select suburban communities. Safe suburban communities and business districts will be connected by well-patroled sanitary corridors. Not-so-wealthy suburban residents will live in fear and will be armed at all times. All public facilities will be under armed guard at all times. The poor, trapped in center-city ghettoes, will live lives of terror.

BREAKTHROUGH BACKLASH

The final winners in the Operation Breakthrough contest have been announced. The builders of 22 industrial construction systems will erect prototype housing on ten sites around the country. Notable in the announcement of final winners was the absence of statements pledging all HUD support to Breakthrough developers. Nonwinners in the Breakthrough contest and smaller developers have been protesting HUD's presumed intention to reserve FHA and government program commitments for Breakthrough winners. Protesters have been supported by state administrations and politicians who fear that their areas will lose out on the industrial development potential of the new housing.

In reference to the quality of some of the winning systems, Ada Louise Huxtable in The New York Times has described the efforts of U. S. Steel and General Electric as "the labors of America's industrial giants to produce mice."

BLACK PLANNERS ORGANIZE NATIONALLY

The National Black Planning Network has announced its interim governing board. All five members are at university planning programs, as follows:

Gary Kent Smith, Chairman, Cornell
James Varner, Vice Chairman, Rutgers
Clinton Rosemond, Vice Chairman, UCLA
Sandy Redmond, Secretary, Univ. of Pennsylvania
Bill Gover, Treasurer, Shaw Univ., Raleigh.

Chairman of the negotiating committee is Harry J. Quintana, of Real Great Society, New York; and Ron Caines, AIP's Director of Advocacy Planning, is chairman of the communications committee.

DID BOSTON REHABILITATION WORK?

Over $27 million in federal funds have been invested in the BURP demonstration effort. Over 20,000 apartments were rehabilitated. But in an Urban Planning Aid report, "An Evaluation of the Boston Rehabilitation Program," the advocacy agency found that the project was shot through with improper construction control, inadequate relocation practices, raised costs through bad management, and an almost total lack of tenant participation in planning and execution.

The report concludes: "Community-based developers must be the vehicle by which housing is produced, managed and owned. The private market and its economic incentives which ultimately pit developer against tenant must be abandoned."

Copies of the BURP report are available from Urban Planning Aid, Inc., 56 Boylston St., Cambridge, Mass. 02138—free to community groups, $3.50 to others. Urban Planning Aid, started in 1966, has assisted community organizations in problems of urban renewal, expressways, and school planning.

With OEO funding in January 1969, UPA expanded to a full-time staff of 22, and a trainee program. Students from Harvard and MIT Urban Field Service receive academic credit for work with UPA.

HOC VADIS – ADVOCACY

The Baltimore Area Chapter of AIP is belatedly stirring itself in behalf of equal opportunity planning, according to its recent mailings. The 69/70 program, after a Quo Vadis conference and resolutions, was headed by committments to "action. . .to teach, work and learn in advocacy or consumer assistance in communities. . . . to offer voluntary service on an individual basis to groups requesting or receptive to advocacy assistance."

The chapter's fall meeting took place in Harlem Park. Agency professionals–Ron Caines of National AIP, Les Graef, Harold Young, and Art Cohen– were questioned and their remarks commented on by three community leaders involved in relocation, recreation, and conservation and development, respectively. Stewart Bryant, program committee and PEO member chairman, was moderator.

LEGAL ADVOCACY REPORT

In Camden, N. J., community groups trying to halt construction of a proposed industrial road. . . . A Legal Defense Fund lawsuit appealing an earlier adverse decision on the Triangle urban renewal project in Charleston, S. C. . . . In Osage, W. Va., efforts to block a highway cutting through a black community temporarily impeded by a tragic circumstance–the murder of the Yablonskys. Mrs. Yablonsky had been helping with the surveys being conducted to strengthen the fight against the highway authorities. . . . HUD rejecting a public housing site in Charlotte, N. C., as being potentially segregated. This following the Legal Defense Fund filing of an "administrative complaint" with HUD. . . . In Philadelphia, a single element in an urban renewal plan being challenged in court. . . . Another Municipal Equalization suit to challenge unequal municipal services, this time in Prattville, Ala. . . . Two such suits lost in Mississippi, at Belzoni and Shaw. . . . The local Navaho legal defense fund in Gallup, N. M., squelched by cautious tribal leaders. . . .

LAND-DEVELOPMENT BILL SUPPORTED

The fight in New Jersey to pass new land development legislation (in the form of Senate Bill 803, 1969) finds the Rutgers Planning Association/ Planners for Equal Opportunity alert and active. They have strongly pressed the New Jersey branch of AIP (which has the ear of the Dept. of Community Affairs) to stand against watering down the bill in any revisions before reintroduction this year.

The following resolution, sent by Spurgeon Cameron to Equalop, embodies the Rutgers group's support for Senate 803, for a graduated income tax (opposed by Governor Cahill) and for improved planning in New Jersey

WHEREAS

We believe Senate bill 803 is urgently needed in its present form without modification of any sort; and

In relationship to New Jersey's needs for the seventies, we believe that Senate bill 803 is very mild and weak in what it seeks to accomplish; and

The present system of municipal competitive ratable planning, zoning, and subdivision makes regional planning more and more difficult and irrational; and

Such competition tends to have the net effect of excluding minorities, multiple family dwellings, and senior citizens; and

The most urbanized state of the United States, located between New York City and Philadelphia, must begin a system of planning for its total state community rather than continue with local fragmentation and lack of coordination because of our present problems in transportation, health care, education, and housing, each of such magnitude as to be beyond the scope and abilities of local municipalities;

THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that We, The Rutgers Planning Association and Planners for Equal Opportunity:

Support Senate bill 803 as written for re-submission to the New Jersey State Legislature of 1970 as the only alternative to provide for a reasonable and orderly development of the state;

Support the enactment of a graduated state income tax for revenue purposes to finance the further development of New Jersey and to meet the needs of its total community;

Call on the New Jersey chapter, AIP, to support Senate bill 803 and use its influence, and each member do everything in his/her power to secure a speedy introduction and enactment of this proposed bill;

Pledge our unqualified support to efforts in behalf of item three of this resolution;

Pledge ourselves to continued efforts to improve planning systems in the State of New Jersey.

STICKS AND STONES DON'T BREAK MY BONES BUT WORDS AND NUMBERS HURT ME

by David Shepherd

Street kids learn at an early age how to avoid the things that hurt the ego, and how to nourish their ego out of the garbage of our culture.

They avoid all cops, most teachers, writing, problems expressed on paper, abstractions, jobs that confine and restrict the personality. They seek out and imitate authorities in their own families, teachers who enable them to cope, older brothers and sisters who know "where it's at."

They seek expansive, joyful activities—graphics with magic markers, music when practised in a group, outdoor jobs that require little study, concretes: the stimuli of sound, sports, trips and those drugs that sharpen interpersonal happenings. If that doesn't work, they shift to the "hard" drugs that blur all the employment problems, ego stresses and even sexual relations in deadened street culture.

We in education who've survived our childhood battles with calculus or the piano, and have a scrap of scarred ego left, assume that street kids should do as we did. We think of education as a discipline the soul should experience. Which means we're willing to underwrite the subsistance of all those dropouts relegated to jobs that pay less than their babies need to survive. We really endorse welfare and assorted social perversions when we make education a discipline and make that discipline compulsory.

We could just as easily endorse basic education as a stimulus, as a game, as a concrete and enjoyable activity, in other words as one of the kicks to which every human being is entitled. We could, in fact, be turning kids on to the words and numbers that they now learn to avoid.

David Shepherd is coordinator of Community Makers, a group that designs training packages to help community groups start their own cooperative businesses. Shepherd brings to group participation and community action the insights of theatre. In 1955 he started Compass in Chicago, where Mike Nichols, Alan Arkin, Elaine May, Barbara Harris and others built shows on instantaneous audience feedback. Community Makers develops materials that start and guide social change through the same process. Write Shepherd, c/o Equalop, for more info on education/ play/ theater.

How? By making learning large, physical and interpersonal. So that numbers have weight and letters color, so words have feeling and problems payoffs.

A group of us began to try this approach two years ago—in pre-vocational training, tutorial programs in the schools, recreation and camp programs. We built the basic tools for a "Learning Playground" that would attract kids before they reach the overcrowded, underequipped classrooms of grades one through twelve.

We involved older kids as models—as program directors and builders. To do this we designed blueprints by which to construct learning playgrounds, and card games by which to elicit the stories and problems that mean something to kids.

For instance, a kid between seven and 13 gets a color-coded transparent bag stuffed with stories and problems in his realm of interest. He pulls out his decks of cards and chooses a group of friends to sit with. When he feels strong, he enters a tournament in which cash prizes are offered for "Math War," "Psych Out" and other games. He can then go on to another bag with more complex card games in it.

Youths between 13 and 20, meanwhile, are building giant games—versions of 3-D Tic Tac Toe standing six feet high, "Brain Blox" and obstacle courses. Or else they tutor younger kids, helping create their own math problems, story cards, puzzles, chalk maps. How to take a group of kids to city hall, run a tournament, thread a pipe or make a plywood cube—these are some of the skills that the Neighborhood Youth Corps enrolee or camp counselor can acquire in the Learning Playground.

The adults, too, can learn—using manuals on turning gray streets into play streets. Even the grandfather on the top floor of the last tenement may become involved as teams of kids scout for objects to create micro-museums or run surveys on neighborhood problems.

We looked to focus the titanic energy of the street and validate its resources—mementos, scrap lumber, unused space, underutilized grandparents, unemployed teenagers. Junk, "rapping," exploring, secondhand tools and even the critical problems of the block—all go into a Learning Playground.

This is, in a sense, a revival of the oral tradition that once passed on knowledge of living—long before institutionalized schools divorced the family from education. We expect next to discover exactly how the Learning Playground can be brought indoors—so parents can use the same activities to strengthen their children against the words and numbers of inadequate schooling. With luck the Learning Playground can become one of many cornerstones needed for new, community-based schools.

NON-JOBS AND SUB-JOBS

We've had substandard housing, substandard neighborhoods, substandard environments, substandard education. Now the time has come to speak of substandard jobs as well and to show the imbalance they give to urban places. Public housing has often been referred to as essentially a subsidy to low-wage employers. More recently, subsidized bus transportation to jobs has emerged as a much more visible subsidy to marginal industries. Here's an editorial from the Bergen County, N.J., Record for evidence:

THE FUN OF GETTING WHERE?

The news from the subsidized bus operations of the Bergen County government is mixed. The bus service from the Negro neighborhoods of Hackensack and Paterson to the industrial plants of South Bergen has been so little used that its proponents have admitted failure.

The run from Hackensack to the South Bergen factories has been discontinued altogether, and so few workers ride the bus from Paterson to these plants that it would be almost cheaper to give them cab fare.

There's no mystery about what went wrong. The South Bergen factories had lots of unfilled jobs to offer, but the jobs were all low paid. By the time deductions were made for income tax, Social Security, union dues, $5.50 a week for bus fares, and something for lunch every day, there'd be precious little left from a $70 paycheck. A family could do better financially on welfare.

HOW TO ORGANIZE FOR HOUSING

The OSTI Press has issued its "Housing Action" publication—"A Guide for Doing Something About Housing Problems in Your Community." The 144-page manual impresses readers with its solidity and comprehensiveness. It first deals with issues and strategies for tenants and homeowners in getting a fair deal from city governments and from landlords. New forms of public housing—turnkey, scattered site, leased—are described in the second chapter. A combative discussion of the shifting elements of urban renewal, with protest methods specified, follows. Other types of federal housing programs for low and moderate income families are analysed, and problems of equal opportunity, again with militant techniques, are taken up. The appendices include model leases, model contracts, and complaint forms.

This obviously highly useful manual is available for $1.50 plus mailing charges (25 cents for 1-5 copies, 50 cents for 6-10 copies, 75 cents for 11-15 copies, and actual postage for larger orders. Orders should be prepaid. OSTI Press, 264 Third St., Cambridge, Mass. 02142.

UNAWARE FREELOADERS

Useful ammunition from the New Jersey Department of Community Affairs;–

Hidden subsidies to new suburban homeowners in the U. S. from 1945 to 1966 include the following:

● Not less than $18,000,000,000 and perhaps as much as $24,000,000,000 in income tax deductions allowed on mortgage interest and real estate taxes. Average per home: $780 to $1,040.

● Approximately $1,000,000,000 in the form of taxes saved by using FHA-insured mortgages.

This, of course, is to say nothing of subsidies for commuter railroads, commuter expressways and parkways, and the stretched-out sewer and water systems needed by sprawl housing.

And now comes no less than George Romney to stress these invisible subsidies. "The people who benefit usually are not aware that they are being helped," he told an audience at the dedication of the new Fannie-Mae building in Washington, referring to both the tax write-offs for interest on home mortgages and housing loans guaranteed by the government. He goes on to say that they are not aware of the fact that government policies encouraged suburban housing and left the cities with heavy concentrations of low and moderate income families. Romney favors repealing part of the allowed deductions on interest on housing mortgages, and even dares to suggest that the revenues so earned by the government be earmarked to meet problems of the slums.

Later, Romney's suggestion was labelled "just an idea" and not an Administration position. But it is a hopeful sign that someone with insight is getting through to the higher echelons of HUD.

AIP JOURNAL—WAY AHEAD

In the past, it has been obvious that the officers and governors of the American Institute of Planners never took seriously the flood of research findings, conscience-searching articles on professionalism, or the outright exhortations for change appearing in their own bi-monthly Journal.

Depending on the new 1969 policy makers, this gap will either be narrowed or greatly widened by contrast with the July 1969 issue.

Under the theme "Planning and Citizen Participation," at least four articles contained implicit challenges to the planning status quo.

● Sherry Arnstein's "Ladder of Citizen Participation" is a sobering resume of what we all knew, made starkly graphic for a fresh impact. When we realize that most of the participation groups we are involved with are at the lower or lower middle rungs of the ladder, the implication is clear for changed policies in official planning agencies.

● Melvin Mogulof throws three federal programs – Juvenile Delinquency Demonstration Program, OEO's Community Action Program, and the Model Cities effort – together to expose their differences in three aspects:

– Integration and Separatism ("The movement from the public-private coalitions of the Delinquency Program, to the expansion of the coalition in the CAP to include neighborhood leaders, and now to 'adversary relationships' between government and black neighborhood in Model Cities, appears to be a central theme....") – Technical Assistance ("....the greatest potential is the insistence that the 'citizen participation structure' of the Model Cities Program shall receive technical assistance in a manner acceptable to it....")

– Selection of Leadership (...."there is evidence that a lower class black community will reject black middle class leadership as being unrepresentative if this leadership lives elsewhere....")

– Idea of Community ("It is around these facts of black communalism and its focus on self-interest and determination that future issues of citizen participation will have to be agitated and decided....")

● Martin Rein examines the "legitimacies" of planners and the dilemmas resulting when these are opposed. He reaches two general conclusions:

– "The source of legitimacy in planning is neither self-evident nor narrowly restrictive....there are multiple sources....However, they cannot all be pursued under the auspices of one planning organization and hence choice is required...."

– "Each source of authority has its characteristic weaknesses and strengths which present to the planner a set of intractable problems that are moral in character from which there can be no retreat into technology."

● And PEO member Marcia Marker Feld, in a review article of Rogers' 110 Livingston Street and Gittell's Participants and Participation, points out that city planners are inevitably involved in school planning. "These books," she says, "are a necessary introduction....as you wend your way through tense community hassles, Board of Education brainwashing sessions, and insensitive, unimaginative school planning and architect meetings, toward a more professional and more comprehensive approach...."

IBM IN THE GHETTO

Urban programs that don't work have been frequent and their failures have been well-publicized. For an antidote to this prevasive myth of non-success, we have a report on a manpower program in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant ghetto. In the AIP Journal for September, Robert Schrank and Susan Stein relate the encouraging experience of IBM in opening a computer component assembly plant in the black community.

The plant opened in July 1968 as a single product operation, but now a second line has been added. The management claims that the plant has shown a product and performance record comparable to other new IBM facilities. No special problems have been felt and the plant is expected to expand jobs from 260 to an eventual 475.

The authors note that expansion of this strategy is antithetical to the idea of black capitalism, but argue that the multiplier effect of this immediate program will eventually stimulate black enterprise in the black communities.

Simply and earnestly, a young member of a regional plan agency staff tells his region of the twin problems in housing. From the Greater Bridgeport (Conn.) Planning Region's "Regional Reporter" Newsletter No. 10, Sept. 1969.

HIGH RENTS AND DISCRIMINATION

By William E. Minor

As a young man starting out in the planning field I have come to the conclusion that housing in the Greater Bridgeport Region has reached the critical stage. How critical? One has but to try and find a decent house or apartment, and one will quickly find it to be an exercise in futility. It simply cannot be done. Granted there are certain houses and apartments available, but who can afford them? If one is willing to pay $180 to $200, he can find an apartment very much to his liking unless of course, he happens to be black. I say this because I am black and I've tried in vain to find an apartment.

Recently I went to a local realtor to apply for an apartment. I was told by the realtor that he could not rent to me because I had not lived and worked in the area long enough. According to him I would have to live and work in the area for at least a year before I would be eligible. Being skeptical of the whole thing, I then started to investigate. I called several real estate brokers and explained the situation to them. They were just as surprised as I was to learn about such goings-on.

I then asked about the legality of such a policy, and was told by one realtor that it didn't have a leg to stand on. Since that time I have placed my name with several realtors in the hope that sometime soon an apartment will be forthcoming. However, I still remain skeptical because of the enormous number of people on waiting lists.

WHITES PAY FOR BIAS

Shortly after that, a friend of mine, who incidentally is white, went to a certain apartment complex, and when asked if there were Negroes living there was told that they had just raised the rent in hopes of preventing any non-whites from coming in.

The above seems indicative of the prevailing attitude held by most people in the area. Not only is there discrimination by race but by income as well. Anyone who stands up and says there is no discrimination in the region would be kidding himself.

Discrimination in housing in this area is a matter of of policy on all levels – both in and out of government. To change policy is tantamount to changing priorities, which no one really wants to do. This is evident in the statement of an official source – "there is no discrimination in this area in housing".

As long as there are people around who believe as this person does, the problem will never be solved. To close one's eyes in the hope that the problem will eventually go away is wishful thinking and serves to perpetuate rather than solve the problem.

Most, if not all substandard housing in our region is occupied by low income and minority groups – mostly Black and Puerto Rican. One look at places like Father Panik Village and Beardsley Terrace, which in my opinion are concentrated ghettos, will show that these projects are clearly not the result of any sensible planning efforts. These ad hoc schemes succeeded not in solving problems, but in creating many new ones.

These are just some of the problem areas that exist. If you look around you'll see more. It's always easiest to blame the people who live in these places – granted they are not completely blameless, but then, neither are the people who have allowed them to deteriorate.

To reiterate – we must take cognizance of the fact that these problems exist – and that they will not be solved unless there is an "all out" effort by everyone involved.

Saturday, April 4:	New York Critique	12:00 Noon
	Special PEO awards	3:00 PM
Sunday, April 5:
	Presentation of PEO Exhibit on Local Planning-Local Control (to be continuous throughout the conference)	11:00 AM

In addition to these formal sessions, PEO will have a headquarters open throughout the conference, and will present a list of demands to ASPO sometime during the conference for ASPO approval. Check with headquarters when you arrive for final schedules and room numbers.

OUR MONEY NEEDS

The costs of running a conference like this are tremendous. We need money for display and graphic materials, research and organization, mapping and planning, publication of our reports and findings, in addition to office help, printing, mailings, etc. We have no major source of outside financial support, but rather, rely on money supplied by the membership through dues and contributions to carry out our work. Right now we are in a financial crisis, and need your help in making this conference a success. Pre-registration fees for members in $5.00, and $2.00 for students. (Registration at the conference will be $6.00 and $2.50, respectively.) Send additional contributions. We need them to defray our expenses and produce a better conference.

DISSENT, DISMISSAL AND DISAFFECTION

It goes way, way back. Those who chose to differ with the establishment, -- state church, employer -- took a risk. For Socrates it was hemlock, Bruno, the stake and Galileo, the cop-out. Nowadays, dissenting planners get fired. Doubtless, a few here and there have gone the Galilean route.

Nader's Raiders brought the question of profession ethics to a new level. An engineer's loyalty should no longer be to "the company" if the product is unsafe at any speed, pollutes, etc. Certainly planners should be whistle-blowers. It is this, if nothing else, that will take the profession out of its ad hoc opportunism.

Two cases now in the spotlight involve planners Chet Hartman and Mike Dobbins. One case has been around for some time and is hung-up in the mickey-mouse procedures of academe; the other, more recent, is now in the courts.

1. CHET HARTMAN

EQUALOP readers will recall that Prof. Hartman was refused tenure at the Harvard Graduate School of Design over 1½ years ago because of "disloyalty." As teacher, planner and author, Hartman, although relatively young, has few peers in the profession. He orginated the Urban Field Service, an interdisciplinary collaborative effort of students and faculty from several departments at Harvard to assist communities in need of planning, while providing real-life experience for the team. He was "disloyal" because he dared to propose retention of and assistance to a working class neighborhood adjacent to Harvard that had been earmarked for clearance and redevelopment to make way for expansion of the university.

NEWARK 1½ YEARS AFTER

by Stanley Winters
Newark College of Engineering

One and a half years after what? After a black man, for the first time, eased his body into the big leather armchair behind the mayor's desk in Newark's City Hall. Is Ken Gibson making it? Are last year's (EQUALOP, Summer, 1970) hopes being fulfilled?

Here is the balance sheet:

-- Gibson filled some top cabinet posts (police, fire, legal) but delayed others until after a nation-wide search. Salaries and the nature of the jobs are just not that attractive.

The City Council resists reorganization that hopefully would clarify administrative functions, increase accountability, and raise salaries to competitive levels.

-- The Mayor's plan for an independent department of investigation to ferrett out dishonesty and malingering was quickly shelved by Council. Five of the nine councilmen, like Gibson, are newcomers, but save for one or two, they usually act like former Mayor Addonizio's Council.

-- Despite Gibson's efforts, public housing and recevelopment remain within the Newark Housing Authority. Regional HUD strongly criticized NHA and slowed the flow of renewal funds until NHA said it would cooperate.

NHA is under fire from public housing tenants, who have withheld almost $1.5 million in rents over the past 18 months to force improvements in maintenance and security. Last June, 4800 black tenants filed a $24 million class suit against NHA and HUD charging that "segregationist" policy was denying them decent, safe and sanitary housing. Although NHA's director refuses to resign and NHA commissioners refuse to surrender redevelopment, retreats may be coming.

Much is at stake. Over 1,000 people

Planners for Equal Opportunity Resolutions to AIP

WHEREAS democracy and technology have created in America the most affluent society in the history of mankind, and,

WHEREAS our society is fully capable of providing adequate housing, full employment, increased mobility, quality education and equality of opportunity for all, and,

WHEREAS millions of Americans, largely because of racial discrimination, lack the skills to enable them to secure decent jobs, are served by schools which provide little more than custodial care, are forced to live in dilapidated, blighted housing, are subjected to physical and psychological brutality and humiliation, are the victims of private, semi-public and governmental bureaucracies whose policies and procedures have the effect, and frequently the intent, of perpetuating oppression and inequality, and that these create the poverty, frustration, hostility and tension which are used as excuses to justify perpetuation of the system, and,

WHEREAS the federal, state and local funds which will be invested in housing, transportation, sewer and water, welfare and other programs within the next decade, and the policies of governmental agencies providing incentives to and restraints on the private sectors of the economy will have major impact on the allocation of benefits and the distribution of opportunities among the people of America, and,

WHEREAS members of the American Institute of Planners will play key roles in developing the plans for the location and design of these facilities and systems and establishing and administering the guidelines for these programs, and,

WHEREAS it is the obligation of the planner to plan with the people affected by his plans and for their benefit rather than to perpetuate an oppressive, discriminatory system or to satisfy the narrowly perceived best interests of the planning profession, and,

WHEREAS the theme of the 50th Anniversary Conference of AIP is "Optimum Environment with Man as the Measure," and,

WHEREAS the failures of American democracy to provide equality of opportunity to all Americans have brought the cities of our nation to the threshold of revolution,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the considerations cited above shall be the major criteria on which AIP nationally and through its chapters shall evaluate existing and pending legislation, and shall support, seek to amend or oppose such legislation on this basis, and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that these considerations shall guide the conduct of the professional planner in encouraging participation of the poor and members of minority groups in the development of plans which affect them and which are, presumably, for their benefit, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that these considerations shall guide the professional planner in evaluating alternative courses of action, and that the planner shall base his recommendations on a conscious and deliberate effort to provide maximum benefit to Negroes, to other minority groups and to the poor, and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that in order that the policies stated above be implemented, the following specific actions be taken by AIP:

1. That a special committee be appointed and charged with the responsibility to utilize the considerations cited above in developing criteria for the evaluation of the character, adequacy and effectiveness of existing governmental Policies and programs, to evaluate those programs and to present these findings to the next annual conference;

2. That these criteria and evaluations be presented to the membership for acceptance or modification at the next annual conference and become the basis of AIP positions regarding existing and proposed legislation;

3. That AIP find ways and means to provide planners to serve as advocates for the poor and minority groups to aid them in identifying and articulating their needs and achieving their goals;

4. That AIP encourage close liaison with the poor and minority groups and representatives and organizations selected by them in order to determine their needs as the basis for planning;

5. That AIP expedite the entrance of members of minority groups into the planning profession and report annually on its progress;

6. That AIP recognize ... only those professional planning schools which include in their curricula field experience with citizen groups; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the President of AIP be called upon to provide opportunity for presentation and discussion of this resolution at the Thursday morning conference session -- "The Urgent and the Important."

PROJECT: GOOD NEIGHBOR

is a program designed to stimulate discussion and action in neighborhoods throughout the Chicago metropolitan area.

Its goal is to have the total community come to grips with a key phase of the number one domestic problem of our time, and move toward a solution... a good neighbor policy in the metropolitan area.

Its success will be measured in terms of the actions taken to make it possible for any man—whatever his race, creed, or color—to move his family wherever his heart and his purse will take him.

is conceived in the belief that:

The problems which stand in the way of equal housing opportunities for minority groups are tough to solve and real.

But, they are nowhere near as tough or re[illegible] those which result from the fears which pervade the thinking of Negroes and whites alike.

That the truth .... unembellished .... from the lips of those who have met the real problems and solved them can trigger informed dialogue among neighbors and help dissipate fears.

That much of what we call prejudice results from fear, fear of the unknown.

That a problem of this magnitude, like any other social problem, will not be solved by laws alone, nor will it be solved by marches alone, but rather by large numbers of involved citizens deciding [illegible] this is "an idea whose time has come".... that the way to solve it is in the best traditions of a democratic society, the tradition of education and dialogue and action by individuals where they live and work.

That the Chicago metropolitan area is world-famous for its ability to remove big problems by facing them and solving them. The metropolitan area Crusade of Mercy has been a model of constructive, voluntary action.... a total commitment of many key groups of the city. In the fair employment area, key business organizations have led an intensive but voluntary program that has signed up nearly all leading companies in Chicago and has made fair employment practices far more prevalent than anyone would have thought possible only a few short years ago. Whether it be school bonds, airports, super highways, water filtration, police protection, or convention halls, the Chicago area responds to its social problems by focusing on them, and by leadership of its most responsible citizens ....by a unique partnership of business, labor, educators, political figures, religious groups, and media.

That the power of this "partnership" must be focused on a dramatic program that commands the attention of the whole metropolitan area and says especially to those that despair...."Chicago has really begun to move."

will be launched Sunday, June 4, 1967, and its first phase will be completed Sunday, June 11, 1967. During those eight days the following events are planned:

A major television program on each Chicago channel will focus on the need to achieve equal opportunities in housing for all men....The programs will demonstrate how a number of people and communities throughout the metropolitan area have met and solved the problems without plummeting real estate values, without violence, without downgrading the appearance of the neighborhood, without becoming all-black, indeed without the things happening that so many people seem to fear.

Discussion groups in neighborhoods throughout the metropolitan area will be organized by cooperating organizations with the purpose of watching at least one of these television shows together; discussing the relevance of its message to that neighborhood; and taking whatever specific set of action possibilities the group or individuals will embrace. It is our hope that these neighborhood discussions will reduce one of the fears that many people have —that the neighbors would object to making housing available to anyone with the means to pay for such housing. To be sure, not all neighbors will feel alike, but we think growing numbers are becoming increasingly dissatisfied with the current "solutions" and will gain strength and inspiration when they find others in the neighborhood also feel something constructive must be done.

Ministers, priests and rabbis will be invited by their denominational heads to call attention to the Project at its beginning, participate in and help organize the grass roots discussions, and preach a sermon on the need for equal opportunities in housing in their community at the close of the first week.

Businesses will be asked to urge participation by employees, and to support the Project through publicity, provision of volunteer discussion leaders, and other appropriate ways.

Labor unions will be asked to provide the same sort of support as business, and to help lead the way in organizing discussion groups in their areas of greatest strength.

Educational institutions will focus the attention of students and faculty on the Project, and provide resource people for the television programs, and the discussion groups.

Civil rights organizations will have a vital role to play in promoting the Project to their members and providing resource people for television programming and discussion groups.

Trade associations, fraternal organizations, and groups of all kinds will be invited to publicize, participate in and promote the Project.

Human Relations organizations and Community Councils will be asked to take an active part in promoting neighborhood discussion meetings and to provide resource people for these discussions.

Government support at all levels—city, village, county and state—will underline the bipartisan nature of the Project and secure participation of government personnel at all levels.

Finally, and perhaps most important, the housing industry itself—real estate brokers, builders, developers, lending institutions—all have a vital stake in having this problem illuminated. Their cooperation and participation will be solicited throughout the metropolitan area.

metropolitan area to hear two-minute "calls for participation" from national, state, and community leaders.

will be backed by the complete cooperation of Chicago and suburban newspapers, radio stations and television stations.

Feature stories, advertisements, spot announcements, and news reports will not only focus attention on the Project, but will provide discussion-stimulating material and action possibilities for everyone to consider.

We believe all of the media of Chicago will combine to make this the most important and most visible week of the year.

PROJECT: GOOD NEIGHBOR

recognizes that people can not be moved from one extreme of the opinion scale to another. It is believed, however, that a few of the following actions will be possible for each of us:

Attend and participate in at least one neighborhood discussion following one of the television presentations.

Sign the "Good Neighbor Declaration" which says: "We believe that all men should be able to live where they want to live and can afford to, including our neighborhood, without restrictions because of race, color, creed or national origin."

When listing property for sale or rent, specify to the real estate man involved that you are offering it on a non-discriminatory basis. (Also notify the central Housing Information Center, CE 6-3056, of the availability of the property.)

If you are a Negro, Puerto Rican or other minority group member and are willing and able to move to an open community, inform the Housing Information Center, CE 6-3056.

Let your legislative representative and elected officials know how you feel about the need to establish equal housing opportunities in the whole metropolitan area.

If you are willing to volunteer for service in the continuing effort to achieve open communities, send your name, address, and telephone number to:

None of us is naive enough or optimistic enough to believe that a program, however big or dramatic, focused on one week will solve a problem of this magnitude, of this depth. We do believe, however, that it could be an important first step in mobilizing the leadership of the Chicago metropolitan area to launch an effort that must inevitably be a long journey, a difficult journey, but a necessary one, if we and our children are to live in peace and freedom.

HOUSING - EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES

Present open housing legislation in the United States deals with a wide array of housing discrimination and housing policy. Statutes generally apply to public housing, private housing financed with public funds, and "private" private housing, i.e. housing in which no public funds are invested or no public agency has any jurisdiction. This report will discuss only those statutes which pertain to the category "private" private housing. The majority of recent controversy in the U.S has been over this type of legislation and its constitutionality and effectiveness.

Survey of Existing Legislation

At last count, sixteen states in the United States had some statute which dealt with, and prohibited discrimination in the sale or rental of private housing. These states are: Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Indiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Wisconsin. In addition, the constitution of the state of Michigan has been construed by the attorney general of that state as banning discrimination in all types of housing including private housing. The territories of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands also have strict statutes prohibiting discrimination in all types of housing.

Source

Many municipalities in the United States also have ordinances or statutes prohibiting discrimination in private housing on the basis of race, religion, color, or national origin. Although it is not possible to construct an exact count, the author estimates that at least one hundred cities now have some form of private open housing law. Among these are: New Haven and New London, Connecticut; The District of Columbia; Chidago,East St. Louis, and Peroia, Illinois; Ann Arbor and Grand Rapids, Michigan; New York, New York; Albuquerque, New Mexico; Oberlin,Ohio; Erie, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Madison, Wisconsin.

All state and local legislation in this area is remarkably similar. This similarity no doubt stems from legislators or municipal authorities "treading lightly" in a politically sensitive area and adopting only previously tried solutions rather than innovating. The following section will illustrate the typical range of discriminatory activities covered, exemptions to the law, and the procedure for its enforcement.

Citation of Typical Legislation

General Clause- All states have a general clause in the statute stating that discrimination is prohibited and usually that it is contrary to the public welfare. The following excerpt from the Colorado Statute is illustrative.

> It shall be an unfair housing practice and unlawful and hereby prohibited: (b) for any person having the right of ownership, or possession, or > the right of transfer, rental, or lease of any housing: To refuse to transfer, rent, or lease, or otherwise to deny to or with-hold from any person, persons such housing because of race, creed, color, sex, national origin, or ancestry; to discriminate against any person because of race, creed, color, sex, national origin, or ancestry in the terms, conditions, or privileges pertaining to any housing, or the transfer, rental, or lease thereof....[1]

Exemptions- Exemptions to the law apply almost exclusively to owner occupied structures of up to four dwelling units. Almost all states exempt these units with only Alaska and Michigan covering the sale or rental of all types of housing. About one half of the statutes cover both sale and rental of non-exempted dwellings and about one half cover only rental of housing in non-exempted dwellings. The New Jersey law is typical.

> .... the provisions of this act shall not apply (1) to the sale or rental of a dwelling, or of a portion thereof, containing accommodations for not more than 3 families, one of which is maintained by the owner at the time of sale or rental as the household of his family, or;(2) to the sale or rental of a dwelling, or a portion thereof, containing accommodations for not more than 2 families....[2]

Inquiry and Advertising Clause- Most states attempt to prevent circumvention of the law by providing that:

> It shall be unlawful: ... 3. for any owner ... to make or cause to be made any written or oral inquiry concerning the race, color, religion national origin or ancestry of a person seeking to purchase, rent, or lease... for the purpose of violating any of the provisions of this part.[3]

> [or that:] It shall be an unlawful discriminatory practice..For any person to: Print, publish or circulate any statement or advertisement relating to the sale, lease or acquisition of any commercial housing... which indicates any preference > ence, limitation, specification, or discrimination based upon race, color, religious creed, ancestry, or national origin. [4]

Finance Clause- As will be pointed out later in this paper, these provisions attempt to eliminate one of the key means of perpetuating existing segregation policies in housing- that of denying to the negro the economic ability to purchase housing and denying to the builder the economic means to build non-segregated housing. The Washington D.C. regulations are illustrative.

> It shall be a violation of these regulations for any person to ... Refuse to lend money, guarantee a loan, accept a deed of trust or mortgage, or otherwise make funds available for the purchase, acquisition, construction, alteration, rehabilitation, repair or maintenance of real property, or impose different conditions on such financing.... [on the basis of race, color, religion or national origin][5]

Implementation- Almost universally, open or fair housing laws provide for a system of implementation or enforcement as follows. Any person who feels that he has been discriminated against in a manner covered by the applicable statute may file a complaint with the state's anti discrimination (members usually appointed by the Governor), commission, or its equivalent. In this complaint, he must name the person or persons who have allegedly discriminated against him. The commission then makes or has made by one of its officers or agents, an investigation of the charges of the complaint.

If the commission finds evidence to support the claim of discrimination, it attempts to eliminate the practice by "conciliation and persuasion." If the attempts at persuasion fail, formal hearings are convened with proper notice given to all parties concerned. If, on the basis of these hearings, the commission formally decides that discrimination has occurred, the commission can issue,or have issued by a court an order for the person violating the statute to "cease and desist" from such discriminatory practices.

Most states provide that a person so instructed must then sell or rent to the person complaining,the housing in question. All legislation provides for a fine(generally $100 to $500) and some legislation provides for a jail sentence(usually 10-30 days) for non-compliance with such an order. In addition, if the "cease and desist" order was issued by a court, the person failing to comply with it may be held in contempt of court and be prosecuted for contempt.

All statutes provide for judicial review of any decision of a commission and any order issued by a commission or court. Either party to the case, the complainant or the respondant, may appeal , usually to a superior court, for such review.

Constitutionality of Open Housing Laws

Although the United States Supreme Court has not directly ruled on the constitutionality of these laws, those state and Federal courts which have ruled upon them have generally judged them to be a reasonable exercise of state and local governmental power. For example, the Ohio Court of Appeals, in ruling on a case which challenged the open housing ordinance of the city of Oberlin held that:

> The the ordinance, designed and enacted to prevent discrimination in the field of private housing, bears a substantial and reasonable relation to the health, comfort, safety, convenience, and welfare of the residents of the city of Oberlin, and is not an unreasonable, arbitrary or oppressive exercise of the police power.[6]

In addition, the U.S. Supreme Court, in a recent decision, upheld the judgment of the California State Supreme Court which declared unconstitutional California's controversial Proposition 14. Proposition 14 was an amendment to the California State Constitution (passed by the state's voters by a two to one margin) which would have nullified the state's two anti-discrimination laws relating to private housing. The proposition stated in part that:

> Neither the State nor any subdivision or agency thereof shall deny, limit or abridge, directly or indirectly, the right of any person, who is willing or desires to sell, lease or rent any part or all of his real property, to decline to sell, lease or rent such property to such person or persons as he, in his absolute discretion, chooses.[7]

was invalid because it would embody in the state's basic charter the "right to discriminate on racial grounds."[8]

Effectiveness of the Legislation

Open housing laws of the type described above have generally aided in the prevention of discrimination. The laws have "freed the white man rather than the negro" by removing the pressure upon owners of housing who wished to rent or to sell to negroes but faced social and possible economic reprisal if they did so. They have operated in much the same way that the public accommodations sections of Federal civil rights legislation have by giving the pressured owner the argument that " I have no choice- it's the law."

are you talking about "race, color or creed"

A second positive effect of this legislation has been its important but limited effect in giving the negro financial access to housing which he desires. By prohibiting discrimination in financing of real estate(see the Finance Clause above) open housing legislation works at the cause of both the limited supply of open housing and the limited ability of negroes to pay for such housing.

Those developers who have attempted to build on a non-discriminatory basis have usually met with limited access to funds. The with-holding of funds may affect the developer at any one of three levels. He may have trouble obtaining equity loans (for purchase of land), loans for construction costs, or mortgages on the individual homes in his development.[9] A denial of funds at any one of these points may prevent completion of a development or prevent its financial success. Both these results act to perpetuate existing patterns of racial discrimination.

The main problem with the financial clauses of these laws is that they are very difficult to enforce. Despite the provisions of the Washington D.C. regulations cited above, it was still possible for the President of the Metropolitan Washington D.C. Mortgage Bankers Association to say in 1965, "Applications from minority groups are generally not considered in areas that are not recognized as being racially mixed."[10]

Perhaps the main value of these laws is that they create educational "demonstration cases" in those areas where they can be enforced. These cases drive home to realators and lending institutions the fallacy of the axiom that "when colored move in, values go down." (One study has demonstrated that in areas entered by negroes, prices for real estate actually go up about 44% of the time, remain unchanged about 41% of the time, and go down only about 15% of the time.)[11] If these demonstration cases, which hopefully will be closely watched by realators and lenders, can demonstrate the economic benefits to be gained by open housing, one of the most serious obstacles to open occupancy of private housing may be removed.

Limitations

The major failing of existing legislation is that it does not, in most cases, deal with the most prevalent area of discrimination in private housing. Any laws adopted on a local level have no effect on other political jurisdictions- the traditional problem of the central city being unable to control its surrounding suburbs. Since it is in the suburbs that the "hard core" of the problems lies (most people who move to the suburbs do so at least in part to avoid the racial problems of the central city) local legislation (most of which has been passed by "central cities" and not suburbs) by-passes the largest area of discrimination.

State legislation helps to correct this lack of coverage but its effect is seriously limited by two factors. First, being at a more distant administrative level, the legislation is more likely to be ignored or unenforced than local legislation. Second, most state statutes specifically exempt the single family owner-occupied dwelling and the owner occupied two or three family dwelling. Unfortunately, it is precisely this type of dwelling which comprises the major portion of the suburbs.

The problem of inability to "get at" the suburbs has been compounded by recent trends in the reapportionment of state legislatures. The shift in political power resulting from the reapportionment of legislatures has resulted in some gains for the central city. However, the suburbs have been the major recipient of the new power. Because of ~~their~~ its added representation the suburban power structure has managed (usually with the aid of the local real estate lobby) to exempt single and two and three family dwellings from legislation.[12]

A significant factor in present resistance to open private housing has unfortunately been created by a portion of the negro community's actions during the summers of 1964-67. The riots and disturbances of these summers (ironically caused in part by housing discrimination) have generally strengthened the arguments of legislators concerning violation of private rights of property and of association by the proposed open housing laws. Private real estate dealers have expressed their concern that previously "neutral" sellers and landlords may have switched from a non-biased or slightly biased stand to a strict policy of "white only," as they have become convinced that integration and the presence of negroes in their area will create discord and possible violence.

Thus, in the area of private housing, a key area for all other aspects of race relations, the negro, realistically speaking, has made little progress. As a result of educational and job discrimination, he lacks the economic opportunity and resources to obtain housing on an equal basis with other Americans. As a result of housing segregation he lacks access to good school systems. Closed housing also deprives him of the opportunity to associate with those persons who are in what one might loosely call the"establishment", the upper middle class businessmen and executives who make a large portion of the employment and economic decisions in the United States. Without an association on an equal basis with these decision makers, it is virtually impossible for the negro to break down the barriers of ignorance and prejudice which confront him in all areas of life. The never ending circle continues.

YOUR HOUSING RIGHTS

live where you want to live

your housing rights

Racial discrimination in the sale or rental of all housing is now illegal under a recent Supreme Court decision upholding an 1866 Act of Congress.* You can be helped if because of your race, any of these things happened:

- You were denied the opportunity to buy or rent a house or apartment.
- You were told a house or an apartment wasn't available when it really was.
- You were offered different terms or conditions of sale or rental than someone else.

take your complaint directly to court

- You can immediately file a suit in a Federal Court. You may wish to consult an attorney or local Legal Aid Society for assistance.
- The Court could stop the sale of the house or the rental of an apartment to someone else. It could help make it possible to buy or rent the housing you want. It could award you damages and court costs or take other actions that could help you.

Or else you can — call on the federal government for help

Under the Civil Rights Act of 1968,† it is illegal to discriminate in the sale or rental of most houses or apartments because of race, color, religion, or national origin. This law calls for action by the Federal Government.

If you have been discriminated against, you can go directly to Court. But at any time within 180 days of the incident you can also do this:

Send a Complaint to the Department of Housing and Urban Development

Address: FAIR HOUSING

— and simply tell what happened.

This Federal Department may do these things:

- Investigate to see if the law has been broken.
- Contact the person accused of the violation and try to get him to end the discrimination.
- Refer your complaint to a State or local Human Rights Commission, if there is one where you live, for investigation and possible resolution.
- Recommend you go to court.

(The nearest HUD Regional Office will be glad to assist you in preparing your complaint. The addresses are on the back of this folder. The nearest FHA office will also assist. There are 76 offices throughout the Nation. Try your telephone book if you live in a large city under: Federal Housing Administration.)

FAIR HOUSING: What It Means To You

A guide for owners, buyers and renters

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
Washington, D.C. 20410

The purpose of the Fair Housing Law is to provide every person in the United States, an equal opportunity to choose housing suited to his needs and financial ability, wherever he would like to live.

To this end, the Fair Housing Law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) bans discrimination based on race, religion, color, or national origin in the sale or rental of housing covered by the law.

Housing Covered by the Law

When the Fair Housing Law went into effect April 11, 1968, it immediately covered the following kinds of housing only if federally assisted:

- Housing for five or more families.

- Multi-unit housing for four or fewer families if the owner does not live in one of the units.

- Single-family houses not owned by a private individual—for example, tract housing developments.

- Single-family houses owned by a private individual who owns more than three houses or who sells more than one house, within any two years, in which he was not the most recent occupant.

(Federally assisted means, in general, housing with mortgages insured by FHA or VA after Nov. 20, 1962, and outstanding as of April 11, 1968; public housing; housing in urban renewal areas; and housing owned by the Federal Government.)

After Dec. 31, 1968, the housing in the above categories will be covered by the law even if not federally assisted. (This means, for example, that all housing sold by tract developers will be covered.)

There can be no discrimination in the advertising of housing for sale or rent. For example, housing can not be advertised as unavailable to members of minority groups. This applies now to all federally assisted housing and to all other housing after Dec. 31, 1968.

After Dec. 31, 1969, the law will also cover all other housing except where a private individual owner sells or rents a single-family house without using a real estate broker.

The law will not apply to the rental of apartments in buildings for up to four families if the owner occupies one.

Religious organizations or private clubs may give certain preferences to their members for housing or lodgings operated for other than a commercial purpose.

Your Rights Under the Fair Housing Law

The law protects you from the following acts where they are based on discrimination on account of race, color, religion, or national origin:

Now

- Refusal to sell, rent, or deal with any person.

- Making different terms and conditions for buying or renting housing.

- Advertising that housing is available only to certain persons.

- Denying housing is available for inspection, sale, or rental when it really is.

- "Blockbusting"—persuading someone to sell housing by telling him minority groups are moving into the area.

Additional Acts Covered After December 31, 1968

- Denying or making different terms for home loans, by commercial lenders such as banks, and savings and loan associations.

- Denying to anyone the use of real estate services, such as a broker or multiple listing service.

Enforcement

Any person who believes he has been discriminated against by an act covered by the Fair Housing Law should:

A. Write to the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

- Complaints must be made within 180 days of the alleged discrimination.

- HUD will investigate, and if it finds that the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try, by informal methods, to end the discrimination.

- In those cases where State or local law gives at least the same protection as Federal law, HUD will first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problem.

- If HUD's efforts or the State or local efforts do not resolve the complaint, the individual may take the matter to court.

B. Or take the complaint directly to court (within 180 days of the alleged discrimination) whether or not a complaint was filed with HUD.

Information about possible discrimination in housing may also be given to the Attorney General of the United States. If his investigation indicates that a pattern or practice of discrimination exists, he may bring a court action to stop it.

In addition to the new fair housing title, Federal law also prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to sell, rent, lease, buy, inherit or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether that housing is covered or exempt under Title VIII. This right was made clear in the Supreme Court decision of Jones v. Mayer (June 1968) and is enforceable by private action in court.

Interference with an individual's rights under this law is illegal. This means that no one may threaten or prevent another person from buying, renting, or selling housing or from making a complaint of discrimination. If violence is threatened or used, criminal prosecution may result.

All HUD Offices (including FHA field offices) will be available to assist in the filing of complaints. For further information or to find the HUD office nearest you, write to:

Find equal opportunity—what it is! what it does.

Department of Housing and Urban Development

History

Establishment of the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity in the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) was authorized by Congress in the Civil Rights Act of 1968.

The new office consolidated the equal opportunity functions and staff of HUD's Intergroup Relations Office and its Equal Opportunity Standards and Regulations Office. It also absorbed some members and functions of the disbanded President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing.

The first Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity, Walter Lewis, was appointed by the President in November 1968. This was a recess appointment, and did not go to the Senate for confirmation. The first Assistant Secretary to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate was Samuel J. Simmons, appointed and confirmed in February, 1970.

The Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity is one of seven Assistant Secretaries in HUD who work directly under Secretary George Romney of HUD.

What Equal Opportunity Does

Major areas of responsibility of this office are:

- fair housing
- contract compliance
- non-discrimination in HUD-financed programs and projects
- job training and business development opportunities for residents in HUD-financed project areas
- equal employment opportunity within HUD.

In general, its mandate is to guarantee equal opportunity in every Federal program offered to the citizenry by this Department.

A large part of its task is also to educate every citizen as to his rights and obligations under the Federal laws pertaining to equal opportunity in HUD programs.

Fair Housing

Probably the best-known Federal law administered by this Office is Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, popularly known as the "fair housing" law. Complaints of discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin in the sale or rental of housing or residential land are handled by Equal Opportunity. They may be sent to HUD's central office in Washington, D. C. or any of the HUD regional offices (see back page). There is an Assistant Regional Administrator for Equal Opportunity in each regional office, and Equal Opportunity staff will soon spread to numerous area offices across the country.

The Equal Opportunity staff is empowered to investigate these complaints, attempt informal, confidential conciliation and to refer evidence of patterns or practices of resistance to fair housing rights to the Department of Justice. Complaints from citizens in states and localities with fair housing laws considered equivalent to the Federal law are referred by the Office of Equal Opportunity to the state or local agencies which enforce these laws.

An educational goal of this office is to inform citizens of another Federal fair housing law, which is not administered by this Office, but can be enforced through the Federal courts. This is the Civil Rights Act of 1866, upheld June 17, 1968 by the U. S. Supreme Court in the case of Jones v. Mayer. It prohibits racial discrimination in the sale or rental of all property and, together, the 1866 law and the 1968 "fair housing" law prohibit all racial discrimination in the sale or rental of all housing in the United States.

Non-Discrimination in HUD-Assisted Programs

Equal Opportunity's Assisted Programs staff administers Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This Act provides that "no person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Most HUD programs—such as urban renewal, public housing, model cities, water and sewer grants, rehabilitation loans and grants, and the new FHA subsidy programs—are covered by Title VI. Those FHA programs which provide mortgage insurance only and no subsidy are not covered by Title VI; they are; however, covered by Executive Order 11063, which is also enforced by the Office of Equal Opportunity.

It is the task of this staff to assure that local public agencies involved in HUD-assisted programs comply with HUD's equal opportunity requirements. One of these requirements is that there be non-discrimination in the selection of sites for housing and in the selection of tenants.

The Assisted Programs staff works to assure that HUD-funded agencies follow a policy of non-discrimination in employment of those who administer their programs as required by their contracts with HUD. It also seeks to ensure that all citizens displaced by a HUD-financed project are provided relocation services and housing without regard to their race, color, religion or national origin.

All complaints of Title VI violations are handled by this staff. It reviews HUD policies and operations, looking for better ways to implement Title VI.

Contract Compliance

Since most HUD programs provide financial assistance for the construction of housing and public facilities, HUD is deeply involved with equal opportunity in federally-assisted contracts. Under the authority of Executive Order 11246, Equal Opportunity's Contract Compliance staff monitors all HUD construction and services contracts with a view to insuring equal employment opportunities for minority workers. This monitoring covers construction contracts, HUD research contracts, "Breakthrough" contracts, area broker contracts and contracts for supplies and materials for public housing.

The Contract Compliance staff, working closely with the Labor Department's Office of Federal Contract Compliance, reviews commitments from contractors applying for HUD assistance. It consistently reviews projects from the planning stage to the project's completion to insure compliance with HUD's policy of non-discrimination and equal opportunity.

HUD puts heavy emphasis on written affirmative action plans for the recruitment and training of minority group members, and it is the responsibility of the Contract Compliance staff to see that affirmative action plans are developed and are strictly adhered to by the contractors. The staff holds pre-construction or pre-award conferences with all contractors and subcontractors to explain the contractors' obligations under the Executive Order prohibiting discrimination.

Job Opportunities and Business Development

A special staff within Equal Opportunity examines HUD programs to determine where new training, new jobs and new business opportunities for project area residents and others can be developed.

Legislative mandate for this program is authorized in two Federal laws: (l) The 1966 Model Cities legislation which calls for "maximum opportunities for employing residents of the (Model Cities) area in all phases of the program, and enlarged opportunities for work and training;"

(2) Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968 (as amended by section 404 of the 1969 HUD Act), which calls for maximum training, employment, and business opportunities for lower-income residents in the area of HUD projects. These residents must be involved, trained, employed and provided business opportunity where possible, in the planning, construction, rehabilitation and operation of the program; and an all-out effort is made to award contracts under these HUD programs to inner-city businesses.

Equal Employment Opportunity in HUD

HUD's Office of Equal Opportunity keeps watch over its own house. Executive Order 11478 prohibits discrimination in Federal employment because of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

The Departmental Equal Employment Opportunity Office within the Equal Opportunity structure administers this Order in HUD's headquarters, regional and FHA Insuring Offices. Its concern is with equal opportunity in every aspect of personnel policy and practice in such matters as the recruiting, hiring, training, upgrading, promoting, assigning, and treatment of HUD personnel.

The Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity is the Director of Equal Employment Opportunity for HUD, and it is his job to keep the Secretary of HUD advised on all matters relating to equal employment (procedures, regulations, and complaints of discrimination within HUD). He also supervises an affirmative action program for equal employment opportunity, consistently seeking new and progressive ideas for the furtherance of this goal.

Dear Mr. Barker:

Enclosed is a list of private open housing organizations of which I have varying degrees of knowledge. I helped set up several of them and have fairly close contact with most of them. I know of a large number of other groups, but I limited my list by 1) not listing groups that are not fairly close to me geographically (on the theory that you will get better information on such groups from someone else) 2) not listing groups which are in a very early stage of organization (have no officers, no mailing address other than personal addresses, no program, etc.) or are so ineffectual or small as to be insignificant.

Also enclosed for your information is a paper which I wrote as part of a recent report to the national office of NCDH. The paper was written for a reader who is aware of our problems and programmatic ideas or has programmatic ideas of his own. Hence the paper concerns itself with why a certain type of private effort is needed in the South. The multitude of problems that need to be solved - but cannot be solved by SRC, LDF, NCDH, etc. as now constituted - are hardly mentioned and techniques for solutions are not discussed. In other words, the paper is grossly incomplete. Nevertheless, I thought you might find it interesting; however, I don't want you to show it to anyone without explaining what I have written in this paragraph or else mark my name off the paper.

I'm looking forward to receiving some material from you.

Sincerely,

John J. Ingle, Jr.

Equal Opportunity In Housing –

You and Your Realtor

A Realtor is strictly bound by law, his Code of Ethics and his Code of Practices.

He will offer property and his services equally to any qualified person without regard to race, color, religion or national origin.

It is unlawful to discriminate in the sale or rental of property by the following:

1. Property owner
2. Landlord
3. Property manager
4. Real estate licensee

The U. S. Supreme Court decision in the case of Jones v. Mayer, June 17, 1968, and the Civil Rights Act of 1968 make it unmistakably clear that discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin by anyone in the sale or rental of property is illegal.

Federal laws are the supreme law of the land. In addition, several California laws regarding discrimination in the sale and rental of real property remain in effect, and are being enforced by state agencies.

	TRUE	FALSE
It is unlawful for a real estate licensee to answer a question from an owner about the race, color, or national origin of a prospective renter or purchaser.	X

THE CREA CODE OF PRACTICES

All local boards of Realtors (more than 172), members of the California Real Estate Association, adopted the CREA Code of Practices shortly after it was recommended in 1964. As revised to reflect changes in federal law, it follows:

CALIFORNIA REAL ESTATE ASSOCIATION

Code of Practices

The _____ (name of Board of Realtors)

subscribes to the policy that a favorable public attitude for equal opportunity in the acquisition of housing can best be accomplished through leadership, example, education and the mutual co-operation of the real estate industry and the public.

The following is hereby stated as the Code of Practices of this Board:

1. It is the responsibility of a Realtor to offer equal service to all clients without regard to race, color, religion, or national origin in the sale, purchase, exchange, rental, or lease of real property.
   a. A Realtor must stand ready to show property to any member of any racial, creedal, or ethnic group.
   b. A Realtor has a legal and ethical responsibility to receive all offers and to communicate them to the property owner.
   c. A Realtor should exert his best efforts to conclude the transaction.
2. Realtors, individually and collectively, in performing their agency functions have no right or responsibility to determine the racial, creedal, or ethnic composition of any neighborhood or any part thereof.
3. Any attempt by a Realtor to solicit or procure the sale or other disposition in residential areas by conduct intended to implant fears in property owners based upon the actual or anticipated introduction of a minority group into an area shall subject the Realtor to disciplinary action. Any technique that induces panic selling is a violation of law and ethics and must be strongly condemned.
4. Each Realtor should feel completely free to enter into a broker-client relationship with persons of any race, creed, or ethnic group.
   a. Any conduct inhibiting said relationship is a specific violation of the rules and regulations of this board, and shall subject the violating Realtor to disciplinary action.

	TRUE	FALSE
the race, color, religion or national origin of a prospective purchaser or tenant.		X
If an owner is willing to carry a trust deed on property being sold, he may not question the race, color, religion or national origin of the prospective borrower.	X
A property owner selling or renting his own property without the aid of an agent may discriminate.		X
An unlicensed manager may discriminate if directed to do so by the property owner.		X

The CREA Code of Practices is a reflection of the current laws regarding a Realtor's responsibility, the violation of which subjects him to discipline by the local board of Realtors.

Property owners, as well as licensees, renting or selling, are covered under the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the U. S. Supreme Court ruling of 1968, California's Unruh Act and Rumford Act, and rulings of the California Attorney General, and are subject to penalties for discriminating.

NOT ALL REAL ESTATE BROKERS ARE "REALTORS"

The term "Realtor" is a registered service mark that only members of the National Association of Real Estate Boards may use. In California, this means that "Realtor" may be used only by members of the California Real Estate Association, which represents the majority of the state's active licensed real estate brokers, and their salesmen.

FAIR PLAY IN HOUSING

Who's My Neighbor?

BY ALGERNON D. BLACK

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PAMPHLET No. 396

Proposal - The following is a synopsis of an outline of a proposal that I, with the help of others, propose to write. Actually I've made fairly much progress on this proposal. Progress to the point that I will begin to need now quite a bit of critical analysis and help. I'm very anxious to get your reaction to the general idea as presented below.

The southeastern United States - excluding Kentucky which I consider to be a midwestern state - is hereafter referred to as "the South".

The South contains a large population living in a modern American milieu.

Regarding the expansion of housing opportunities for people who are poor and/or discriminated against:

- Atlanta, Miami, New Orleans and Memphis can or could (like Denver) take care of themselves. Additionally, these few real cities in the South contain only a small proportion of the South's population.

- Rural areas are hereby deleted from consideration in this synopsis.

- The many "New South" cities (Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh, Winston-Salem, Richmond, Roanoke, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville, Jackson, Mobile, Montgomery, Jacksonville, St. Petersburg, Columbus, Savannah, Columbia) plus about 50 smaller (but not rural) cities have had, combined, less money and programmatic help than the Metro Denver Fair Housing Center has had alone.

- The population of the cities referred to in the paragraph immediately above is very much greater than the metropolitan population of Denver.

The southern cities (under consideration as defined above) are of manageable size and have not yet developed the almost unsolvable racial/housing problems that exist in the nation's large metropolitan areas.

The cities under consideration have terrible race relations problems but not nearly so terrible as most non-southerners think and not nearly so terrible as those in the nation's larger metropolitan areas. (I was interested to note yesterday an Associated Press release that James Meredith - who I would think would never want to cross the Mississippi border again - has moved himself and his family to Mississippi because "on a person-to-person, day-to-day basis, the South is a more livable place for blacks than any other place in the nation.")

The South has been neglected in regard to racial/housing problems.

The South is different and needs special efforts and techniques. (In this brief synopsis I am obviously not documenting my statements but here let me document just one way in which the South is different. About 30 states have statewide open housing laws - none are in the South. About 400 municipalities have open housing ordinances - none are in the South with one exception - Chapel Hill, N. C. - but Chapel Hill is a peculiar community and even their ordinance is very weak and further Chapel Hill is only an insignificant village. Aside from not having the laws themselves we also lack the state and municipal funding and staff for promoting expanded housing opportunities that often are the outgrowth of these laws.)

The South has the best potential for solving racial/housing problems and thereby setting an example for the rest of the nation to follow. (Not to mention the fact that the South needs to solve this problem in order to achieve its potential as the finest and most attractive economic and environmental area in the world.)

If neglect continues much longer this potential will pass.

Private efforts are needed (imperatively) to solve southern racial/housing problems. ("...Suitable living environments and stable, racially inclusive occupancy patterns do not occur through law or by chance. They result from motivation, imaginative planning and painstaking management." - - George Schermer. Those of us making, or thinking of making, private efforts better not count on federal, state and local governments for motivation, imaginative planning and painstaking management.)

funding? role of SRC?

A southwide - or a several statewide - private effort is needed; sponsored and run by well established professional organizations (NCDH, LDF, American Friends Service Committee, Southern Regional Council, etc.) The staff should consist of housing/civil rights specialists, attorneys, demographers and planners.

Funding should be sought from the usual sources; however, my proposal offers opportunities to tap sources that have not been available to us:

Southern Foundations have been negligent in regard to southern racial/housing problems. HOME in Raleigh, perhaps the first and best southern fair housing group, has had no success with southern foundations. Winston-Salem Citizens For Fair Housing has had no assistance from southern foundations despite the fact that two of the largest foundations in the nation are located in Winston-Salem and they both put special emphasis on Winston-Salem problems. I believe the effort that I am proposing will unlock the coffers of southern foundations because 1) our geographically larger effort won't be quite so "close to home" 2) our effort is more viable (more attractive) than local efforts.

Law. The program I propose should encourage the unlocking of state and municipal funds. As I pointed out above, the lack of southern laws causes southern states to do without the governmental funding and staff that non-southern states enjoy.

Denver/South. My remarks concerning Denver and the South should affect the thinking of some funding sources.

Organizations of various types and businesses that have a special interest in the South and are progressive enough to envision the South's potential - if our racial troubles are improved - would be sources of funds.

Recently I testified in a school desegregation case (a case that was related to the legal effort that led to the recent and famous Supreme Court decision in Swann v. Charlotte/Mecklenburg). We had discovered an old zoning ordinance that had provided a specific zoning classification for blacks and provided that blacks not live in any other zoning classification. Using this and other evidence we were trying to prove that present de facto segregation is such a direct result of past de jure segregation that they are, in effect, one and the same thing. Later a Legal Defense Fund attorney phoned me to ask if I would do research in Raleigh that might lead to the discovery of items like the zoning situation mentioned above. I said no as there was no way I could add another duty to my then current workload. My point is simply that we need more staff in the South in order to effectively realize our potential.

The southern racial/housing situation is only a little bit explosive now but give us a few more years and we will really blow and lose our fantastic potential or at least postpone it for several decades.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

QUAKER TESTIMONIES IN DAILY LIFE

by Frederick B. Tolles

Just a little over three hundred years ago, a perplexed and anxious young man was wandering about the English Midlands seeking peace of mind, searching for something that would give rest to his troubled soul and a sense of meaning and purpose to his daily life. He passed from one spiritual counselor to another, but he came away from each with his hunger unappeased, his doubts and uncertainties multiplied. There was none among them who could "speak to his condition." But when all his hopes in men were gone, he heard a voice which said, "There is one, even Christ Jesus, that can speak to thy condition," and when he heard it, his heart leaped for joy. For this, he said, he knew "experimentally"--that is, by direct experience with self-evident certainty, as one perceives a clear light shining in a dark place.

This inner light--this sense of immediate divine leading--brought peace to his soul and an end to his seeking. For he had found that which alone could integrate his life by relating it directly to the divine purpose for the world. The rest of his days were dedicated to an unceasing effort to "walk in the Light" and to help others to find it for themselves. The young man's name was George Fox. The group of seekers and finders whom he gathered about him were at first called "Children of the Light" and later The Religious Society of Friends.

That was three centuries ago. Does the light which George Fox discovered "experimentally" still shine in the hearts of men? Can we in our time have faith in immediate divine guidance for our daily living? The Society of Friends, in common with many spiritually minded folk in other religious bodies, says "Yes." Even today, in the midst of the confusion of our distracted world, God speaks, if we will but listen.

Silence

Hence the value which Quakers place upon silence--that "silence of all flesh" in which the clamorings of our own insistent thoughts and desires are mementarily stilled. "The silence we value," wrote Caroline Stephen, an English Friend of the last century, "is not the mere outward silence of the lips. It is a deep quietness of heart and mind, a laying aside of all preoccupation with passing thing...a resolute fixing of the heart upon that which is unchangeable and eternal." Or, as a Quaker writer of George Fox's time put it, it is "an holy dependence of the mind upon God."

The curative and refreshing power of silence is no peculiar discovery of Friends. The word of the Lord to Isaiah the Prophet twenty-seven centuries ago was "In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength." And in the United Nations building in New York a room has been set aside to which harassed delegates can retire for silent reflection and prayer.

If we would attain that serenity which is proof against the blusterings and storms of life, we must constantly find times in our daily lives for quiet retirement, for turning inward, for waiting upon the Lord and looking to Him for help and guidance. The late Rufus M. Jones, best known and most beloved of American Quakers, once described what can happen in such a period of silent waiting. He used the figure of a ship in a lock, shut in by gates before and behind, its great engines idling, its speed reduced to naught. The ship is no longer going anywhere. Yet all the time the water is rising underneath and when at length the gates are opened, the ship sails forth on a higher level than before.

There is no better place to discover and practice the use of silence than in the home. Here are some of the Queries which Friends are accustomed to ask themselves concerning their home life:

> Do you make a place in your daily life for inward retirement and communion with the Divine Spirit?
>
> Do you make your home a place where friendship, peace, and refreshment of spirit are found, and do you have regular periods of family worship?

Simplicity

The response to these Queries leads directly to one of the major testimonies of the Society of Friends: the testimony of simplicity - the simplicity of Truth, as Quakers like to put it.

If we are to have time and the right disposition for inward retirement and silent worship, it is essential that we simplify our lives.

Now, this testimony of simplicity runs counter to one of the dominant drives in our civilization - the drive towards the multiplication of things. It says plainly that we have more important concerns in this life than the acquisition of material things. So Friends endeavor to simplify their wants and tastes in clothing, in the furnishing of their homes, in creature comforts and means of recreation.

Anthony Benezet, an eighteenth century Quaker, was a good Samaritan to the Indians and the Negro slaves. In a store one day, as he was looking about him at the variety of costly articles on the shelves, he was heard to exclaim: "What a number of beautiful things are here - that I don't want!" John Woolman, another friend of the slave and the Indian, was a tailor and shop-keeper; so successfully did he work at his calling that he found himself becoming "encumbered" with material things. So he voluntarily cut down the volume of his business and asked his customers to take their trade elsewhere. By thus simplifying his outward affairs, he gave himself time to cultivate the inward life and to devote himself to the service of others.

Two of the Queries by which Friends examine into the quality of their daily lives are concerned with this testimony:

> Do you keep to simplicity and moderation in your speech, your manner of living, and your pursuit of business?
> Are you careful to keep your business and your outward activities from absorbing time and energy that should be given to spiritual growth and the service of your religious society?

The Quaker way of life emphasizes simplicity of living and the practice of listening in silence for the voice of God. But it has never meant flight from the hard problems of every day life. Quite the contrary. Though rooted in spiritual inwardness, Quaker beliefs flower in action as Friends seek to carry into practice the intimations of God's will which have come to them in the silence. "True godliness," said William Penn, "does not turn men out of the world, but enables them to live better in it, and excites their endeavors to mend it."

The basic Quaker testimonies for human equality and for peace have broad social and international implications. But they also have meaning for our daily lives.

Equality

Friends believe that God bestows a measure of His spirit impartially upon all His children, regardless of sex, race, or class. It follows from this that all men are brothers. This is no mere pious platitude to give lip service to and then forget in the bustle and struggle of daily life. Thousands of early Friends suffered stiff fines and stiffer jail sentences because they refused on conscientious grounds to take off their hats or use flattering forms of address to social superiors. And during the Second World War, Quakers in Germany were thrown into prison and concentration camps for trying to protect Jews from persecution and refusing to give any countenance to wicked nonsense about "superior races."

The belief that all men and women are equal in the sight of God moved Friends to take the lead in the abolition of slavery. Acting upon the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount and the prompting of their own inward Guide, they began with themselves, and banished slaveholding from their own membership. Only when their own hands were clean, did they stand before the world and urge others to sacrifice the property which they held in human beings.

Today slavery is gone, but other barriers to human equality still remain. Beginning again with themselves, Friends are working to break down some of the walls of discrimination which separate man from man. The American Friends Service Committee, for instance, tries through reason and good will to open channels of employment in white-collar jobs for men and women who have been rebuffed by discriminatory employment practices. In American Friends Service Committee voluntary work camps, boys and girls are provided an opportunity to give themselves in the service of their underprivileged or forgotten fellow men - sharecroppers, migrant laborers, slum dwellers, patients in mental hospitals. By working with their hands in the midst of areas of tension they gain new insights into the social and economic problems of our society. Old prejudices are swept away in the fellowship of manual labor and communal living.

This is not mere action for action's sake. At its best, when done "under concern" as Quakers like to put it, such acts of shared living are efforts to put meaning into the religious truth that all men are equally children of God.

From time to time, Friends are accustomed to remind themselves of their testimony for equality by asking themselves such searching Queries as these:

> What are you doing ... to insure equal opportunities in social and economic life for those who suffer discrimination because of race, creed, or social class?
> In all your relations with others do you treat them as brothers and equals?

Peace

For three centuries, the Society of Friends has borne a testimony against war. A few Quakers, like William Penn, have occupied positions of public responsibility from which they have been able to lead a whole people into paths of peace. Other Friends, finding themselves at points of international tension, have been able to exert a reconciling influence as a result of their known policy of ministering to human need in wartime on both sides of the lines.

In 1948, when Arab and Jew were fighting bitterly in Israel, a Quaker relief worker went with an armed Israeli soldier to visit a needy Arab family. When they got to the Arab home, the soldier said he would wait outside: "They won't want to see me," he remarked. The relief worker went inside, and in a few minutes returned with the father of the Arab family, who invited the soldier in. Surprised and touched by this gesture of good will, the soldier entered the Arab hovel, leaned his gun against the wall, and sat down to a cup of coffee with the family. Unreasoning hostility was replaced by friendliness. Suspicion and fear were allayed by the reconciling influence of a person of good will.

Most of us may feel that we will never have such an opportunity to make our influence felt as a reconciling force between peoples. But peace grows out of love and trust and generosity and good will, and if these are not part of our individual daily lives, we can hardly expect peace in our time. It is fatally easy to fall back on the argument that there would be peace in the world if only the "bad men in the Kremlin" would say the word. Quakers have always been unable to shift the responsibility for peace to someone else. It is for us to say the word. We can start where we are to live, as George Fox did, "in the life and power that takes away the occasion of all wars." As individuals we can abide in love with our neighbors, banishing all traces of envy or jealousy, suspicion or greed or hatred. We can examine into our motives, as John Woolman said, to see "whether the seeds of war have any nourishment" in our attitudes towards other people and towards our material possessions.

Perhaps all of us should ask ourselves from time to time these Quaker Queries:

> What are you doing .. to understand and remove the causes of war and develop the conditions and institutions of peace?
> Do you live in the life and power which takes away the occasion of all wars? Do you seek to take your part in the ministry of reconciliation between individuals, groups, and nations?

The Queries relating to the basic Quaker testimonies of simplicity, silence, equality, and peace give us an outline of the individual's proper relationship to God and to his fellow men. If we can make these testimonies our own, then our daily lives will have richer meaning for each of us and for society as a whole.

Minority housing: a puzzling market starts to shape up

Most of the terrible things predicted to follow the two-year-old presidential order on nondiscrimination in the sale of federally assisted housing have not happened. But neither have most of the great gains expected for minority housing. The President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing has accomplished little, because its enormous education-and-persuasion assignment got only a token budget and staff under former Pennsylvania Gov. David L. Lawrence.

But working with the idea of the Negro as a housing market has taught many builders a lot. Now, at least, we know the most important questions to ask:

1. If a suburban subdivision is honestly offered to all comers, will Negroes flock to buy? No.
2. If you sell any houses to Negroes, will you automatically lose your white buyers? No.
3. Does subdivision size affect the problem. Yes.
4. What income group is the strongest in the nonwhite housing market? Upper middle and above.
5. What are attitudes of FHA and leading mortgage lenders toward minority homebuyers? Mixed.
6. Can you build large sales volume in Negro housing? Yes. In integrated projects? Yes—but.
7. Is the desire for new housing being encouraged among Negroes by their community leaders? No.
8. Has any large integrated project done well? Yes.

HOUSE & HOME interviewed builders from coast to coast. Some were pioneers, others newcomers to the Negro market. For more detailed answers based on their experience, plus a look at an award-winning integrated project, see the next six pages.

COURTEOUS SALESMEN are important for first-time buyers entering the new house market.

Builders, North and South, have tackled the minority market—and gained some hard-learned answers

The significance of these answers is that they are based, not on social theory, but on the hard realities of the marketplace.

1. Negro families have been slow to buy new suburban housing even when it is open to all buyers. In St. Louis, Builder Alfred H. Mayer made only seven of his 800 1964 sales (prices: $15,000 to $30,000) to Negro buyers. In Wilmington, Del., only a handful of Negroes have taken advantage of an open-occupancy policy quietly adopted by local builders. And in Baltimore, Marvin Gilman, builder of Sutton Place, a luxury apartment with an open-occupancy renting policy, reports: "When rumors were going around that over 40% of our tenants were Negroes, I was still trying to sign my first lease with a Negro family."

What's restraining Negro buyers? Builder Mayer says simply, "I'm sure the slowness of their move into new houses is due to economics." But other industry leaders point to another reason: fear of moving into an unfamiliar—and perhaps unfriendly—environment.

"For a Negro to move to the suburbs is to break away from his group and his security," says President Sheldon Rose of Edward Rose & Sons, Detroit builders. And Executive Director James Reynolds of the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission notes: "The average Negro lacks confidence that he could adjust to a new suburban community. I believe most Negroes prefer to live in town near their friends and social interests."

2. Large subdivisions can absorb a few Negro buyers without any appreciable effect on sales to whites. Builder Mayer did find that he often had to resell the lots next door to Negro buyers, and he has had some other cancellations. But he says, "Our volume lets us absorb this until we find unprejudiced white buyers."

Philadelphia Builder Hyman Korman has sold more than 100 houses in three months in his new Blue Bell Manor development in the Eastwick redevelopment area although the proportion of Negro buyers has held steady at about 7% to 8%. In Detroit there is a long waiting list, both Negro and white (although no notation is kept of race), for Sheldon Rose's Chateaufort townhouses. Eichler Homes' open-occupancy policy (H&H, Feb., '64) has never hurt sales in its many California subdivisions. And ten Negro buyers had no effect on the runaway success of Bill Levitt's 1,905-house project at Matawan, N.J.

3. Small projects (20 to 30 houses) may have a much more serious sales problem with integration—even when the percentage of Negro buyers is no greater than in a large development. One St. Louis builder, Fisher & Frichtel, built a 35-unit townhouse project in St. Charles, Mo., then found that not enough whites would buy, and not enough Negro prospects could qualify. Many builders—particularly in the South—avoid building for Negroes because they fear that it will hurt their sales to whites, even in completely different areas. Rejection by white buyers, plus inability to find enough qualified Negroes, is the biggest fear of small builders entering the open-housing field.

4. Sales to Negroes are strongest in the upper-middle and upper-income brackets. St. Louis Builder Mayer's seven Negro buyers all bought his same top-priced, bestselling model. In Atlanta, where the market for Negro housing is strong (although the segregated pattern is unbroken), Alexander Associates sold 28 houses at $25,000 to $45,000 in the first two months after opening an 88-home subdivision. The same company is now starting an apartment for Negroes that will command rentals of $110 to $130—about $40 higher than present local levels.

Los Angeles Builder Ray A. Watt has sold 1,200 houses to Negroes in ten years—almost all at $21,000 to $27,000. And Cleveland's Federal Homes has moved into the $24,000-to-$30,000 custom market. Previously Federal sold some 500 houses in six years by tapping a vast pool of Negro veterans who had not used their VA eligibility.

In the low-income minority market, two excellent townhouse projects, built in Wilmington, Del., by NAHB Vice President and Treasurer Leon Weiner and Local NAHB President Sidney Paul, took more than five years to sell out. Says Weiner: "I think we should have aimed at a higher-price market." California's Ned Eichler—who, with his father, pioneered open housing—says, "There is no big market for low-cost new housing for minority groups in California."

5. Mortgage money can still be a problem, although FHA has liberalized its credit criteria for minority buyers. Wilmington's Sidney Paul complains, "If FHA had used different credit criteria from the beginning, my subdivision would have been closed out a year ago. Now that they have changed and are demonstrating their moral responsibility, one of the most disheartening things is to send FHA-approved cases to large lenders and have them rejected because of credit disapproval. I had to shop these cases around to many lenders and pay exhoribitant points to get them placed. I feel this is a sad situation."

On the other hand, Bankers Mortgage Co. of California has agreed to accept all FHA- or VA-approved buyers in Barrett Homes' award-winning Richmond subdivision (see p. 80) for placement with major lenders like Bank of America and the Bowery Savings Bank. And Builder Ray Watt notes, "Lenders are gaining confidence and knowledge of the credit risks involved. In the past we had to put more of our own money into the program and pay higher fees for this financing."

Philip Emmer of Gainesville, Fla., has set up an experimental program (NEWS, Jan.) with FHA and the Kate Maremont Foundation to permit homebuying by families who do not pass credit checks but whom the builder considers good housing risks. Back of Emmer's effort is his conviction that low-income minority buyers should have credit criteria different from those of middle-class white buyers (less emphasis on retail credit judgments, garnishments, used-car repossession, etc.). Most upper-income Negro buyers now qualify as easily as whites for mortgage money.

Louisville Builder James S. Taylor notes that FHA and VA tend to downgrade a second source of family income—a significant point because among Negro homebuyers many wives hold jobs (see p. 82). But, Taylor says, conventional lenders accept working wives or second jobs as reliable income sources.

6. Some builders report impressive sales in the Negro market—but only in all-Negro developments. Chicago's Arch Hermanns has delivered 900 houses in his Maple Park project, where prices range from $16,500 to $40,000. He finds no objection that all buyers are nonwhites.

"They're like the foreign communities of a few years back, where national groups preferred to live together," says Hermanns. "I find little interest in integration in my projects. All the buyers want is the right to pull themselves up by the bootstraps without outside interference."

Allan R. Hoffman, president of St. Louis County Realty Co., has built and sold 350 houses ($13,950 to $38,500)—mostly on vacant tracts. He says his biggest problem is finding land acceptable to his increasingly critical buyers.

Both of Ray Watt's Los Angeles projects are all Negro, but "not by design," says Watt. "We just build houses and sell them to whomever wants them." Watt's projects consistently draw about an equal number of Negro and white lookers—primarily because he never mentions race in his advertising. He expects to make roughly 2,000 sales to Negroes in the next six years. In Charlotte, N.C., Builder Charles Ervin sold 46 houses averaging $15,200 within six months after opening a new subdivision. He had started with a lower-priced Negro project and found that

Here are four examples of houses that builders are selling to the minority market

IN ST. LOUIS Builder Allan Hoffman's $15,950 model is in the local all-brick tradition.

IN MIAMI Builder Arthur Shandloff put this four-bedroom, $13,400 model downtown.

IN SAGINAW, MICH. American Redevelopment Corp. sold 10% of its duplexes to white buyers.

many prospects wanted better houses, on bigger lots.

7. Negro leaders still give secondary importance to new housing —integrated or not. Jack Wood, associate executive director of the National Committee against Discrimination in Housing, says the Negro community has given highest priority to education and job opportunities but claims that government—both local and federal —could do more to encourage integrated housing: "If they had spent the same effort in the past two years to break down segregation in housing that they spent for 25 years in encouraging it, we would have gotten a lot further."

A ten-city HOUSE & HOME roundup of builders in the Negro market brought unanimous agreement that the Negro community was doing little to motivate families to buy the new housing their incomes would permit. Even in states with strong fair-housing laws, few minority families are seriously trying to buy new houses (see above). There is some feeling that Negro community leaders (clergymen, politicians, businessmen, etc.) are not too eager to see the most stable families abandon the central city for suburbia.

One Miami builder, Arthur Shandloff, has sponsored Sunday afternoon lectures in the city's Negro area to convince potential buyers that they can have the housing they need at down payments and terms they can afford. And Ray Watt says, "Many Negroes don't believe they are qualified to buy, so the salesman must prove it to them."

8. Major integrated subdivisions are still rare. Even when many white prospects are attracted to open-occupancy projects, they turn away when they see a preponderance of Negro buyers. But whites are likely to put aside their objections when terms are better than those normally available. For example, Detroit's American Redevelopment Corp. sold 10% of its 221d3 houses (above) to white buyers. The same pattern is true in New York State, where Mitchell-Lama middle-income projects attract buyers and renters of all races. Says one builder: "There is a point where self-interest outweighs prejudice."

ROOFLINE VARIATIONS and various building types eliminate the monotony that characterizes many tract developments.

This may well be the best integrated subdivision in the entire country

But it didn't get that way overnight; there are no instant successes in this field. Builders Richard and John Barrett put ten years' effort into Richmond, Calif.'s Plaza I and II, and Parkview urban redevelopment areas (above), before they could say, "The operation is finally making money."

After a full decade, they now have 450 houses sold, at prices that range from $14,750 to $32,000. "Today we're selling over 100 houses a year, and the rate is increasing," says Barrett Vice President John Tolan. "Also, we will soon start a 357-unit 221d3 rental apartment which we will sell to the Kate Maremont Foundation (NEWS, Jan.) under a turnkey arrangement. This should add to the appeal of the entire project."

Like all pioneers in urban renewal and the uncharted world of integrated housing, Barrett found that delays and red tape in public agencies, plus gaps in marketing knowledge, doubled estimated construction time. Their four projects are on waterfront land previously used for temporary World War II housing. It was a full year from the day they bid on the first section until they took title; it was another full year before their first sale.

Vice President Tolan feels that there are two big reasons for the success of the project today. The first lies in the changed attitude of major mortgage lenders. Where previously FNMA was the only market for their mortgages, they now have $3 million in commitments through Bankers Mortgage Co. of California for placement with Bowery Savings Bank and a few others, plus $1½ million direct from the Bank of America. Bankers Mortgage is paying the full FNMA price of 98¼. But even more important, they have agreed to accept every buyer approved by VA or FHA, and will give consideration to the income brought in by working wives, as well as the often-held second job of the husband.

"Second big reason for our increased success this year," says Tolan, "is the increasing number of buyer referrals from our residents. We have been able to cut our advertising and promotion costs and spend less to attract good prospects."

Barrett's experience has taught them four important rules for success in an inter-racial project:

RACIAL CHART shows no strong pattern of clumping in Parkview. Cul-de-sac land and street plan replaced the original gridiron.

TWO-STORY HOUSE was a bestseller at $17,300. It has an offset entry, left, double garage, three bedrooms and 1½ baths.

1. Get the best in design. All the houses in the three areas were designed by top architects, Donald Hardison and Vernon Demars, and have won many honors (including a First Honor Award in the 1960 Homes for Better Living design program).

2. Don't build to the bottom of the market. With houses ranging up to $32,000, both Barrett and the Richmond Redevelopment Agency are obviously aiming at middle- and upper-middle income families. In fact, the agency bought up and demolished 60 post-war minimum-quality houses in the area that did not meet the standards they had set for the Barrett houses.

3. Don't try to achieve some artificial quota. White prospects' decisions to buy are not based on a token number of nonwhites, but on the appeal and value of the housing. "We tried to save every interested white prospect, but never turned down a nonwhite because of percentage. We don't believe such juggling can work."

4. Use the same sales methods as in any subdivision. Barrett sales personnel are trained to treat all customers alike, and the model house area has four to six furnished, landscaped models open at all times to give buyers the widest choice.

Barrett is still warily assessing some possible hazards to volume sales, principally the depth of the market for integrated housing in their higher price brackets. Although 50% of their Negro buyers are professionals or technicians, statistics (p. 82) indicate that only 3% of San Francisco-Oakland Negroes are in those occupations, which means they may have already sold most of these prospects. But the growth of job opportunities in education and government for nonwhites in the area convinces Barrett that the 3% figure may not reflect the percentage today—and tomorrow.

Another concern is a rise in the average age of their buyers from 33 in 1958 to 40 years old today, since this age group is a declining part of the population. They feel the rental units in the 22ld3 apartments will help them attract more young families.

One solid advantage: they approach the future with accurate, in-depth information on their buyers, six years in the gathering.

For a look at 14 significant charts on the makeup, occupations and incomes of 190 of Barrett's buyers, please turn page.

These charts show that integrated housing buyers are much like all buyers

JOB OPPORTUNITIES are growing, as shown by the increase in the clerical and sales fields and the drop in laboring categories.

HOUSE PRICES show sales' concentration in medium-price range but lowest-price model ($14,650) was dropped for lack of sales.

FAMILY SIZE is similar to any population cross-section. Only 7.5% have four or more children, and 81.8% have two or fewer.

HOUSE DESIGN breakdown reflects growth of sales to Negroes. Lower incomes have kept them from buying duplexes and triplexes.

SECOND-TIME BUYERS now account for three out of ten sales, reflecting equity built up in earlier purchases of existing houses.

NATIONWIDE DROP in VA sales is duplicated in Barrett buyers, but percentage of conventional loans is lower than national average.

Here is the best study yet of buyers in a major integrated subdivision

The statistical information dramatized in the charts on these two pages may well be Barrett Construction's greatest contribution to the market for open occupancy housing. For the first time, a reliable sampling (190 families) has been made of occupational and financial similarities and differences among white, Negro and oriental buyers in the same project. Even more important, the continuing research program shows some changing patterns in the six years between 1958 and 1964—changes that builders can project into present and future marketing tactics.

Of special importance is the growing number of nonwhite families who have moved into the white-collar and managerial ranks, primarily in government. Two-thirds of Parkview's Negro buyers are professional, technical or clerical workers, although only 11% of the Negroes in the San Francisco Bay area fall into this category. FHA and some mortgage lenders acknowledge what Barrett's research proves: working wives are common in a large percentage of minority-group homebuyers, and their incomes can and should be considered in qualifying for a mortgage.

That Word "Ghetto"

If you want to solve a problem, it helps to know what the problem is. We are prompted to make this elementary observation because a lot of social resources are going into floundering efforts to solve misunderstood problems. We are thinking particularly of housing segregation.

It would help to clarify this harmful and harrowing situation if in discussing it we could eliminate the word "ghetto." It befogs the problem and so impedes progress toward a solution. "Ghetto," a word of Italian origin, originally meant a section of a city in which Jews were required by governmental authority to live. What is objectionable about applying the term to the Harlems and Wattses of the U.S. is that it fosters misunderstanding of the social dynamics of segregation. Housing segregation is widely thought of as resulting from an unwillingness on the part of whites to sell or rent to Negroes. In keeping with the misconception, the remedy is misconceived as being some use of governmental power to compel whites to sell or rent to Negroes. Open-housing laws, including the housing provision of the pending civil-rights bill, represent efforts to apply this supposed remedy.

Worthy as the intentions behind them may be, they are not likely to achieve much. The basic social force that creates housing segregation is not so much white unwillingness to sell or rent to Negroes as white unwillingness to move into a neighborhood once Negroes have begun moving into it. Those most addicted to use of the word "ghetto" appear to be unaware that most of the all-Negro neighborhoods in U.S. cities were once all-white. In each such neighborhood, there must have been a first Negro family, then a second, and so on. The neighborhood was, temporarily, "integrated." The problem, clearly, was not that nobody would sell or rent to a Negro. The problem was that as whites moved away, no white replacements moved in, and so, inexorably, the neighborhood became, in the jargon, a "ghetto." This sad and ugly story has unfolded on thousands of city blocks over the years, and it will keep on unfolding, in cities and suburbs, as long as those who propose the public solutions for housing segregation fail to see the problem clearly.

The problem is not how to open all-white neighborhoods to Negroes, but how to keep them, once integrated, from becoming all-Negro neighborhoods. The motivations that make owners of property in an all-white neighborhood unwilling to sell or rent to Negroes would greatly diminish in force if the owners and their neighbors could feel sure that replacement of whites by Negroes would stop before the neighborhood became predominantly Negro.

Clearly, what is needed is some social arrangement for encouraging whites to be willing to buy houses or lease apartments in neighborhoods that Negroes have moved into. We do not suggest that working out such an arrangement will be easy, but, as we said, it helps to recognize the problem.

Spread Low-Rental Housing Throughout City, Negroes Ask

By ALEX COFFIN

After a two-hour tour of eight possible low-income rental housing sites, Negro leaders told Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. calmly but firmly that the city should spread such housing throughout the city—including the northeast.

And, the Negroes added, the city should work with school and park officials to insure that youngsters moved into the low-income rental housing will have proper recreational and educational facilities.

Mayor Allen and other city officials talked for about an hour with the local leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People after the tour.

Allen and the NAACP leaders were meeting for the second time after critical words were passed back and forth a few weeks ago. Cecil Alexander, chairman of the Housing Resources Committee, was instrumental in setting up the meetings.

In addition to Allen and Alexander, touring were Dr. A. M. Davis, president of the local NAACP branch; the Rev. Sam Williams, past president of the same group; the Rev. Amos Holmes, chairman of the NAACP's housing committee; M. B. Satterfield, executive director of the Atlanta Housing Authority, and Gilbert H. Boggs Jr., also with the authority.

Satterfield told the Negroes that to provide housing as quickly as it is needed, the city must rely on private developers and the developers simply haven't found suitable sites at a reasonable price.

Davis called on the mayor to back the efforts of the Community Relations Commission to stabilize racially mixed neighborhoods in the Cascade-Sewell Road area.

Davis, while criticizing the housing authority's past record, said after the session, "We're not negative. We want housing built, but to the advantage of the poor."

He expressed hope for future developments and added that Robert C. Weaver, secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Affairs, had assured him he (Weaver) was checking into the complaints of discrimination in housing here.

LOOK AGAIN

"Tell them to look again," Williams said.

When Satterfield said the city was doing all it could to find sites throughout the city, Williams quizzed him in detail. "This is important if you subscribe to the principle of finding sites all over the city!"

Davis told a reporter after the meeting that, although the tour was informative, what he saw was "far short of what we want." He added that he believes federal officials have made it clear to Mayor Allen that he must work with the Negroes.

Satterfield said that insuring that adequate schools and parks would be located adjacent to new low-income housing sometimes is "a little beyond us."

HITS CRAMMING

"You've got to stop hiding behind divisions of government" to perpetuate situations of Negro youngsters "crammed into schools and being on double sessions," Williams said.

"Should we not build until we get promises?" Satterfield asked.

"Do more to get the schools committed," Williams said. "We've no more room to swallow the type of education our youngsters have been forced to accept in the past."

Holmes assured the mayor that there will be "no effort on our part to block projects just to block them."

Opposition To Housing Held Serious

To reach the goal of 16,800 new low-income housing units in the next five years, the city must overcome opposition of single family home owners, problems of zoning and demands to spread the housing throughout the city, a city official believes.

Col. Malcolm Jones, city housing coordinator, said that, of 14,766 total low-income units proposed, 6,504 are in "serious difficulty . . . due to objections from various sources."

Jones said of the 7,109 "in sight," 1,243 have run into opposition.

Developers have requested a meeting with city aldermen to discuss problems, including zoning, faced by the developers. The date hasn't been decided, Jones said.

Jones told the executive committee of the Housing Resources Committee last week that "There's no question that the land (for low income housing) is there, but not where people want or zoned for it."

The Department of Housing and Urban Development's policy of discouraging location of public housing in areas of racial concentration is another problem, Jones said.

Jones cited figures from the City Building department on total permits issued for all types of housing to show that units aren't being built as fast as needed. He gave these figures for permits for total dwelling units: 1963, 9,129; 1964, 3,829; 1965, 2,656; 1966, 2,382, and through March of 1967, 937.

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM
ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETING

5:30 P.M., Tuesday, February 27, 1968
Conference Room, Georgia Council on Human Relations
52 Fairlie Street, Atlanta

MINUTES

Attending: Henrietta Canty, Henry deGive, Richard Hocking, Verdree Lockhart, Winifred McPhedran, Chilton Ryan, Moreland Smith, Ralph Spillman, Alice Washington. Guest: Ike Saporta. Staff: Noyes Collinson.

A buffet supper was catered. Because of the delay of Chairman Henry deGive in arriving, Noyes Collinson presided. Certain items which had arisen since the agenda was mailed were included in the revised agenda.

39.1 Housing Staff: In discussing possible sources of recruitment of candidates to succeed Xernona Clayton on the housing desk, there was consensus that if there is to be a two-man staff, it should be bi-racial. However, if the budget restrictions make possible only one staff person, there was also consensus that race is less important than finding the best person for the post and that his or her "commitment" to the task plus qualifications as to skills and experience should be the determining factors. There was general agreement that the housing picture in Atlanta at the moment insofar as open occupancy is involved is crucial and the momentum which has developed should be sustained and every possible opportunity taken advantage of.

39.2 Fair Housing Committees - SWAP: Henrietta Canty reported that there appears to be less panic in that area of SWAP which is predominately white. A good atmosphere prevails and there is more neighborhood cooperation. In response to a question about SWAP's morale resulting from recent zoning hearings, Mrs. Canty said that the decisions of the Zoning Committee not to grant some of the applications were accepted with satisfaction by the residents.

Moreland Smith doubts whether because of prevailing economic factors and the law of supply and demand, it will be possible to hold the line, i.e., the Negro-white ratio at its present level. Economic growth under this "law" is essential to the future of not only the City of Atlanta but Metropolitan Atlanta. In his opinion, a metropolitan program for open occupancy with federal backing is a vital factor in producing results and in aiding growth under the law of supply and demand.

Druid Hills was reported on by Winifred McPhedran who referred to a recent luncheon debate at Emory University between Jimmy Jordan, Chairman of the Druid Hills Fair Housing Committee, and Joe Hires, President of the Decatur Civic Association. A controversy developed in which Hires stated that he would not assist a Negro to find housing in the Emory area. The Dean of the School at this point, so we understand, "lost his cool" and supported Jordan vociferously. We are advised that President Atwood will address the Decatur Civic Association on the 5th of March at which time it is hoped that he will defend Emory's action in its stance on open occupancy. Ada Fort, Dean of the Emory School of Nursing, has called the Druid Hills Committee asking for help in finding suitable living quarters for a super-qualified nurse and instructor who has been offered a position on the Nursing School faculty. We do not have her name but she states that she does not wish to become a "cause celebre" and unless she will be received in the community as would be any other human being, she will not accept the position. Her husband is a minister with a Ph.D. and is doing graduate work at Emory. They wish to place their six-year-old child in an integrated school. The Druid Hills Committee will take responsibility for trying to help Dean Fort in locating suitable quarters.

Suggestion was offered that the Druid Hills group might approach the Emory faculty and/or the Communicable Disease Center top level executives with the idea of their forming a non-profit housing coop using 3% federal funds over a long period of time. This suggestion will be explored further at the next meeting of the Druid Hills Committee. CDC's Dr. Langmuir and David Censer will be approached as possibly will be Jim Lieberman who is the head of the Visual Education Department.

39.3 AFSC Report on SCLC Campaign for Jobs and Income For All: Noyes read excerpts from Barbara's February 15th memorandum anent this subject. The rest of the time was spent in discussing it. Needless to say, approval and appreciation were expressed.

39.4 Future Meetings: Those who were able to attend this 5:30 buffet supper meeting approve of continuing this arrangement with possible alternate meetings scheduled for the Noon hour when some who cannot make the 5:30 hour can attend. No date was set for the next meeting which will probably be within thirty to forty-five days.

The meeting adjourned at 7:45 following a period of silence.

DEVELOPING A HOUSING PROGRAM FOR ATLANTA

Guy J. Kelnhofer, Jr. March 13, 1968

Under the leadership of Mayor Ivan Allen, Atlanta has begun to make a serious effort to correct its housing deficiencies. Initial attention has been focused on the task of increasing the supply of housing for low-income residents. With a considerable effort on the part of the Mayor and other civic leaders an increase in the rate of construction for low-rent dwellings has been achieved in Atlanta. However, because demolition has kept pace with new construction, the total supply of such units has not been increased for the City.

One of the obstacles to furnishing adequate amounts of new housing for low-income residents in Atlanta is the high cost of home construction. Some people believe that improvements in building design and technology hold the promise of making significant reductions in housing costs. Builders generally dispute this, asserting that factors other than technology are responsible for the high costs of building. They point to land prices, union practices, building codes, and municipal service charges as the principal factors pushing up housing costs. These cost ingredients, they claim, have risen rapidly enough to cancel out the many important savings that have been achieved by technological improvements in construction equipment, materials, and techniques. What this suggests is that while continuing attention should be directed to the perfection of building technology, real savings can be expected only when the other components of housing cost can be brought under control.

its low-income residents has been the lack of suitable sites for the new units. Strong neighborhood resistance has been met when attempts have been made to locate housing for low-income residents in established residential areas. Neighbors object not only to racial changes in their areas but also to the introduction of any large number of persons of lower socio-economic status. Partly this response is one of simple prejudice and a popular fear that property values will be adversely affected. Sometimes, however, the residents object because they fear that the newcomers would overload existing public facilities and lower the quality of education available in neighborhood schools.

Racial and economic stratification in Atlanta's housing market is compounded by annexation laws and zoning regulations which keep the poor and the non-white confined to a limited number of locations, nearly all within the central city. Because of these policies, unskilled and semi-skilled workers, who can least afford to absorb the transportation charges, are forced to live long distances from the suburbs where most of the new employment opportunities are to be found. High transportation costs for the inner-city poor further reduce the amount of income that can be spent on their housing needs. Racial restrictions on housing location also have the effect of driving up rents for the non-whites by increasing competition for the small number of spaces available in a highly restricted area. Enforced competition for housing in such a situation invites owner-neglect and overcrowding of existing units, the basic ingredients in the creation of slum conditions.

It can be seen from the above that solutions to Atlanta's problem of housing its poorer citizens will not be solved readily nor by simple measures. The problem is both deeply rooted and complex. While the question of financing low-cost housing might somehow be answered, the proper location of new housing units could not be assured within the larger community. Should Atlanta be successful, even then, in finding ways to accommodate low-income residents in its established neighborhoods, another difficulty would arise. As more low-income people migrated to the city, Atlanta would find its population increasingly dominated by those who are least able to support financially the high level of public service required by the poor. Atlanta, by its very success in housing the poor, would become a magnet for the less privileged and would serve as a convenient "dumping ground" for its suburban neighbors. It is clear, therefore, that solutions to the problems of housing Atlanta's poor and its colored residents must be sought in a metropolitan rather than a municipal context.

Any successful attack on Atlanta's housing problems must be broad gauged, extensive, and enduring. Among its elements must be:

1) a major effort to upgrade the work skills of the unemployed and underemployed. This should be correlated with intensified action to reduce other barriers to employment through the creation of day-care centers, car pools, and improved public transit services to low-income neighborhoods. Any improvement in earning power among the poor will be reflected in an improved capability to buy or rent more adequate housing accommodations. It is appropriate therefore, that a program for housing the poor give attention to those measures which will enable the poor to spend more for housing;

2) a critical study of the building codes, labor practices, land development regulations, taxing policies, annexation laws, and municipal service charges as these contribute unnecessarily to the cost of house construction and as they may inhibit unnecessarily the free movement and distribution of population without regard to race, income, religion, or age of renters and home buyers;

3) a program of research and testing to design new types of housing units making maximum use of new technology to increase the production rate and reduce the unit cost of housing;

4) a systematic utilization of incentives of various types, including rental subsidies, new public facilities, and upgrading the quality of educational services, to achieve breakthroughs in neighborhood acceptance of newcomers of different socio-economic status or to maintain neighborhood stability in areas undergoing changes in ethnic composition of the population, or to breach annexation barriers where outside residents might hesitate to associate with incorporated areas which enjoy lower levels of public service, or to stabilize relations in areas of the city where white and non-white neighborhoods share common borders;

5) demonstrations and experiments in neighborhood designs, building construction, public service innovations, changing the composition of neighborhood populations, new property ownership and management arrangements, taxing policies, transportation means and pricing, and shopping for goods and services;

6) research and experiment to find new ways to help residents of low-income areas to acquire equity in property, take on responsibilities for property maintenance, and to help the poor to get access to the information, tools, skills, and capital needed to build and repair their own housing;

7) an appeal to civic, fraternal, and religious organizations to take a more active part in sponsoring, constructing, and managing non-profit housing facilities for their own members whose incomes prevent them from competing for adequate housing in the private market;

8) a campaign of publicity and education based on adequate research to present the public with enough information to enable them to understand the housing issues and the kinds of solutions that are being tried in Atlanta and other parts of the country and to combat the myths and prejudicies which now help to stratify residential areas into homogeneous enclaves; and

9) an administrative organization with staff and fund resources that are adequate for it to conduct research, carry on an educational campaign, work effectively with other agencies in areas of mutual interest, design and carry out demonstrations and experiments, and produce authentic and well documented findings on the accomplishments and failures of the tests it conducts.

In mounting a program of the nature suggested above, Atlanta would be undertaking a task which should capture the interest and imagination of metropolitan areas around the country. The housing problems besetting Atlanta's underprivileged people are similar to those which are found in every metropolitan area in the United States. Atlanta's program of housing improvements, therefore, could serve as a pilot operation to test out and demonstrate to other communities the techniques Atlantans might devise to provide proper housing accommodations for its economic and racial minorities.

One of the important components of a pilot program is the ability to demonstrate new ways of doing things on a scale which is appropriate to the problem under study. In a housing program this will include models of single and multiple dwelling units constructed ~~or~~ as individual structures. It will also include the construction of complexes of buildings and public facilities, supported by a specialized array of public services; in short, a demonstration at a neighborhood or sub-community scale. These model buildings and model neighborhood arrangements would be built to demonstrate the workability of housing solutions designed by the planners and architects.

Some of the tests and demonstrations will be efforts to motivate people to experiment with novel or locally uncommon ways of living together. Middle income residents, for example, might be persuaded to live as neighbors with people of a different race and of lower economic status through the use of rental subsidies or by a substantial upgrading in the quality of the neighborhood schools. Another demonstration device might include the strategic siting of attractive new public facilities, such as libraries, recreation halls, theaters, and parks on the border along the edges of white and non-white neighborhoods.

The examples cited above do not constitute definite proposals but are meant instead to serve as examples of the kinds and the scale of the demonstrations that might be attempted. Similar types of incentive systems might be conceived to breach the barriers to annexation which now threaten the economic viability of Atlanta and other central cities in metropolitan areas. Studies would need to be made to determine what types of incentives should be employed, where they should be applied, and what kinds of objectives they should seek to achieve. The cost of applying these incentives in effective but non-wasteful ways will require good judgment and careful appraisals. The final worth or benefit of these experiments is something which will emerge as a result of the systematic testing and measurement which must be planned as a part of the demonstration and carried on concurrently.

A program of this nature could not be carried out successfully in a period of less than five years. It ought to run for about ten years to allow adequate time for the demonstration projects to prove themselves. It would require around $15 million, or about $1.5 million per year for ten years, to carry out a program of this type. While it may be possible to scale this down somewhat, it is going to require an investment of about this order of magnitude to accomplish substantial change in Atlanta's housing situation.

This is in no sense a detailed prospectus upon which contracts might be drafted. It is instead the presentation of a concept, an approach to a problem, which is submitted for initial discussion purposes. If this strategy finds acceptance, it will be in order then to put this proposal into specifics, outlining a detailed program of action; specifying time, cost, and personnel requirements for each item and each phase; and allocating various program responsibilities among the participating agencies.

Lou Harris - March '68

This is a study of the attitudes of Negro seniors in predominantly Negro colleges toward the world around them with particular reference to the role the Peace Corps might play in their future plans.

There are approximately 81 four-year colleges where the student body is over 90% Negro. One half of the Negroes attending college are in these 81 schools; the rest attend predominantly white schools. For this study, 35 Negro schools were selected at random from the 81, and a total of 867 interviews with seniors were completed.

Throughout the study comparisons are made with the findings of a previous Harris study, conducted in December, 1967, on the attitudes of over 1,000 college seniors in a cross-section of U.S. colleges. White students made up 96% of that sample, their actual proportion in the college population.

The following facts may, in part, account for the differences in the results of the two studies:

1. The sex ratio in the Negro schools is 57% female-43% male, compared with 33% female-67% male in white schools.

2. The socio-economic status of the families of the Negro seniors is much lower than that of the families of white seniors. Many of the Negro-white differences in the data may be traced to the socio-economic differences between the two groups.

3. Between December 1967 when students in the first study were interviewed and February-March 1968 when the Negro students were interviewed, the following events occurred:

a. The January Tet offensive of the Vietcong and North Vietnamese took place.

b. Military deferments for most graduate students were lifted.

c. At a number of Negro colleges widespread demonstrations and violence occurred (including the killing of three and the wounding of 28 students at Claflin College in South Carolina).

I. Interest in the Peace Corps and Other Areas

Only nine percent of the Negro seniors are seriously considering joining Peace Corps, compared with 13% of white seniors. There is a slight tendency for interest in the Peace Corps to rise as students become more active. ("Activity" is measured by personal participation in such activities as signing petitions, demonstrations, and voter-registration drives.) Regionally, seniors in the Deep South schools show the least interest in the Peace Corps.

There are significant differences in the attitudes of white seniors toward the Peace Corps which correspond to differences in region, sex, academic major, and degree of activism. Among Negro seniors, these differences are not significant. The fact that the special interest in the Peace Corps found among certain groups of white college seniors was lacking among Negro students suggests that the Peace Corps has made little impact on the black campus.

In considering the next step after graduation, graduate school is given highest preference. In stating career choices, 40% of the Negro seniors expect to go into teaching. Social work is their second choice (16%), and business is third (11%). Among those seriously considering the Peace Corps, government (10%) edges out business (9%) as a third choice.

Sixty one percent of the total Negro seniors and 71% of those Negro seniors seriously considering the Peace Corps expect to make a career in teaching, social work, and government service, fields in which Peace Corps experience may be of direct benefit.

Higher proportions of Negroes than whites are seriously considering these fields. These are areas where Negro seniors feel discrimination is lowest and they are most likely to have as good a chance to get a job as a white college graduate with the same qualifications.

Almost three in ten of those seriously considering the Peace Corps reported that their professors had recommended it to them. This is a significantly higher proportion than is found among the white seniors.

Currently one half (49%) of the Negro seniors indicated knowing a returned Volunteer. Their attitudes toward the Peace Corps became more favorable as a result of their contact with the returned Volunteer, especially among those seriously considering the Peace Corps. In the previous Lou Harris study 58% of the white seniors knew a returned Volunteer.

II. How the Peace Corps Is Viewed by the Seniors

A. Ratings of the Peace Corps

A higher proportion of Negro seniors (89%) than white seniors (80%) gave the Peace Corps a positive rating. However, the Peace Corps does not occupy the same salient position that it does in the minds of the whites. When asked what two or three things were most helping the reputation of the United States in the world today only 25% of the Negro seniors singled out the Peace Corps. For the Negroes, the general area of foreign aid is considered more important than the Peace Corps. Sixty one percent of the Negro seniors agreed that "the Peace Corps was still the best part of the foreign aid program we have" and it is as part of the foreign aid program that they see the Peace Corps.

When asked about the Peace Corps' major accomplishments and where it has failed, the Negro seniors answered that the Peace Corps had been most successful in helping to improve the standard of living in underdeveloped areas and in providing education to wipe out illiteracy. By contrast, the white seniors approached the Peace Corps' successes in a more personalistic way, giving first place to the opportunity for personal contact and the development of mutual understanding. Perhaps Negro seniors are more interested in direct economic development, or perhaps they feel they already have empathy with peoples in underdeveloped areas.

Although the Negroes agreed with whites that the main failing of the Peace Corps is the need for a larger program, their answers were less distinct and "don't know" answers were more frequent than for the white seniors--another indication of the relative lack of involvement Negroes in our sample have in the Peace Corps.

As with the white seniors, the Negroes generally disagree that "the Peace Corps is becoming too much a part of the establishment." But significantly more Negroes (38%) than whites (25%) agreed that "the Peace Corps has become more interested in improving the United States image than in really helping in other countries." There is also more uncertainty among Negro seniors than among white seniors that "it's still possible in the Peace Corps to say what you really think and nobody there tries to muzzle you."

Only 11% of the Negroes thought it would be more difficult for a Negro to get into the Peace Corps than a white person. An open-ended question indicated they were thinking in terms of discriminatory selection procedures. Overwhelmingly, they felt there was a good chance they would complete training if they joined the Peace Corps.

B. Why the Seniors Feel They Might Join the Peace Corps

Although Peace Corps may be distant from these students, they quickly recognize that it can open new horizons and remove some of the restrictions that have been imposed on them. The importance of learning about other cultures and the sharply higher responses of Negroes compared with whites on the elements of travel (32% to 14%) and gaining experience (23% to 10%) indicate that the theme of "up and out" can have real impact on black campuses.

The Negro student expects a difficult struggle when he emerges from college and does not have time for an interlude. Sixty percent of those Negro seniors seriously considering the Peace Corps view it as very important in preparing for the future, while only 16% of the white seniors seriously considering Peace Corps view it as an important reason for joining. In previous studies, it was found that one of the distinguishing characteristics of the white seniors seriously considering the Peace Corps was that they felt there was time in their lives for a two-year period of service. They did not expect very much direct career advantage from this experience and were not bothered by this fact.

If the Negro senior is to become interested in the Peace Corps, he must see it as a meaningful step into his future, not as a pause or a testing of his mettle before the inevitable confrontation with society.

Negro seniors volunteered that the main reason they might hesitate to join the Peace Corps is the low pay one receives in the Peace Corps. This reason appears much more important for them than for white seniors. It is cited by one in five white seniors and two in five Negro seniors. Their second reason, that the Peace Corps would place them "too far away--don't want to travel" is also more important for them than for whites.

Lost income and career delay are considered important reasons for not joining the Peace Corps, more so than for whites. One half of the Negro seniors stated "I would like to start making money" as a reason for not joining compared with one third of the whites. Over 40% of the Negroes say they have financial obligations and cannot afford to spend two years in the Peace Corps. (The average income of the families of the Negro seniors is much lower--$7,500 median--than for the white seniors, $12,500 median.)

Findings a good-paying job and immediate planning for the future cause greater concern for the Negro seniors than for white seniors. This is particularly true for Negroes at the lower end of the socio-economic scale, those in the South and those from rural backgrounds.

As concern over finding a good-paying job decreases, interest in the Peace Corps increases although Negroes seriously considering the Peace Corps still express greater concern over finding a good job than do whites.

For both white and black seniors, personal career considerations are clearly the most important factors in holding down interest in the Peace Corps. There are, however, two major differences: Negroes feel the career pressures more sharply than whites, and their career options are more limited than those of the whites.

III. The Problem of Race Relations

When Negro seniors were asked what two or three things are most hurting the reputation of the United States in the world today, 70%--or nearly twice the percentage of whites--mentioned racial problems. Almost eight in ten Negroes compared with nearly seven in ten whites felt that war in Vietnam was hurting America's reputation abroad. However, for Negro students, the combined total of "racial problems," "lack of concern over poverty" and "riots" (93% among Negroes; 56% among whites) outweighs Vietnam in hurting the reputation of the United States abroad.

Increasing concern with racial problems correlates with increased activism. Concern (with racial problems) appears to be the basis for activism on black campuses unlike the predominantly white campuses where the most active 10% of the seniors were different from their fellow students in their attitude toward a great variety of issues and choices. Except in signing petitions, Negro students are more willing to participate and have participated more often than white students in all the listed activities: demonstrations, picket lines, defiance of school authorities, civil disobedience and others. Using the same scale to measure activity, nearly one in four Negroes may be considered to be "most active" compared with only one in ten whites. The problems of racial discrimination have galvanized far more students in black schools to action than have any issues on the predominantly white campuses. An indication of the higher level of activity among the Negro seniors is that they, more than the white seniors, feel they do not have enough voice on campus.

Among Negro seniors, men are more active than women: seniors in private colleges are more active than those in publicly supported schools and seniors in small schools are more active than seniors in the larger schools. Except for participation in voter registration, activism increases as one moves further from the Deep South. Activity is greatest among students coming from urban areas and among those highest on the socio-economic scale. Those who believe that Negroes can gain more through all-black civil rights organizations are, as a group, by far the most active.

The goal most Negro seniors would like to see reached is the goal of integration. Over nine in ten chose an integrated society over a separate black society. The method to reach this goal also involves working with whites. Only one in ten feel more can be gained working in all-black civil rights organizations.

NAIRO's involvement in, and direction of "summer" projects for minority groups was the primary focus of attention of the April 15, 1968 meeting of NAIRO. The meeting was held at the Southern Regional Office Headquarters of the National Urban League, with Mr. K. B. M. Crooks, Jr., President, presiding.

Initial attention was directed to the Atlanta Public School System, which has proposed to keep open 62 schools in ghetto areas this summer. As now planned, this program will provide recreational and educational facilities for all community members who wish to participate. A general consensus evolved, and members of NAIRO asserted the fact that publicity must have a maximum outreach, if this endeavor was to relieve minority group tensions. Some alternative publicity plans proposed by the group included: Full use of Mass Media; the Parent and Teachers' Associations; Sound Trucks; and a Door-to-Door campaign for publicity through the Office of Economic Opportunity of Atlanta. Plans were made to contact the ten centers within the Atlanta area, to enlist their help in publicizing the Summer School Program, and it was planned that representation from each Center would be requested to attend a meeting at the Southern Regional Office of the Urban League at 4:00 pm, April 24, 1968. Mrs.

Betty Cantor of the ADL would serve as the key resource person in explaining to the extension managers and other EOA personnel, the Summer Program. A fact sheet would be distributed at the April 24 meeting. Mr. Yoder of the NUL Staff agreed to contact each appropriate EOA person to encourage attendance.

Mr. Bob Hughes, representing the Community Relations Service, then posed the question of NAIRO's role in the implementation of the President's Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. In the control and prevention of Civil Disorders, mention was made that positive efforts were being taken by private sectors within our community. Mentioned by Mr. Hughes was one such effort, by the Christian Counsel of Metropolitan Atlanta, which has proposed the Development of a Task Force to deal with such problems. Many questions were raised as to the function of NAIRO in relation to this approach. NAIRO members concurred that action on their behalf should be delayed until the Christian Counsel expressed a desire for the utilization of NAIRO.

Mr. Anderson and Mr. Gaither expressed their concern for tangible, concrete proof of NAIRO's role through programs which would give immediate visible aid in lessening minority group tension. Some of the programs suggested included Summer Work Programs for youth, which would be instituted by the Department of Public Safety, and would hopefully spread to other areas. It was also mentioned that the providing of facilities, for specific organizations -such as the Houses of Use might be a worthwhile program for NAIRO. Discussion was then undertaken as to NAIRO's role. In response to this discussion, Mr. Crooks reaffirmed the programming function NAIRO. Suggestion was then made for a full-time NAIRO employee to deal with programming. The need for such an employee was agreed, but the question of NAIRO programming in "action-oriented" activity was unresolved.

In conclusion, a short synopsis of the Open Housing Bill was related by Mr. Irwin Schulman, and he gave an overview of the Planned Congress on Open Housing, which is scheduled to be held in the Dinkler Hotel, Atlanta, Ga, May 29 . For informative purposes, he suggested that those NAIRO members attend.

It was also agreed that the Chairman contact Mrs. Cathy Wood, coordinating the Congress and receive the key principals for the next NAIRO monthly meeting scheduled for May 13, 1968 in the SRO conference room at 3:00 pm.

AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE
ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

MEMORANDUM

April 30, 1968

TO: Advisory Committee

FROM: Noyes Collinson

SUBJECT: Buffet Supper Meeting, 5:30 O'Clock, Thursday, May 16th, 1968, Conference Room, Georgia Council on Human Relations, First Floor, 52 Fairlie Street (midway between Marietta and Walton, one block west of Forsyth).

Please note this date now on your engagement calendar.

Regretfully, a combination of circumstances necessitated cancellation of the Steering Committee meeting scheduled for April 11th. This means that there has not been opportunity for group discussion of urgent issues since February 27th. Several recent events of vital concern to our Atlanta Community Relations Committee have occurred which require exploration in depth. We shall probably not meet again as a committee of the whole until early Fall. In the interim, the Steering Committee will need to know the Advisory Committee's consensus and sense of direction on items on the agenda for May 16th. The following order of items does not necessarily indicate which shall have prior consideration. The Committee will determine that when we meet.

AGENDA

I. The Nature and Extent of Our Participation in The Poor People's Campaign conceived by Dr. King and endorsed and assisted by AFSC (See Minutes 2/27/68, 39.3).

II. Attendance at the Metropolitan Atlanta Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing, Dinkler Plaza, May 29th. (AFSC's Atlanta Community Relations Program is making a financial contribution and lending staff to the Conference.)

III. Titles VIII and IX, Civil Rights Act of 1968 pertaining to Open Occupancy: what should be our stance on the issue of a local fair housing ordinance to further implementation of the provisions set forth in these titles?

IV. Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders: what should be the nature of our response to this Report?

V. ACRP Staff: it now appears that the 1968-69 program year beginning October 1, 1968 will continue to carry two staff persons and a secretary. Our Committee should know the thinking of the Southeastern Regional Office as it pertains to 1) appointment of a successor to Xernona Clayton, and 2) appointment of a successor to me coincident with my retirement not later than January 1, 1969.

VI. Neighborhood Fair Housing Committees: depending on recommendations made at the May 29th Housing Conference, what role shall we take in the development and guidance of neighborhood fair housing committees in cooperation with other organizations committed to open occupancy?

The foregoing are among the major items to be considered May 16th. Others may be included before that date.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

NOTE: Gold's Restaurant will cater a buffet supper at $1.75 per guest. We must give Mr. Gold our guarantee of the number to be served by Noon, Wednesday, May 15th. Please telephone your reservation before that time, 523-6628. May we hope for full attendance?

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM
ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETING

5:30 P.M., Thursday, May 16, 1968
Conference Room, Georgia Council on Human Relations
52 Fairlie Street, Atlanta

MINUTES

Attending: Henrietta Canty, Henry deGive, Richard Hocking, Gerald Horton, Verdree Lockhart, I. E. Saporta, Alice Washington. Guest: Kay Hocking. Staff: Noyes Collinson.

Chairman Henry deGive called for a brief period of silence before beginning the meeting.

40.1 Employment on Merit: Jerry Horton reported that the private sector in Atlanta, as elsewhere, is stepping up the rate of minority employment in jobs hitherto either not open or rarely filled by minorities. This is the result of the National Alliance of Businessmen's (Urban Coalition) effort to step up employment, both to engage minority personnel and to fill jobs which are open.

40.2 The Poor People's Campaign: Comment was made about the remarkable response which the City of Atlanta gave to the Poor People's Campaign March, May 9 - 10. In spite of the generous offers of hospitality, food and transportation, the Campaign will need ample cash contributions to see it through June. It was learned that many of the Negro churches in the city have pledged themselves for substantial amounts for the month of May and may continue for a portion of June. Suggestion was made that the white churches be asked to take steps to raise funds by having special collections or an offering plate in the vestibule each Sunday during the Campaign. Noyes communicated this suggestion to Ed Driscoll, Georgia Council of Churches, and the Reverend Harmon Moore, Secretary of the Atlanta Christian Alliance with the request that they use their good offices to pass word along to their memberships. Several members of the Advisory Committee participated in the functions marking the passage of the March through Atlanta.

40.3 Metropolitan Atlanta Conference on Equal Opportunity in Housing: All members of the Advisory Committee have received invitations and it is hoped that several will be able to attend at least a portion of the Conference on May 29th, if not all sessions. This is an election year. Accordingly, it was suggested that the DeKalb County Commissioners and candidates be confronted directly with the issue of open occupancy by some of their influential constituents.

40.4 Civil Rights Act of 1968 - Open Occupancy Sections: It was noted that the Mayor has appointed an Aldermanic Committee to implement those portions of this Act which have a bearing on local disturbances. It was also noted that the Atlanta Community Relations Commission (ACRC) has not yet appointed an Executive Secretary. It appears to the Advisory Committee that one of the functions of the ACRC should be assistance in implementing vital sections of the Act as they pertain to social unrest in the community. There was consensus that a letter should be written to the Commission urging the appointment of a Secretary at the earliest possible moment. On the basis that there is a sense of urgency connected with setting up channels for handling incipient signs of unrest, copies of the letter should be sent to the Mayor and Vice Major and to all city papers.

40.5 Atlanta Community Relations Program Staff: A successor to Xernona Clayton has not yet been appointed. The High Point and Philadelphia Personnel Committees have under consideration some applicants on whom they have not yet acted and have advised others that their qualifications do not fit the job specifications. Noyes will carry the program until such time as a second staff person is found. He plans to retire not later than July, 1969. Depending upon staffing arrangements, there may be some change in this date.

40.6 Neighborhood Fair Housing Committees: The Atlanta Community Relations Program in conjunction with Interfaith, Inc. has formed an ad hoc committee to create a city-wide association of neighborhood fair housing committees. A request from Cecil Alexander, Chairman of the Mayor's Housing Resources Committee,was presented for consideration on which the ACRP Advisory Committee was asked to prepare a resolution similar to two resolutions already presented by the Chamber of Commerce to the Aldermanic Board asking for early action on drawing up a new rezoning ordinance. The present ordinance has not been revised since 1954. Meanwhile, spotty exemptions have been made without any regard for long-range planning. A Chamber of Commerce resolution asks that "a package zoning plan" be considered to provide sites throughout the entire city--all four quadrants --for public housing developments. In addition to this, the Mayor's Housing Resources Committee recommends strongly that many smaller sites rather than large concentrations are more acceptable and will allow children of low income families to be released from the stultifying influences of huge projects and to see the possibilities of a better life. There was consensus that a resolution be drawn and sent in response to Cecil Alexander's request.

40.7 West End Baptist Church: The Reverend Hugh Brooks, Pastor, delivered a strong sermon earlier this month in which he charged "conspiracy" between certain white and Negro leaders to consign minority groups to pre-determined sections of the city. An editorial in the Weekly Star says of Mr. Brooks "He is trying within the Christian framework to come to grips with the question of church survival realistically." The editorial further cites Mr. Brooks as pointing the way the church is to survive, the way being involvement in the social issues of the day.

Noyes wrote a letter commending Mr. Brooks and offering such assistance as he might need. In response to this letter, Mr. Brooks asked him to be a guest of the Southwest Ministers Association at a meeting on housing in the office of the Metropolitan Atlanta Summit Leadership Congress.

No date has been set for the next meeting of the full committee but the Steering Committee will stand by for action in case of need during the summer months. It should be noted that although attendance was not as large as the committee hoped it would be, the items on the agenda were thoroughly discussed and consensus achieved on all points.

A RESOLUTION

The Advisory Committee of the Atlanta Community Relations Program (a project of the American Friends Service Committee) focuses its major concern upon equality of opportunity in housing for all residents of the community irrespective of their economic, ethnic, religious or racial status. It is in complete accord with the Housing Resources Committee's objective of providing 16,800 low-rent dwelling units by 1971. Furthermore, it commends that Committee's advocacy of "many smaller sites rather than large concentrations as more acceptable...and as allowing children of low income families to be released from the stultifying influences of huge projects and to see the possibilities of a better life."

The Advisory Committee also endorses the position taken by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors in support of dispersing multi-family dwellings to all quadrants of the city and accepts as reasonable and logical the proposed "package zoning plan" calling for simultaneous rezoning of several sites throughout the city of public housing development.

Accordingly, IT IS RESOLVED by the American Friends Service Committee's Atlanta Community Relations Program Advisory Committee that measures should be taken forthwith by the City of Atlanta, through its Planning Department and the Board of Aldermen, to revise its long outmoded zoning ordinance of 1954, and to adopt an updated land use plan, and that a new zoning ordinance based upon that plan be prepared for submission to the Board of Aldermen for early action.

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED by the Advisory Committee that any new zoning plan adopted by the City of Atlanta should make provision for adequate land for multi-family housing and open up land for increased density of housing in all quadrants of the city to the end that the best interests of all segments of the growing and progressive City of Atlanta be served.

VAUGHN DEFENDS PEACE CORPS VOLUNTEERS AT HOUSE APPROPRIATIONS HEARINGS

On June 20, Jack Vaughn, Director of the Peace Corps, appeared before the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, chaired by Otto E. Passman (D., La.). Mr. Vaughn first gave a general statement in support of the Peace Corps' estimated budget of $112.8 million for fiscal year 1969. He was then interrogated by Chairman Passman who referred to himself as "the worst critic you have." Challenging Vaughn with, "You have to draw very heavily upon your imagination to be able to pinpoint the actual good that the Peace Corps has accomplished," Passman further clarified his position by saying, "I think this Peace Corps is the result of a con job done on members of Congress. I am going to expose it for what it is."

In a sometimes heated, and often revealing exchange, these topics were discussed: the concept of the Peace Corps, freedom of expression, the draft, student attitudes, and race.

On Freedom of Expression in the Peace Corps

Speaking of his recent trip to Bangkok, Passman said that he was shocked to hear Peace Corps volunteers expressing themselves vocally in opposition to the U. S. policy on Vietnam. "The Peace Corps volunteers do not have to comply with the same rules and regulations that our Foreign Service officers do, do they?" he asked. Vaughn said, "No."

Passman then stated, "No American, to my way of thinking, should be permitted to go abroad until he takes that same oath of allegiance to this great country that the people down at the State Department take." He pointed out also that William S. Gaud, Administrator of the Agency for International Development "said that all of his people going abroad would have to support our foreign policy or they do not go abroad."

Vaughn replied, "Dean Rusk has said repeatedly that Peace Corps volunteers are not a part of the U. S. foreign policy, not to be considered as such...."

PASSMAN: "Why do you not take the initiative as an American and recommend that we amend the legislation or policy so these kids--a lot of them spoiled, disappointed in love, or something--will go out and take the same position as the State Department people?" He added, "I thought this year you would have come around to saying we want the Peace Corpsmen to support the same foreign policy as our troops in Vietnam." "These people are supposed to impart our correct image in foreign countries."

Vaughn replied, "I think the purpose of the Foreign Service officers and the military is so totally different, Peace Corps volunteers go out not to carry out U. S. foreign policy, but to serve a foreign country and its people."

PASSMAN: "What are the Peace Corps supposed to do if it is not to impart the friendly image that we want the foreign countries to have about Americans?" "Why shouldn't they support the same policy as these boys over in Vietnam?"

VAUGHN: "Because they go out as free individuals from a pluralistic society."

PASSMAN: "Do you think that Mr. Johnson would send a single Ambassador to a foreign country if he did not support our country's foreign policy?"

VAUGHN: "We are talking about two completely different concepts."

PASSMAN: "They are not different. They are also Americans trying to impart a correct American image."

VAUGHN: "It indicates to me how totally you misunderstand the concept of the Peace Corps and what it is setting out to do."

PASSMAN: "Your concept of our foreign policy is such that I do not think you should be in the position you hold. If you do not advocate that all Americans who go out of their country to represent the United States, support our foreign policy, then I am thoroughly disappointed in you."

A little later Passman picked up the issue of freedom of expression, asking, "How do you think these boys would feel who are fighting and dying in Vietnam if they knew these youngsters, called Peace Corpsmen, were advocating possibly an overthrow of the form of Government that we have here, if not directly at least indirectly; that our policies are wrong; that we should not be in that war?"

He asked, "...aren't they [Peace Corps volunteers] in a different system from the State Department and our military personnel when they go abroad?" Vaughn replied, "They are not in the system."

PASSMAN: "They are representatives of the U. S. Government, are they not?"

VAUGHN: "They are not. They are representatives of the U. S. people."

PASSMAN: "Who pays them?"

VAUGHN: "The U. S. Government pays them."

PASSMAN: "You and I know they are working for the U. S. Government and you just stated the U. S. Government paid them, or they are being compensated by our Government."

VAUGHN: "They are not working for the U. S. Government. They are representing the U. S. people in all its..."

PASSMAN: "Who pays their salaries?"

VAUGHN: "The U. S. Government does."

PASSMAN: "If they are not working for the United States, then why do you want this $112.8 million, if it is not to pay the Peace Corpsmen?"

VAUGHN: "They are not working for us..."

PASSMAN: "Who is 'us'?"

VAUGHN: "The U. S. people."

PASSMAN: "The people or the Government?"

VAUGHN: "The people."

PASSMAN: (a bit later) "They are working for the Government and are paid by the Government, are they not?"

VAUGHN: "They are not working for the Government. They are working for some other government." He used this example, "Take a teacher in Thailand. He is working as a Peace Corps volunteer teacher. He is working for the Thai Government, specifically for the Thai Ministry of Education."

Later, in a discussion on why the Peace Corps left Gabon, Vaughn replied to Passman that they had left at the request of the Gabonese Government. Passman commented, "The Government; thank you. There will be more of them leaving."

John J. Rooney (D., N. Y.) interposed, "Why?" Passman retorted, "Simply because they don't support our Government's foreign policy. We have been over that bridge a dozen times already, Mr. Rooney. These youngsters, apparently, can do and say whatever they please in these countries."

Still later another committee member, Mrs. Carlotte T. Reid (R., Ill.) brought up a particular instance of volunteers' expressing themselves overseas.

REID: "I understand that when Vice President Humphrey was in the Ivory Coast earlier this year, Peace Corps volunteers there presented him with petitions protesting the Vietnam war. This was reported in the New York Times on February 9. Why is this type of publicity allowed by the Corps? It seems to me that this must have been somewhat embarrassing to the Vice President."

VAUGHN: "Actually, the Vice President is one of the strongest supporters of the Peace Corps. He is one of the originators of the Peace Corps and is Chairman of our National Advisory Council.

"The Vice President firmly believes in the right to protest and in the freedom Peace Corps volunteers have. In the instance you mention, the volunteers disagreed with our policy in Vietnam, and wanted to express their opinion. They did so in a dignified manner, and the Vice President was not embarrassed."

Mrs. Reid also questioned Vaughn on the difference between the Communist nations' peace corps--the International Service for Solidarity and Friendship of Youth--and the U. S. Peace Corps.

Vaughn pointed out some of the differences; then said, "Perhaps the biggest difference is the large amount of freedom U. S. volunteers have overseas to represent the diversity of their society compared to the rather limited freedom of the volunteers of the International Service for Solidarity and Friendship of Youth."

Defense for the Peace Corps as image maker came from another member of the committee, Julia Butler Hansen (D., Wash.). She said, "I visited your Peace Corps people in three countries--Colombia, Peru, and a few in Chile working in one of the slum areas of Santiago. I do want to compliment you on the kind of work they were conducting." "...I heard no end of favorable comment from people about what they considered to be the new spirit of American Young people." "I saw the direct result of the work that they were going out in the slum area." "I certainly thought that the image benefit they gave was excellent--sometimes America has been accused of being only a nation of guns. These youngsters were doing constructive programs."

Mrs. Hansen later asked Vaughn, "Don't you think that it is true young people in America are a great deal more committed to service than they ever have been in the history of this country?"

VAUGHN: "Yes, and they are also deeply committed to honesty." "They recognized the Peace Corps as being an honest operation that they can perform in freedom, in spite of what Mr. Passman says. It is very clear to me, Mrs. Hansen, that if there were any inference that the Peace Corps volunteer would be gagged or brainwashed or held to a certain philosophy and told he had to take a party line of some kind, we would have no volunteers. Young people today are just not willing to put up with this kind of thing."

HANSEN: "They aren't even willing to put up with status quo in this country."

VAUGHN: "They sure aren't. I frankly wouldn't want it any other way. Would you?"

HANSEN: "This is what democracy is really all about. It is its great strength. When the day comes that we have to say exactly what some governmental department says, then God help us, we have had it."

VAUGHN: "You can imagine this kind of tough questions the volunteers get about civil rights and about our foreign policy and the rest."

HANSEN: "I hope they can explain our foreign policy. I can't. Very frankly I think on the whole the Peace Corps has been a very successful reflection of an idealism that exists in American young people about their commitment to solving the problems of humanity."

VAUGHN: "Thank you."

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

Date July 23, 1968

To: Wil Hartzler

From: Noyes/Collinson

Subject: DeKalb County Housing Project

Some members of the ARCP Advisory Committee's Steering Ommittee met July 22 to consider the implications involved in AFSC's participation in the proposed middle-income, integrated housing ~~delepment~~ on land owned by Negro families in DeKalb County-- an undertaking broached by Xernona Clayton, Bob Thompson (HUD) and others in October, 1967.

A tape recording of the discussion would have been helpful in reporting the salient facts. Lacking such, I summarize the recommendations and a few of the more important factors upon which they are based.

The Committee recommends, specifically, that at this time and in DeKalb County AFSC would do well to refrain from participation in the project while suggesting that if at a later time, when the project may materialize, AFSC wishes to do so, it could be effective in promoting open occupancy.

There are two rather sizeable plots of land, one lying on one side of La Vista Road, and one on the other side. But whichever parcel may be selected as the site, the same adverse situation would complicate matters. Bob Thompson is on vacation and could not be reached for comment.

Briefly, these are the problem areas: First and foremost, the early stages must be done "in camera" so far as possible. Were AFSC to make the first move (by receiving HUD funds) the project would become a "dead duck", to quote I.E. Saporta, who knows his way around in the housing field. Moreland Smith adds to this observation the mere fact that there might be the slightest hint - even by mention of possible use of Federal funds for 221 -d -3, etc., the County commissioners and zoning authority would throw every possible barrier in the way to block the project. Their aim is to make DeKalb lily-white and keep it so. One of the parcels in question is surrounded on all sides by middle income homes developed by one company. By means of injunction procedding the owner of the parcel has access to the property over a 20 foot right of way. Any attempt to purchase one dwelling and use its land for ingress and/or egress would tip the hand of those backing the project; and multiple exits would be required for a parcel as large as the one in question. A stipulation in the deeds of title would virtually be required to obtain proper approaches to the property.

I could cite other complications, but the foregoing are typical and more than enough to block the undertaking. One of the committee will endeavor to obtain legal descriptions of the properties and from that ascertain the owners of abutting properties. It is expected, also that the utilities and other necessities such as sewage connections, etc.would be denied by the appropriate authorities.

The group as a whole is of the opinion that an independent entrepreneur could find the necessary initial funding to make the essential studies and moves for acquisition, without reference even by inuendo to an integrated project. The site is of sufficient size and value to attract such a person or persons. DeKalb County, so it is said, deliberately let its workable program lapse, to keep federal funds from being used, and thus avoid integration.

The second of the two resolutions unamimously adopted at the May 29 Housing Conference calls for urging counties adjacent to Fulton (Atlanta) to take immediate steps to adopt a Wprkable Program, etc....." (See page 2 of the Housing Conference Report entitled "Only A Beginning ...But a very significant one.", copies of which you have).

Henry deGive, who is an attorney with EEOC on Don Hallowell's staff, will confer with Don, who is the attorney for the owners of the land under discussion for further comment. I spoke with Don some time ago, and when we were in the EEOC office before setting out for our luncheon meeting Don asked the occaion for the gathering. I told him briefly and asked him to comment on Henry's report of the discussion. I think he will concur with the recommendation, knowing as he does the DeKalb County attitude.

MEMORANDUM AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE, Incorporated, 160 North 15th Street, Philadelphia, Pa. 19102

To: Wil Hartzler and Noyes Collinson Date: July 24, 1968

From: Jim Harvey

Subject: DeKalb County Housing Project

The draft proposal submitted by HUD (Bob Thompson) offers what could be an interesting and challenging project. More discussion and gathering of background information is required before any agreement can be reached. I have three major concerns about the draft proposal:

A. As stated in Noyes' memo of June 18th, AFSC "would simply be the intermediary to receive funds and distribute them." Why is an intermediary needed? Can funds go directly to the people most interested in planning and developing the land?

B. The "Purpose of Program" states that the intent is "to make lots available for residential construction for middle-class Negro families." First, why does housing have to be produced exclusively for this segment of the Negro housing market? What is the economic level of people presently living on the land?

I would generally prefer to leave the question open about the economic level of housing. Could there be an economic mix?

C. The three-phase approach does not make complete sense to me, particularly if the idea is to plan with the people. I can see AFSC playing a role in developing a housing project but perhaps not in the manner as I understand the proposal.

I suggest the following approach:

1. A community organizer would be employed to work with the concerned people in the area. The primary job would be to:

--form a group whose purpose would be to research, plan and develop a housing project

--identify and involve the needed resources to get the job done

--present a broad concept of the possibilities

--identify and outline the major obstacles with some ideas of how to surmount them

2. Funds would then be made available to a group whose overall purpose is to plan and put the plan into effect. The group would subcontract or directly employ the various skills and resources needed to accomplish the job. If AFSC were seen as fulfilling one of the necessary components--fine.

Essentially what I looked for were aspects of the proposal that makes it different from the normal planning of any other housing development and also particular features that would be unique to AFSC. I am unable to find anything very different except the ownership of the land, and the possible reactions from the county officialdom and surrounding area. Why can't any group of Black businessmen form some type of syndicate to plan, finance and develop the land?

As you can see, my thoughts are to start from a community base. Specific ideas about what should be developed or any concepts should come from the concerned group. This may be a slower process but would be a sound approach.

My recommendation is to meet with Bob Thompson and other HUD officials to discuss and clarify several issues that are of great concern to us.

How flexible is HUD to modification of the proposal and to the normal approach to housing development in that area?

Under what provisions, (regulations, funds, program, etc.) is the draft proposal based?

Are the HUD people familiar with AFSC housing programs and our basic concern for self determination and human values?

What are the particular contributions which HUD sees in AFSC and what are the particular elements we would like to see incorporated in the proposal?

What kind and how much support can be expected of HUD to see the project through to completion?

As presented the proposal does not appear to merit a great deal of time and attention unless we had a clear invitation from HUD (with an understanding of our mutual interest) or interest from the people most directly affected.

Of course, many internal problems will have to be considered such as:

SOUTHEASTERN REGION

Date July 26, 1968

To: Noyes Collinson and Jim Harvey

From: Wil Hartzler W.

Subject: DeKalb County Housing Project

Arriving simultaneously on my desk were your respective memos of July 23 and July 24. I was glad to have further comments from Jim on the DeKalb County proposal and the perceptive insights of members of the Atlanta committee who know the situation first hand.

After studying again all of the material I have on this proposal, I would like to summarize where I come out. From the beginning I have been impressed with the delicate nature of this proposal in relation to the suburban area in which the project is to be placed. Members of the Atlanta committee certainly reinforce this by suggesting many ways in which the project could be side-tracked by public pressure or political action . If the possibility of such side-tracking is increased by the AFSC being in any way associated with the effort, then I believe that it would be much better that this be strictly a commercial venture, perhaps without HUD funds involved at all. Furthermore, I believe our program commitments can be fully utilized for another year or two in helping neighborhoods organize themselves to make existing housing available to all on an open market. Perhaps at a future point our attention could then turn to new inter-racial developments or housing for the low income. If the DeKalb County project is built, I see our program working with the fair housing committees helping to secure black and white buyers to assure that the development is fully integrated. This kind of assistance is more appropriate to our experience and pattern of work than to be involved in the technical end of development or passing on funds to those who do the developing.

I do not understand the suggestions Jim makes in his approach which calls for a community organizer to work with the concerned people in the area. As I understand the proposal, we have open land which might be developed as a project with a new community of residents to be placed there. I don't see where the community base is that he would start from and how we would have people involvement until there are houses ready for purchase. I think he is right that private interests could just as well carry out the proposed project which would not entail any involvement of the AFSC, except at the point I indicated earlier.

On the basis of reactions we have now from Atlanta and Philadelphia, I think Noyes should tell Bob Thompson that we are the wrong team to be playing in that ball game.

Subject: More on the DeKalb County Housing Project

Please read first the attached Memo from Moreland Smith; this Memo (mine) will have more meaning.
When , on July 29, I relayed your position on the Project to Bob Thmpson he was somewhat disturbed and said we had misunderstood the purpose of AFSC's being approached. He asked for a few days in which to reply. I told him that in the event of a misunderstanding I certainly would pass on a corrected version and let High Point and Philadelphia reconsider.

Instead of communicating with me, Bob asked Moreland to meet with him and Helen Bullard Tuesday, Aug 30; Moreland asked Ike Saporta to join him, who, in turn asked whether I would be attending. I called Bob to ask whether I should. He replied that it would not be necessary. I gather that Bob was going to lay the matter before SRC. (There had been some mention of the possibility of Interfaith, Inc.'s involvement).

You will note from Moreland's Memo (delivered late Wed., July 31) that it is the other piece of property, across and down the road from the one we thought was in question. I knew there was a second parcel but I had never seen it, Those of us who met July 22 discussed mainly the "land-locked" parcel, but feared that whichever parcel might be examined for purposes described in the Draft, DeKalb attitudes would prevail. It now appears as is noted in Moreland's Memo, that the parcel really under consideration is already zoned residential, etc.

I have had conversations with John Steinichen this morning. He is chairman of Interfaith, and speaking only for himself, he is quite hopeful that Interfaith directors will give favorable consideration to becoming involved in the Project. Helen Bullard will prepare a presentation to HUD upon which the directors will act Aug. 15. (See Interfaith communication attached).

Interfaith is better equipped to take on this sort of Project than is AFSC, as I see it. Nevertheless, I am passing on Moreland's Memo so that all concerned may be apprised of developments to date.

I find after talking more fully with Mr. Robert Thompson, HUD, that I have made a recommendation and taken a stand on the Advisory Committee based on erroneous information. Quite sometime ago, Mrs. Clayton showed me a piece of property in DeKalb County owned by a Mrs. Gaines which was primarily "land bound". This was the property which I thought we were discussing at our last meeting. However, I now find the property in question is another piece of property which has adequate access at present and is also presently zoned for single family dwellings. The proposed arrangement would not require American Friends to be the sponsor or promoter only to serve administratively as the recipitant and disburser of the Planning Funds ($10,000.00). As can well be imagined the owners do not have the necessary development funds and HUD is desirous of furnishing the "seed money" for making this planning feasibility study.

Because of the "political" atmosphere in DeKalb it is quite possible that existing housing construction codes could be stringently enforced thus getting rid of the present Negro occupancy. Also, it is most possible that this land now zoned for residential purposes could be rezoned for industry. This property is not suitable for industry use and therefore would remain vacant, thus exclude it from Negro residential use.

Because of the above information I strongly urge American Friends to reconsider this case.

I must emphsize because of the local situation time is of the essence and if American Friends are interested in providing a means of action on a delicate matter they must act immediately.

DeKalb NEW ERA 8/1/68 DECATUR, GEORGIA, T

HOME OWNER GETS TOUGH! — Real estate brokers are sort of unwelcome these days at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Anderson at 2066 Barberrie Lane in the East Lake section of DeKalb. The couple have joined some of their neighbors who say they're fed up with high-pressure brokers trying to "block-bust" the area with panic selling tactics as a few Negro families move in. (Photo by Kirby Freeman)

East Lake Residents Hit 'Block-Busting'

By KIRBY FREEMAN

"Unscrupulous real estate dealers are trying to panic us and make us put our homes on the market."

This terse statement by a young husband and father, made to about 100 other husbands and wives grouped around him, set the theme for a protest meeting Friday night in the East Lake section of South DeKalb.

"Block-busting" tactics by a dozen or more high pressure real estate brokers have so aroused the white property owners of the community that they have decided to organize and fight back.

First gathering of the alarmed citizens was held Friday night in an annex of Glenbrook Baptist Church on Parker Avenue, between Glenwood Road and McAfee Road, south of East Lake Golf Course and Country Club.

NAMED CHAIRMAN

Elected temporary chairman was Mrs. James W. Helton of 1895 Delphine Drive who with her husband was instrumental in calling the protest meeting.

Newspaper reporters and TV cameramen were invited "in hopes this vicious underground campaign can be brought to light."

Here's the situation as outlined by spokesmen for the protesting property owners:

There are several hundred homes---probably a thousand ---in the general area south of Glenwood Road between Second Avenue on the west, Candler Road on the east, and extending south to McAfee Road and beyond, toward Tilson Road and the East Freeway.

The area has had all white residents until recently. Now a dozen or two Negro families have bought out white home owners and have settled in the community, scattered here and there.

Within the past two months a handful of real estate brokers and firms have begun to circularize the neighborhood with letters and memos as well as phone calls and personal visits, warning that the community is "going Negro" and urging residents to sell their homes or their equities.

CRUISE NEIGHBORHOOD

"For Sale" signs have begun to appear in front of several houses on most of the streets. Occasionally, white residents have observed autos filled with Negroes cruising the neighborhood as if they were house hunting.

More and more property owners are succumbing to the "high pressure pitches" of agents and putting up their houses for sale---creating a near-panic situation.

"We have begun to integrate peacefully in our community," Mrs. Helton told property-owners at the protest meeting, "and we need to organize and stabilize the area. The area will not go all colored unless you people panic and sell your homes."

One man stood up at the meeting to report that although he was not interested in selling he had a phone call from a broker who said "he had a Negro buyer who had looked at my place and was ready to buy it and move in. I told him it was not for sale."

"These agents are going house to house, stuffing mail boxes with threatening notices and calling us on the phone," according to one woman who addressed the gathering.

"They offer you $1,000 for your equity without knowing anything about the property or even inspecting it. When they called me, they told me they already had my home sold."

Mrs. Helton, the chairman, said she and Mr. Helton had discussed the situation with the Georgia Real Estate Commission and had been told "it is illegal for somebody to tell you that this area is going all colored and that you must sell your home."

Observers at the meeting were William J. Strickland, president of DeKalb Board of Realtors, and Walter Scott, active member of the board.

CHARGES ILLEGALITY

Invited to the rostrum, Mr. Scott said that apparently many statements being made by the house agents are unethical and some of them are illegal.

"However," Mr. Scott added, "there are borderline cases where it's hard to prove they're doing wrong. You'll have to catch these agents misstating facts to bring action against them. Your best defense is for you home owners not to become frightened."

Invited to speak was Bob Sigmon, member of the steering committee of the Druid Hills Fair Housing Committee and an employee of the Southern Regional Education Board.

Pointing out that "Druid Hills has had very minor integration of Negroes so far," Mr. Sigmon explained that "there's an acute housing shortage for Negroes in the Atlanta area who are able to buy homes and the kind of minority able to buy homes in your area has to have an income level that makes them good neighbors.

"The code of ethics of the National Association of Real Estate Boards requires that a broker not be concerned with the ethnic or religious nature of a community."

Mr. Sigmon counselled the home owners to "take the right approach that will stop the panic that is about to emerge among you."

About a dozen property owners stood up in the audience to express their views, gist of which seemed to be that they were willing to band together to resist the "unscrupulous" brokers and to agree to keep their homes and integrate the community peaceably.

Several spokesmen conceded, however, that some property owners in the area have declared they will sell their homes and move before they will live in an integrated area.

NOT FOR SALE

Since the meeting, several owners have indicated their determination to resist the "block-busting" tactics by placing signs on their lawns stating their homes are not for sale.

One couple on Barberrie Lane put up a sign that read: "Real Estate Salesmen Will Be Shot on Sight."

Displayed to the audience was a classified ad page taken from an Atlanta daily to indicate that a rash of ads offering to sell homes in the East Lake area showed some property owners were on the verge of panicking.

After a show of hands indicated most residents at the meeting were determined not to sell, Mrs. Helton asked for volunteers to serve as "block captains" to help organize residents on their streets.

The chairman released the following initial list, to which, she said, more names would be added.

Quillian Street --- Sam J. Miller. Parker Avenue --- John B. Callaway. McAfee Road --- Mrs. W. C. Jameson. Delphine Drive --- J. H. Bennett, Mrs. Hazel Hayes. East Starmount Way --- Mrs. C. W. (Pick up your tray and come through the line and then to Room B.)

Although this is the middle of the vacation season and many of us will be away, we hope that those who are in town will come to help us think through a difficult situation now confronting the residents of the East Lake area, where blockbusting is going on at a perilous rate.

Peggy Helton, who heads up a movement to organize resistance to the unscrupulous tactics used by some real estate agents, will be speaking for an hour on WRNG's Open Line at 10 a.m. on August 9. We suggest that those of you who have an opportunity tune in for the hour to hear the sort of questions and answers which develop, on the basis of which we should be better informed to discuss the situation at lunch. We have asked Mrs. Helton to join us at the noon meeting.

We would very much appreciate your telephoning us at 523-6628 to advise us whether or not we may expect you at the luncheon meeting.

'Mod' Housing: Low-Cost Cure For an Old Ill

National Observer
Aug. 12, 1968

Can Building-Block Houses Stop Inner-City Decay And Please the Eye?

The men who fret about the nation's worsening shortage of good housing have had this recurring dream:

Houses of infinite variety and price roll off mass-production lines. Instead of the houses of wood and brick that line the familiar streets of suburbia, these houses look like building blocks, or "modules."

When the owner outgrows his house, he sells it to a buyer who arranges to have it broken down into building-block units again and moved, by truck or even helicopter, to the buyer's lot. The original owner buys other building-block modules to suit his new needs, and puts them together to suit his fancy.

Or, if he yearns for the wide-open spaces, he simply packs up his house and moves it to the country.

This is no longer the stuff of dreaming. Mass-production houses, which one authority says will be "the biggest change in housing since man came out of the cave," is already at hand. Mass-produced houses are now. The battered old house trailer, a relic of the days of Bonnie and Clyde, has grown up. The trailer became the mobile house, and now the mobile house is becoming the modular house.

'Relocatable Modular Houses'

Encouraged by concerned Federal, state, and local housing officials, the mobile house industry is now turning out modular housing for low and moderate-income families and turning it out at a profit. By the simple expedient of mating the sometimes garish looks of their mobile product with such things as peaked roofs and cedar-wood siding, the manufacturers are producing what they like to call "relocatable modular houses" in the $5,000 range that are barely distinguishable from the far more costly conventional product.

The modular house is simply a house built in sections—or modules, in the jargon of the industry. The buyer takes as many sections, or modules, as he needs and can afford, much like a woman buying a sectional sofa.

These sections, or modules, evolved from mobile homes—the oversized giants that spread 14 feet across the highway and often run to 60 feet in length. Nearly every American motorist has found one in his path at one time or another. Though these evolved from the house trailer, they are on wheels now only for convenience in moving them, and once on the site are often put on blocks or a foundation and the wheels are removed.

These mobile homes make up a big industry, and a big part of the housing industry already. Says Paul Rudolph, a

Moving Ahead

"We finally develop a weapon terrible enough," says an Air Force officer, "and suddenly the Russians get mighty interested in missile moratoriums and disarmament talks. Why? We're more than two years ahead of them on this one."

A cynical view? Perhaps. But the speed of developments affecting the strategic power balance convinces both Moscow and Washington that either meaningful progress be made now toward limiting and subsequently reducing nuclear armaments, or a huge new expansion of the competition to build more lethal nuclear-weapon systems will begin. In fact, this new cycle of the arms race appears to be starting now, which is why the imminent talks with Russia are stirring heated arguments here.

Last week the Pentagon confirmed—with a certain finality—that it would begin this month a two-year series of tests of the Poseidon and Minuteman III missiles. Each missile will power a revolutionary payload that can rain up to 12 nuclear warheads on different, widely separated targets. The payload is called the Space Bus or MIRV, an acronym for Multiple Independently targeted Re-entry Vehicle. Explains John Foster, the Defense Department's director of research and engineering: "After the main booster has cut off, the bus keeps making minute adjustments to its speed and direction and after each adjustment it ejects another warhead. Thus each warhead is delivered on a trajectory to a different city, or if desired, all can be delivered within one city."

Mr. Foster

MIRV would increase the number of nuclear warheads that U.S. strategic missiles could carry from 1,710 to possibly 12,000 or 15,000. It makes the U.S. and Russian antiballistic-missile (ABM) defense systems of the 1970s obsolete, even though they have barely been started.

Administration officials credit Congress' approval of the second-year ABM authorization in June and the Russian awareness of the MIRV tests for Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko's announcement on June 27 of his country's willingness to discuss arms control and disarmament. Agreement on the date and location of the talks is expected "any day."

Mr. Gromyko's announcement was not as startling as it had first appeared. Says a State Department official: "Our strategic position has crystallized this summer. Russia has come close enough to parity with us in numbers of deliverable warheads for them to consider a freeze, and neither of us has made much progress on an ABM system. But when we develop our MIRV capability, which will re-establish our lead, we disrupt any balance, dictating that they rush for a similar capability. Now, for the first time, we have somewhat leading architect, writing in the June issue of Progressive Architecture magazine: ". . . the mobile-house industry accounts for one out of every five new housing starts in the United States today and the graph goes up and up and up. They . . . produce a quite decent equivalent of a two-bedroom air-conditioned house for $6,000. The [manufacturers] produce a $3,000 house. Now where else can you buy this kind of thing?"

Criticism has in the past poured down on the heads of those who make and buy these homes, because too often they have littered the countryside with ill-kept homes in cluttered lots.

Yet, during the past year, these ugly ducklings have begun to evolve into something quite different. Just as mobile houses look less like their trailer ancestor and more like a house, the modules assume the form of attractive single-family dwellings, town houses, and even three-story apartment dwellings.

Now the modular-house manufacturers are out for bigger things. "We are shooting for the inner-city market," says David Wolff, an executive of Magnolia Homes Manufacturing Corp., a subsidiary of Detroit's Guerdon Industries.

The plight of the slum dweller has provided the impetus for the acceleration of modular-house production. Nearly 50 years ago, the great Swiss architect Le Corbusier, foresaw the troubles America is experiencing today.

A Cause of Unrest

"Building is at the root of social unrest today," he said. "Machines will lead to a new order both of work and leisure. Entire cities have to be constructed, or reconstructed, in order to provide a minimum of comfort, for if it is delayed too long, there may be a disturbance of the balance of society. . . .

"We are dealing with an urgent problem of our epoch. Nay, with the problem of our epoch. . . . Architecture or revolution."

Says Progressive Architecture:

"With visions of building-boxes dancing in their heads, architects today are dreaming of realizing lower-cost mass housing at last. This time, those dreams may not remain mere unfulfilled wishes."

Not a Complete Answer

Few housing experts contend, however, that the mobile-home and prefabricating industry have all the answers to the nation's housing ills, either urban or rural.

John King, director of the Institute of Environmental Design of the National Association of Home Builders in Washington, D.C., says: "We must be cautious about accepting these new structural systems as being the answer to low-income housing. There must be a total approach ing site by flatbed truck, erection of the units taking 8 days.

Each two-story town house was produced for $8,000, or $10 per square foot, representing a 15 to 20 per cent savings over comparable conventional construction. FHA and Magnolia Homes say unit costs can be brought down even further.

The townhouse units consist of a first floor 12-foot by 32-foot module containing living room, kitchen and dining area, storage space and stairwell; a 12-foot by 34-foot second floor with two bedrooms, full bathroom, and storage closets. The tenants of Fredella Village, most of whom are former residents of China Street Bottom, pay an average $60 a month under the rent-supplement program.

When houses are brought down to the $5,000-to-$10,000 price range, they come within practical reach of millions of lower-income American families who cannot afford new houses built conventionally. In a private modular-house development in Ashburn, Ga., for example, Joe Jones can buy a three-bedroom, one-bathroom house of 736 square feet on a small patch of land for $5,689, with an FHA-insured mortgage of 6¾ per cent. For this unit, Mr. Jones makes a down payment of $189, his monthly payment to principal, interest, and taxes, coming to $57 and some change.

A University Development

One of the most attractive modular-house developments in the United States, sidered to be the maximum for profitable operations.

Problems aside, the developers believe that they have proven acceptance of industrialized housing by sophisticated, higher-income groups. Consequently, they have put together a number of experimental modular ski chalets in Vermont for sale in the $18,000 range, and are studying modular concepts of vacation homes for sale in Florida. There may be no limit to how fancy the houses and prices can get. —PETER T. CHEW industry have all the answers to the nation's housing ills, either urban or rural.

John King, director of the Institute of Environmental Design of the National Association of Home Builders in Washington, D.C., says: "We must be cautious about accepting these new structural systems as being the answer to low-income housing. There must be a total approach to reducing the costs of land, of maintenance and repair, to the problem of codes, and so on. Modular construction doesn't mean a thing without substantial volume production."

A White House commission is at work now on a report on a wide-ranging array of housing problems—studying such diverse subjects as building codes, land use, zoning, and the like. Paul Douglas, the former Democratic senator from Illinois, heads this commission; another, headed by private builder Henry J. Kaiser, is studying the role of private industry in low-income housing. Both reports are expected by the end of the year.

For the moment, the mobile-home companies such as Redman, DMH, Magnolia, and others, are there first with what appears to be the most. Certainly it is obvious that without mammoth Federal subsidy, the conventional home-building industry cannot create the 6,000,000 low-cost housing units which President Johnson has called for in the next decade. Mr. Johnson's $5.3-billion housing act represents the first big instalment toward the goal of construction or rehabilitation of 1,700,000 housing units over the next three years.

A Bottomless Pit?

But replacing the nation's slums with conventional housing, contend many builders and financiers, could be a matter of trying to fill a bottomless pit.

"At $20,000 a unit, which is average for conventional methods, it would cost $120 billion to meet this goal," says Arthur M. Watkins, a New-York-based housing authority. "Now add to that the cost of land, and the inevitable bureaucratic overhead of the Government, and you have a bill that the U.S. taxpayer just will not pay. Perhaps he should, but he won't."

The modular-house boomlet, then, comes at a felicitous time. Much of the credit for prodding the already prosperous mobile-homes firms into modular housing must go to Charles A. Dieman, assistant commissioner for technical standards of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), according to industry sources.

Mr. Dieman has involved his agency in a score of projects, totaling 1,000 dwelling units. More are in the planning stage.

This thing could go big within a year, real big," says Mr. Dieman.

The first such modular-house project insured by FHA under its experimental housing and rent-supplement programs, was Fredella Village in Vicksburg, Miss. The project is a direct outgrowth of a meeting which Mr. Dieman held in August 1966 with members of the Mobile Home Manufacturers Association in Washington, D.C., in which he outlined the desperate need for low-income housing and said: "Let's see what you can do."

The Vicksburg development, sponsored by the nonprofit Frederick Yeamans Dabney Foundation, consists of 28 two-story townhouses which replaced a pocket of condemned Negro slum shacks known as "China Street Bottom."

Manufactured in 17 Days

The modules, each of which weigh 9 tons, were manufactured within 17 days in a Magnolia Homes plant 10 miles outside Vicksburg and carried to the build-

For this unit, Mr. Jones makes a down payment of $189, his monthly payment to principal, interest, and taxes, coming to $57 and some change.

A University Development

One of the most attractive modular-house developments in the United States, representing something of a first for medium-income tenants, is now under construction in Amherst, Mass., for rental to faculty and married students of the University of Massachusetts.

"For those who deplore the mobile home and cringe at the thought of mass housing produced in a mobile-home factory, the Glen Development Co. project at Amherst, Mass., will be a revelation," say the authors of The New Building Block. "The eccentric and romantic forms of these homes bear no resemblance to the familiar mobile home."

The result of teamwork between the Glen Co. of Washington, D.C., the architectural firm of Armstrong and Salomonsky of Richmond, Va., and the South Hill, Va., plant of Magnolia Homes, the two-story apartment houses fit well into the university setting. Of stained cedar-plywood exterior, the larger apartments include two-story living rooms with dramatic, sloping roofs.

Known as Puffton Village Apartments, they consist of 480 apartment units of one, two, and three bedrooms, renting for $130, $160, and $190. The first 104 units have been rented.

Donald Glen, the youthful president of Glen Developers, says that the cost of the first 104 units compares with conventional construction, but that the telescoping of construction time resulted in lower financing costs and added rental income. There were, he concedes, many first-time problems to be overcome.

Problems With Local Codes

For one thing, the developers had to contend with local building codes, unions, and politicians. FHA's Mr. Dieman interceded at several critical points, serving as a mediator, ironing out differences.

Adding to the cost of each unit was the long, 775-mile haul from South Hill, Va., to Amherst at a cost of $550 per unit. Steep transportation costs are a major bugaboo of industrialized housing, a 300-mile trip from the factory generally con-

PEACE CORPS DIRECTOR SAYS COLLEGES IGNORE REAL CAUSE OF UNREST

WASHINGTON--Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn predicts continuing protest activities on college campuses in the coming year because many school administrators have not tuned in to the real cause of unrest among students.

In an article in the September issue of Glamour magazine, (on sale Aug. 20) Vaughn states: "It is becoming clear that half of today's students are out to change the system--not necessarily our system but their system of higher education. I believe they're right in thinking it is ready for radical overhauling."

The trouble, Vaughn believes, stems from depersonalization of higher education and failure to recognize students as adults capable of full participation in society and in educational affairs.

The student is demanding a personal experience, Vaughn says, and turns on the school administration. "If this is to be reversed, the faculty must be liberated, and perhaps reoriented toward the student" the Peace Corps director says.

He points out, "It may be that there will be more dissenion on the campus similar to the unrest which rocked many campuses last year unless changes ensue in the decision-making apparatus of higher education."

Vaughn's opinions are based on the results of a Louis Harris survey of student attitudes toward current issues such as Peace Corps service, the Vietnam war, the civil rights movement, and student activism. The Harris poll, commissioned by the Peace Corps, was supplemented by in-depth interviews conducted by Peace Corps staff members on 12 representative campuses.

"The two most significant results of our studies," says Vaughn, "were the finding that the real revolutionaries totaled less than four per cent of the student population and that one third of the students were activsts who want to work for reform within the system."

According to Vaughn, the surveys indicated that 11 per cent of all students are "true protest-activists;" i.e., those who comprise the leadership of most campus protest activities. However, only four per cent of all students are "so radical or anarchistic in their views to be considered out of communication with society."

"There is another 30 per cent committed to social and political action but who feel that their goals can be attained within existing systems," says Vaughn. "Add to these groups an estimated 10 per cent whom we can call constructivists--those committed to social and political action, but who have not engaged in dissent or protest movements."

This adds up, Vaughn says, to approximately 50 per cent of the student body committed to some form of social action, ranging from violent protest to doing community volunteer work.

Vaughn describes the 50 per cent who are still uncommitted to social action as "the remnant of the 'silent generation' of the '50s.

He points out that the Harris survey shows a drop in interest in Peace Corps service among the four per cent of students who are radical activists (primarily due to anti-Government sentiment because of the Vietnam war).

"But on the other hand, the rapidly increasing number of the more moderate activists who were very interested in the Peace Corps gave us a greater number of students likely to volunteer for the Peace Corps," Vaughn says.

Mini-Houses for Poor?

By STEVE BASSETT

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—The structure is small and unimpressive. It almost has to be called a mini-house.

The mini-house's builder and a growing number of proponents says it may offer the first real hope of home ownership to the nation's poor.

The one and two-bedroom home sells for $5,300 to $6,300. The maximum monthly payment is $61, considered well within the capabilities of families with incomes of $3,000 or even less.

The Federal Housing Authority has given its support to the concept.

NEVER BEFORE in its history had the FHA agreed to underwrite the mortgages of such cheaply priced homes in an urban area.

"This is a drastic departure for us," said Charles Christy, deputy FHA director in Phoenix. "Since the war we've been looking at housing through our eyes, which are admittedly middle class white."

To Herman Chanen, a Phoenix builder who three years ago conceived the mini-house idea with businessman Tom Chauncey, the program offers "at least an attempt to solve the problem of ghetto housing."

And to Mayor Milton Graham the program "for the first time makes available a sound concept of adequate housing to the poor people of the ghetto."

But to Earl Swain, a retired Negro carpenter, the embryonic program "is certain to make a buck for somebody."

JUST WHAT is a mini-house?

The homes are built of masonry, with conventional wood truss roofs, asphalt shingles and tiled floor. Each comes with kitchen range, refrigerator and home cooling unit.

The one-bedroom house, with 509 square feet, also has a built-in sofa in the living room. After a down payment of $100, the basic mortgage will be $51. Additionally, upkeep and utilities may be expected to bring total expenses to $71.

The two-bedroom, with 721 square feet, requires a down payment of $150. Like the smaller home the price is predicated on a 30-year mortgage, in this case $60 monthly. Maintenance and utilities should average another $20.

CHANEN, who is making his plans available to any builder who wants them, estimates it would cost an additional $1,000 to add a bedroom to the larger home, making it suitable for a family of eight.

Four mini-houses now are under construction in south Phoenix, utilizing all but one of five 1,500-foot parcels into which a standard residential lot had been divided.

"This reduces the land cost to $350 a parcel," explains Chanen. "Otherwise the lot would have cost $1,750, a prohibitive factor for anyone living on a poverty-level income."

This is one of two keys to the program—maximum use of available land.

The new construction is the first of any kind seen on this block of East Chipman Street in some time. There are several vacant, weed and debris-covered lots. The shattered windows of an abandoned house stare blankly across the street at the workmen.

"The area must also have utilities available," said Chanen. "If improvements had to be run in, the cost would also be prohibitive."

Chanen says a builder who is willing to work at a minimal profit could conceivably make the mini-house workable in any urban area.

MELVIN HIMMELSTEIN, director of the FHA office in Phoenix, recalls the day a representative of the FHA's technical standards office arrived from Washington.

"He looked over Chanen's plans and said: 'If he can come up with this house for the price he claims he can, we're interested.' "

Approval to underwrite the mortgages came in June.

Dear Mr. Smith:

We are delighted you have agreed to participate in the 1968 Peace Corps Public Affairs Orientation Conference September 17 and 18 at Stone Mountain Inn. We are looking forward to a very interesting interchange of ideas between the newly hired Peace Corps Recruiters and people like yourself who have so graciously accepted the invitation to attend.

The Peace Corps representatives are, for the most part, recently returned Volunteers who for the next nine months will visit college campuses in the South to recruit additional volunteers for the Corps. We feel it is very important they spend some time discussing their experiences and opinions with various people from the Atlanta community to strengthen their effectiveness as campus recruiters through:

1. A better understanding of themselves as communicators with others;

2. A better understanding of their individual feelings and beliefs about their Peace Corps experience; and

3. A better understanding of current issues in the U. S. and Peace Corps' relevance to them.

From Atlanta we have invited people with varied backgrounds (see attached list) in order to carry out a more meaningful dialogue. We do not wish this to be a one-sided discussion.

We are including, for your information, selected readings prepared for the Peace Corps representatives. We hope you will find time to acquaint yourself with this material. Also attached is a list of Peace Corps participants and a partial list of participants from the Atlanta community plus a "fact sheet" for additional information.

Again, we wish to thank you very much for your participation in this conference. If you have any questions or problems please contact us at 526-6825.

Dear Moreland:

Your note about the sermon on October 6th is very flattering and mightily gratifying.

There is no copy of the sermon. I seldom write them out completely. This should be obvious from the rambling and unincisive quality of my preaching.

Young people, sensitive or not, have the pain of disappointment for the world is seldom if ever like they dream it. Further, a young person is called to be a hero. Heroes always end up tragically either in reality or in fantasy. The Christian religion offers to deliver us from fate which ends in death. The mark of the Christian freedom from fate and death for this life is not based on heroism but hid in God who gives us identity as persons, not heroes. I would suggest that much of your two friends' disappointment lies right there.

Three of my heroes have been killed in the past five years. I cried, and still do when the story is told. They caught me not because they were brave and heroic men, which they were, but because they had life and that abundantly.

Blessings.

Faithfully yours,

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

MEMORANDUM

To: Advisory Committee Members
From: Henry L. DeGive, Chairman
Date: October 14, 1968

Subject: FIRST MEETING, 1968-69 PROGRAM YEAR

Dr. Vivian Henderson has graciously invited our committee to hold its first meeting of our eighth year of service in Atlanta on the Clark College campus. Those of you who were present last year will recall our first meeting there with pleasure. It set the tone for succeeding meetings, even though unavoidable circumstances on occasion reduced expected attendance severely.

Will you please note the following items on your calendar:

Date: Thursday, October 24
Time: 12:30 p.m. (Luncheon $1.50)
() Place: Kresge Hall, Clark College campus ()

Because this will be an especially catered luncheon, it is necessary that we know by noon Wednesday, October 23, the number of guests to expect. You can facilitate our planning by telephoning your acceptance to Rosena Flint (523-6628) before that time.

We are presently preparing the Agenda for this meeting. Two items of particular importance are these:

I. Planning our 1968-69 Fair Housing Program's scope and methods for effective cooperation with other groups concerned with Open Occupancy under provisions of Title VIII, Civil Rights Act of 1968, and the U. S. Supreme Court decision re the Civil Rights Act of 1866.

II. Appointment of a co-Chairman to succeed Cleveland L. Dennard, whose advice and counsel we continue to miss.

Other items may be included or introduced by members attending.

As full attendance as is possible will be gratifying to all of us.

(*) See next page, please.

(*) Kresge Hall (brick, with green shutters) is best entered from the Lawshe Street side of Clark College campus, between Fair Street and Greensferry Avenue. Parking facilities are extremely limited. It is suggested that you allow ample time to find a parking space and reach Kresge Hall by 12:30, when lunch will be served. Kresge Hall may also be entered from the Chestnut Street side of the campus.

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

PERSONAL MEMORANDUM

To: All Members of the ACRP Advisory Committee
From: Noyes Collinson

Subject: 1968-69 FAIR HOUSING PROGRAM

The luncheon meeting scheduled for Thursday, October 24, in Kresge Hall, Clark College, will inaugurate our eighth year of service in Atlanta. While I fervently wish that all of you could be with us, I know and regret that for various very good reasons some few of you will be unable to attend. This is a personal memorandum through which I am attempting to thank all of you, and to express my gratitude for your never-failing advice and support as together we developed our employment on merit program and later added fair housing as a new dimension. Without you we could not have made the advances to which we may modestly lay claim.

As I review our membership roster, I am impressed with the realization that many of you have been what we might term "charter members", having affiliated with the Advisory Committee during its first year of operation. Although appointments to committee membership technically have been for a three-year period with option for renewal for a second term, you have valiantly stood by year in and year out. We have lost a few members by attrition, mainly caused by removal from the Atlanta area. Their places have been adequately filled by those of you who have identified with our program in more recent years.

The thought occurs to me that possibly there may be those of you who, by reason of the shift in focus from employment on merit to fair housing, or because the latter program will call for advisory and to some extent participatory functions at the neighborhood level, may wish to take Sabbatical (but not final) leave. I hope none will, but if even one should so decide, the Committee and I will regret but understand. Will each of you please make a very special effort to be with us on October 24? We do need your advice and guidance as we embark on our new program, during which we shall share our experience and acquired skills with other groups concerned with fair, adequate, and decent housing for all persons residing in Metropolitan Atlanta.

Committee members will recall that in January of this year Xernona Clayton joined the staff of Model Cities-Atlanta. Since that time our program has been a one-man staff operation with the able assistance of a competent secretary. The Advisory Committee shared the opinion of the Southeastern Regional Executive Committee and the Community Relations Division in Philadelphia that our Atlanta employment on merit program has gone about as far as it should in view of the large-scale programs launched at federal and state levels and supplemented by other privately supported organizations. For these reasons, the employment on merit program has virtually, in Quaker terms, been "laid down". Henceforth, the Atlanta Community Relations program will focus full attention on Fair Housing (Open Occupancy) in the Metropolitan Atlanta area.

The American Friends Service Committee, because of budgetary deficiencies, finds it necessary to curtail some of its many programs and to drop a few where other organizations could be counted on to maintain them. Our Atlanta program will continue, but on a one-man staff basis. As the date set for my retirement approaches, we are searching for my successor. No appointment has yet been made, but when he (or she) takes over my spot, I know the Committee will continue the support it provided me and which made my seven years in Atlanta the most rewarding of my forty-five years of professional service.

Mr. Edward Baxter
Regional Director

Dear Mr. Baxter:

Persuant to the conversation that we had with regard to HUD assisting the American Friends Service Committee in making plans for the development of 100 acres for single family use in DeKalb County, I wish to inform you that we have been in contact with Mr. Harry Adley in preparation of a proposal.

Mr. Adley is currently in the process of preparing the plan and as soon as it is completed, we will submit it to you for consideration. He has informed us that the plan, which will make available some 300 single family housing units, will cost approximately $10,000. As you perhaps know, the budget of our organization is limited which leaves us dependent on other sources of financial assistance. Your department may consider this a necessary project and find it important on your list of programs to fund.

The plan will include property boundary lines, street and lot layouts, sewer lines, telephone cables and all amenities necessary to make this a first-class subdivision for citizens living in DeKalb County, without regard to race. It is estimated that six months will be required to develop the plan which will enable property owners, AFSC and FHA to participate, jointly, in the 300 lots under consideration.

As you so well know, the workable program for DeKalb County has expired and will not likely be renewed in the very near future. For this reason, the American Friends Service Committee and the DeKalb County property owners have no alternative than to develop this property. We propose to develop the houses in the price range of $12,000 to $20,000 for this appears to be the market price for the area as well as the type of housing which will fit in the existing pattern of the neighborhood.

As you also recall, the American Friends Service Committee, through its housing program, has been in the forefront of the movement to stabilize areas in Southwest Atlanta (SWAP) and has cooperated with citizens in DeKalb County in the formation of a Fair Housing Committee to help integrate their community.

Although stabilization has been our main emphasis, our primary objective is to support and encourage freedom of residence in our communities so that all persons, regardless of race, can secure the housing they desire and can afford.

Creating and increasing a housing supply such as this project demands will make this objective a reality and help to achieve freedom of opportunity in housing.

Sincerely,

Xernona Clayton

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETING

12:15 p.m., Thursday, October 24, 1968
Kresge Hall - Clark College
Atlanta, Georgia

MINUTES

Attending: Henry deGive, Vivian Henderson, Winifred McPhedran, Ralph Spillman, Alice Washington, Margaret Via, Richard Hocking, Henrietta Canty, Robert Sigmon, Sarah Mitchell, A. L. Feldman.

Guests: Peggy Helton, the Rev. William Griffin, Donna Warner, Sarah Herbin, Bridget McGuffog, Will Harvey.

Staff: Noyes Collinson, Jack Tatum, Rosena Flint.

Chairman Henry deGive presided. Vivian Henderson, hosting the luncheon, called for a silent blessing and welcomed the Committee and guests. Appreciation was expressed by the Committee for the courteous hospitality extended.

During the luncheon Henry deGive announced the addition of the Reverend Hugh Brooks, pastor of the West End Baptist Church, to the Advisory Committee and introduced guests listed in the attendance roster above.

42.1 Alice Washington accepted appointment to the post of Co-chairman of the Advisory Committee to succeed Cleveland L. Dennard, whose valued assistance will long be remembered. Dr. Dennard is currently president of the newly created Federal Vocational Institute in Washington, D. C.

42.2 The Committee approved application for membership in the (permanent) Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference, indicating its particular concern for participation in the fair housing section of the Conference. Henrietta Canty agreed to represent the American Friends Service Committee on the Conference. Jack Tatum, incoming director of the Atlanta Community Relations Program (AFSC), was named as alternate representative.

42.3 Noyes introduced Jack Tatum, who has been appointed Program Director to succeed him upon his retirement. Jack will assume responsibilities in early November. The date of Noyes' retirement will be announced later. He thanked the Committee for the support its members have given him in developing the Employment on Merit Program and in inaugurating the Fair Housing Program as an added dimension. He observed that his seven years with the American Friends Service Committee have been the most rewarding assignment in his forty-five years of professional employment, and encouraged the Committee to give to Jack Tatum the same support that it has given him.

Jack responded, expressing his pleasure in undertaking the Fair Housing Program directorship, noting that open occupancy will be the major focus to AFSC's Atlanta Community Relations Program in view of the several other organizations, tax-supported and privately financed, which are now operating in the area of equal opportunity in employment.

42.4 Vivian Henderson commented briefly upon a report of the Georgia State Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights (Toward Equal Opportunity in Housing in Atlanta, Georgia). He strongly urged AFSC to press vigorously on every front for the realization of complete open occupancy in Metropolitan Atlanta.

42.5 The remainder of the meeting time was devoted to a discussion of the direction which the Committee's thrust should take in the coming program year (the Committee's eighth). Peggy Helton, speaking for the South DeKalb group,said community attitudes must be changed before there can be stabilization in any area of Metropolitan Atlanta. She reported further that the Georgia Real Estate Commission has been helpful in the group's attempts to stem illegal and unethical "block busting" tactics, and observed that the federal government is abetting such tactics by permitting FHA to lower standards and appraisals.

Bridget McGuffog, speaking for the Doraville Committee, expressed a lack of willingness on the part of some people to make a commitment in favor of meaningful open occupancy. The group will continue meeting in private homes until it is satisfied that commitment is positive and members' strength sufficient to take affirmative action.

Bob Sigmon, newly named chairman of the Druid Hills Fair Housing Committee, distributed copies of its recent pamphlet Talk with Your Neighbor about an Open Community, to which there has been some slight negative reaction. He mentioned a small newspaper ad in the Personals column inviting people interested in fair housing to telephone. This produced only slight reaction. Druid Hills will continue its monthly meetings during which consideration will be given to new approaches, while seeking to achieve its minimum goal of 500 member families out of the 3,000 families resident in the area.

Lack of time prevented further discussion or reports from other Fair Housing Committees which were represented, notably Southwest Atlantans for Progress (SWAP) and Morningside.

Following a brief period of silence, the meeting adjourned at 1:50 p.m. The Steering Committee will determine time and place of future meetings.

NOTICE OF THIRD MEETING

TIME: 12:15 p.m., Friday, November 8, 1968

PLACE: Room "B", Bradshaw's Penthouse Cafeteria
17th Floor, First Federal Building, 40 Marietta St.
(Go through cafeteria line, carry tray to Room "B".)

AGENDA: Formalization of the Proposed Atlanta Area Fair Housing Association.

BACKGROUND

[To refresh memories of those who attended either or both previous meetings, February 23 and May 6, and to alert others who attended neither.]

The February 23 meeting was convened to consider whether or not an association of Fair Housing Committees should be created. Consensus favored such action, but there was general agreement to defer it until after the Metropolitan Atlanta Conference on Open Occupancy proposed by the Federal Executive Board.

The May 6 meeting received progress reports from neighborhood Fair Housing committees and developed plans for participating in and promoting the five-county conference scheduled for May 29. Consensus approved the formation of a "provisional" Atlanta Fair Housing Association to be concerned with "provisional" purposes --five in number, and subsequently condensed into three. Final action, by agreement, was to be taken when the impetus of the May 29 conference could be determined.

The five-county conference exceeded all expectations and, coupled with the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 (Open Occupancy Title VIII) and the Supreme Court decision re the Civil Rights Act of 1866, stimulated the development of a permanent Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference. It is hoped this conference will swing into action soon.

One function of the permanent Conference will deal with open occupancy. Without personal commitment and neighborhood concern the objectives of fair housing legislation (both national and local) can become ineffective. For this reason alone it would seem that the Atlanta Area Fair Housing Association should be affiliated with the permanent housing conference.

Thus the Atlanta Area Fair Housing Association has a number of relationships that should be considered. One is to the neighborhood fair housing groups. One is to the Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference. Still another is to the community in general -- for instance, should the Association support Fair Housing legislation and enforcement by the Atlanta area community, particularly in view of inadequate funding for enforcement of the national Act?

The November 8 meeting, it is to be hoped, will formalize the "provisional" Association and approve or restate its "provisional" purposes, to wit:

(1) To develop and promote all forms of fair housing and good neighbor practice in the Atlanta area.

(2) To encourage and support the formation of good neighbor groups throughout the Atlanta area.

(3) To provide for the exchange of information and techniques among good neighbor groups.

SUBJECT: A Homeownership Program for Low-Income Families

Attached is a statement of policy and guidelines for a Homeownership Program for low-income families, together with an appendix which provides a guide form of Homebuyer's Ownership Agreement. Local Authorities interested in such a program should consult with the appropriate Regional Housing Assistance Office in the planning stage of the program.

A HOMEOWNERSHIP PROGRAM FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

1. General

   a. The following is a description of the essential elements of the HUD Homeownership Program for Low-Income Families (Turnkey III) as it was initially developed for the pilot program in North Gulfport, Mississippi, and subsequently adapted for more general application to other communities. It is intended to serve as a guide to Local Housing Authorities which desire to develop similar programs. Such Local Authorities should consult with the appropriate HUD Regional Housing Assistance Office in the planning stages of a Homeownership Program so as to develop their own particular programs based on this material.

   b. It is important to stress the social goals and aspects of this program. Through this plan, low-income persons are able to experience the pride of homeownership and the sense of responsibility and status which is associated with such ownership. Certain aspects of the program, such as the use of a lease-purchase type of agreement and the formation and functioning of the Homebuyers Association, were established with the intention of stressing the importance of these goals and responsibilities. It is vital that the program help to develop in the low-income participants the feelings of pride, responsibility, and independence during the period when they are paying for their homes and simultaneously raising their families. The Department of Housing and Urban Development urges Local Authorities to administer the program in such a way as to encourage these feelings and this sense of ownership.

2. The Development. A Local Authority will acquire, or develop, a low-rent housing development consisting of a number of Homes. As used herein, a Home includes each family's dwelling unit and the site and grounds which are a part thereof, as well as the prorated share, on a unit basis, of all common grounds, buildings, and facilities. The Authority will finance this acquisition by the sale of its Bonds or Notes which will be amortized over a period of about 25 years, and this will be the capital debt of the development. A proportionate share of this development capital debt will be the capital debt for each Home.

3. Overall Concept

   a. The HUD Homeownership Plan enables a low-income family to earn ownership of a Home by (1) making monthly payments based on 20 percent of its income and (2) providing all the repair and maintenance of the Home. The monthly payments must be at least sufficient to cover the family's share of all operating expenses and reserves, including the budgeted cost of the repair and maintenance the family must provide; but since the family is obligated to provide the repair and maintenance, the budgeted amount paid in for this purpose is credited to the family as a Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve.

b. While the family is performing its obligations, the Local Authority, with the aid of annual contributions (subsidy) from HUD, will be making payments on the capital debt in accordance with a schedule which will assure full payment in about 25 years. Thus, while the capital debt is being reduced, the family's Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is building up. When the amount in the Reserve is sufficient to cover the remaining balance of the debt, including incidental costs of acquiring ownership, the family will take title to the Home.

c. If a family fails to perform needed repair or maintenance, the Local Authority will have the work done and charge the cost to the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve. This will delay the time of ultimate achievement of homeownership. Thus, a family can shorten the time to ownership by performing all the required repair and maintenance.

d. If a family's income is high enough so that its payment based upon income is more than the amount needed to cover all operating expenses and reserves, the excess is used so as to adjust the amount of the HUD subsidy to the income level of the occupant, so that those who can afford to pay the least receive the greatest amount of Government subsidy.

e. On the other hand, if a family wants to shorten the time to ultimate ownership, it can do so by paying in more than the amount required on the basis of 20 percent of its income--for example, if a family wants to pay therein 5 percent more of its income--any such voluntary additional payments, whether paid monthly or in a lump sum, will be added to the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve.

f. At first, the family's status will be that of a tenant of the Authority from month to month but with an obligation to build up a credit of $200 in its Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve within the first two years. When this $200 credit is built up, the family will have the status of a Homebuyer, but it will continue under an obligation to build up the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve until it is $350, and thereafter to keep adding to that amount.

g. If a family's income should increase to the point at which it can obtain financing for a less subsidized FHA-insured loan or, if that is unavailable, an unsubsidized FHA-insured loan, it will be required to complete purchase of its Home (by paying off the balance of the capital debt and incidental costs) through such a loan. However, the family may remain in the Home if it can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Authority that it is unable to obtain such financing.

h. If a family should move from the Home, the Local Authority will use the amount in its Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve to cover the family's obligations and put the Home in good condition for the next occupant; and any remaining balance of the Reserve will be paid to the outgoing family.

4. Participating Families

a. The occupants of these Homes will be low-income families as determined in accordance with the income limits established by the Local Authority and approved by HUD, but with incomes high enough to enable them to afford the minimum monthly payment under paragraph 8b. The applicant families will be screened for admission to the development to select those who are able and willing to provide repairs and maintenance of their homes; who can anticipate achieving ownership within 25 years; who have a desire to work and invest for homeownership; and who demonstrate the likelihood of remaining in the Home and doing what is necessary during an extended period. The nondiscrimination requirements of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 will be observed.

b. The maximum income limit for continued occupancy by the Homebuyer with the aid of HUD annual contributions shall be what the Federal Housing Administration would approve at that time for a less subsidized or, if that is unavailable, an unsubsidized FHA-insured home loan for the Home. Should the Homebuyer reach this point, he shall either buy his Home or vacate the Home, unless the Authority determines that, due to his inability to obtain the necessary financing or any other special circumstances, he is unable to find decent, safe and sanitary housing within his financial reach although making every reasonable effort to do so. He would be required to make a higher monthly payment consistent with his higher income, up to the ceiling established by the Local Authority.

5. Selection and Training of Participants. The Local Authority may contract with a private manager or other suitable entity for the provision of the following interim services:

a. Advise and make recommendations as to suitability of families for admission to the Homeownership Program;

b. Provide preoccupancy training for approved applicants in the care, maintenance, and management responsibilities which go with homeownership and with their rights and obligations under the Homebuyer's Ownership Agreement;

c. Provide for continuation of such training after occupancy so as to make certain that each family understands its rights and responsibilities as to its own property, its neighbors, the Authority, and the community;

d. Assist in the organization of a Homebuyers Association;

e. Join with the Authority in making periodic inspections of each dwelling unit as often as the Authority and the Homebuyers Association may deem necessary to ensure that the families are satisfactorily performing their obligations with respect to the maintenance and upkeep of the dwelling units;

f. Train the participants as to the responsibilities of the Homebuyers Association, described in paragraph 6, and as to their individual rights and obligations.

It is recommended that the entity providing these interim services work closely with the participants to ensure that policies established are agreeable to both the Authority and the Homebuyers.

6. Homebuyers Association. A Homebuyers Association, composed of all the occupants in the project, will be formed for the following purposes:

a. Representing the occupants, individually and collectively, in their relationships with the Authority;

b. Establishing Association rules and recommending general Authority rules, so as to assure maximum enjoyment by the occupants of their Homes and property;

c. Informing and advising occupants on questions relating to the accumulation of credits toward homeownership, the required services to be performed, investment of funds, etc.;

d. Advising and assisting the occupants concerning procedures and practices designed to hasten the date when each may receive title to his Home;

e. Carrying out with the Authority periodic inspections of dwelling units;

f. In general, providing assistance to the occupants on all matters regarding the rights and obligations under the Homeownership Program with respect to their property and their neighbors, the Authority, and the community;

g. Acquiring and holding title, on behalf of the occupants, to all common grounds, buildings and facilities, and acting as the enforcing agent for all covenants and obligations imposed on the land or with respect to dwellings in the interest of all occupants.

7. Status of Participant

a. The relationship between the participant and the Authority shall be governed by a lease-purchase agreement entitled "Homebuyers Ownership Agreement" (see Appendix 1).

b. At first, the family's status will be that of a tenant of the Authority from month to month but with an obligation to build up a credit of $200 in its Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve within the first two years. When this $200 credit amount is built up, the family will have the status of a Homebuyer, but it will continue under an obligation to build up the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve until it reaches $350, and thereafter to keep adding to that amount.

c. In the event the participant fails to achieve the $200 credit within two years, or fails thereafter to achieve and maintain a credit of $350 or more, the Authority and the Homebuyers Association will investigate and take appropriate corrective action.

d. For convenience the participant is referred to as the "Homebuyer" in the provisions which follow.

8. Responsibilities of Homebuyer

a. Maintenance. Each Homebuyer will be responsible for maintaining his dwelling and grounds in good repair, condition, and appearance, to the satisfaction of the Homebuyers Association and the Local Authority.

b. Monthly Payments

(1) The monthly payments to the Authority shall be an amount based on 20 percent of the Homebuyer's family's average monthly income, less an allowance for utilities which the Homebuyer will pay for directly. The required monthly payment will be adjusted when the yearly examination of the Homebuyer's income is made, to reflect any changes in that income. The Homebuyer's income is also subject to a specially scheduled reexamination if the Authority and the Homebuyers Association agree that the circumstances warrant it.

(2) The Homebuyer will be required to pay at least a Minimum Monthly Payment, which must always be sufficient to cover all the items listed in paragraph 9a.

(3) If the Homebuyer's income should fall below the minimum, he must continue to make the Minimum Monthly Payment even though such payment exceeds 20 percent of his income. However, if the Homebuyer is eligible for any additional HUD subsidy, such subsidy may be used, to the extent available, to pay the difference between 20 percent of his income and the amount of the Minimum Monthly Payment.

(4) To enable the Homebuyer to acquire title to his Home within a shorter period, he may make additional voluntary payments, either periodically or in a lump sum, to the Authority. All such payments will be deposited to his credit in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve (see paragraph 12 below).

9. Application of Monthly Payments

a. Minimum. The Minimum Monthly Payment will be applied as follows:

First: To the payment of a Monthly Operating Expense established for the development (see paragraph 10 below);

Second: To the establishment of a Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve for the Home (see paragraph 11 below); and

b. Excess Over Minimum. When the Homebuyer's monthly payment based on 20 percent of his income is in excess of the minimum, the excess will be applied by the Authority to the payment of payments in lieu of taxes applicable to such excess, and the balance to the reduction of annual contributions payable by the Government. In this manner, those who can afford to pay the least will receive the greater Government subsidy.

10. Monthly Operating Expense

a. A Monthly Operating Expense will be established at a rate which will be sufficient for the payment of expenses and provision of an operating reserve as listed below.

(1) Administration Expense - Administrative salaries, travel, legal expenses, office supplies, postage, telephone and telegraph, etc.

(2) Utilities Expense - Those items, if any, to be furnished by the Local Authority.

(3) Common Property Maintenance - for community space, office equipment, grounds, and other common areas, if any.

(4) General Expense - premiums for fire and other insurance, payments in lieu of taxes to the local taxing body, etc.

(5) Provision for Operating Reserve - to build up a reserve for the purposes described in paragraph 13 below.

b. The Monthly Operating Expense rate for each fiscal year will be established on the basis of the approved Operating Budget for each such fiscal year. If it is subsequently determined that the actual operating expense for a fiscal year was more or less than the amount provided by the Monthly Operating Expense established for such fiscal year, the Minimum Monthly Payment for the next fiscal year may be adjusted to account for the difference.

11. Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve

a. A portion of the Homebuyer's monthly payment will be used to establish a Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve for the Home. The purpose of this reserve is to provide funds for the infrequent but costly items of maintenance which may be required over a period of years, such as exterior painting, replacement of range and refrigerator, repair or replacement of roof, major repair to heating, plumbing, or electrical systems, etc. The amount of the monthly payment to be set aside for this reserve will be determined by the Authority with the concurrence of the Homebuyers Association and the approval of HUD.

b. When the maintenance for which this reserve is established is provided by the Authority, the cost will be charged to the Maintenance Reserve for the Home involved. Such maintenance may be provided by the Homebuyer, but only pursuant to prior written agreement with the Authority covering the nature and scope of the work and the amount of credit the Homebuyer is to receive; and in such case the agreed amount shall be charged to the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve and credited to the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve.

c. The Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve applicable to the dwelling may be transferred by the Authority to the Homebuyer to enable him to complete payment for the dwelling, provided that the Authority and the Homebuyers Association agree that such reserve is not then needed for anticipated nonroutine maintenance for the Home.

d. When the aggregate amount of the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve balances for all the Homes exceeds the estimated reserve requirements for 90 days, the Authority will invest the excess in savings accounts and/or securities approved by HUD for the investment of monies on deposit in the General Fund. Interest earned on such investments will be prorated and credited to each dwelling in proportion to the amount invested from each Homebuyer's Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve account or by such other method as may be determined to be equitable for all Homebuyers.

12. Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve

a. Since the Homebuyer will be responsible for maintaining his Home, a portion of his monthly payment in an amount equal to the Local Authority's estimated monthly cost for routine maintenance will be set aside in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve. In addition, credits to this account may be earned as provided in paragraph 11b. If the Homebuyer should elect to make any additional voluntary equity payments, to acquire ownership at an earlier date, such voluntary equity payments will also be credited to this reserve.

b. The Homebuyer must see that the required maintenance is performed. Should he fail to do so, his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve will be charged for the cost therefor in accordance with the procedures established by the Homebuyers Association and the Authority.

c. As stated in paragraph 7, a participant must build up a minimum balance of $200 in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve within two years in order to be entitled to the status and rights of a Homebuyer. Thereafter, the Homebuyer will be expected to continue adding to the reserve until it reaches $350 and thereafter to keep adding to that amount. If the reserve is reduced to a balance below $350, the Authority and the Homebuyers Association will investigate and take appropriate corrective action.

d. Under exceptional circumstances as determined by the Homebuyers Association and the Authority, the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve may be used to pay delinquent monthly payments, provided the amount used for this purpose does not reduce the reserve to a balance below $350 once this sum has been achieved.

e. When the aggregate amount of all Homebuyers' Ownership Reserve balances exceeds the estimated reserve requirements for 90 days, the Authority shall invest the excess in (1) savings accounts and/or securities approved by HUD and the Homebuyers Association for the investment of monies on deposit in the General Fund, or (2), if subscribed to by the Homebuyer, in any organization, such as savings and loan institutions or credit unions, approved by HUD and the Homebuyers Association. Interest earned on the investment of such funds will be prorated and credited to each Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve account in proportion to the amount invested from each Homebuyer's account or by such other method as may be determined to be equitable for all Homebuyers. It is understood that the Authority will not be responsible for any losses that may be incurred thereby.

f. If the Homebuyers Ownership Agreement is terminated prior to ownership, the balance in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve, after payment of costs specified in paragraph 14 below, shall be refunded to the Homebuyer.

13. Operating Reserve

a. The Authority will establish an Operating Reserve to provide funds for extraordinary maintenance of equipment applicable to the community space and grounds, if any, and other areas for which the Authority is responsible, and for unanticipated items for both dwelling and non-dwelling structures, such as extermination of termites or repair of sinking slabs. The Reserve may be accumulated at a specified rate per unit per month.

b. Since actual operating receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year will not ordinarily equal the amounts budgeted, the amount available to supplement the Reserve at the end of the fiscal year may be more or less than the amount budgeted for the Reserve. In such case, the excess or deficit in the Reserve would be taken into consideration when preparing the next Operating Budget, and the Monthly Operating Expense rate may be decreased or increased accordingly.

14. Application of Funds Upon Vacating of Dwelling

a. In the event the Homebuyers Ownership Agreement with the Authority is terminated or if the Homebuyer vacates the Home, the Authority may charge against his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve the amounts required to pay (1) the amount due the Authority, including the monthly payments he is obligated to pay; (2) the Monthly Operating Expense accrued while the Home is vacant, not to exceed 30 days; and (3) the cost of repair and other work required to put the Home in good condition for the next occupant. If the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve balance is not sufficient to cover all of these charges, the Authority will require the Homebuyer to pay the additional amount due; if the amount in the Reserve exceeds these charges, the excess will be paid to him. The unused balance of the Maintenance Reserve and of the Operating Reserve will not be refunded, but will be retained by the Authority for the benefit of the Home and the development, respectively.

b. Settlement with the Homebuyer will be made after 30 days from the date he vacates, and after the actual cost of repairs has been determined. The Homebuyer may, however, obtain settlement as of the date he vacates if he has given to the Authority notice of his intention to vacate 30 days prior to the date he vacates and if the amount to be charged against his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is based on (1) the Authority's estimate as to the cost of repairs and other work required to put the Home in good condition for the next occupant; (2) Monthly Operating Expense for 30 days vacancy, unless a successor occupant is scheduled to move in on an earlier date; and (3) any other amounts the Homebuyer is obligated to pay to the Authority.

15. Achievement of Ownership by Initial Occupant

a. The Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership when his share of the capital debt of the development (based on the actual development cost of the Home) is fully paid, or when the amount in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to the outstanding balance of the debt plus the costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier. The capital debt with respect to the Home will be established in the books of the Authority, at the time of initial occupancy of the Home, as the aggregate debt service (principal plus interest) to be paid on that Home over the 25-year period of amortization. In the event the development has been financed by the issuance of notes as opposed to bonds, this figure may have to be estimated, until the actual interest costs are computed. The development cost of each Home will be determined by prorating the total development cost of the project as determined by the Authority on an equitable basis which takes into consideration the size of the dwellings and their type of construction. The development cost of each Home will include (1) the cost of the dwelling structure and equipment, (2) the cost of land which becomes a part of the Home, including landscaping cost, if any, and (3) a prorated share of the cost of all common grounds, buildings, and facilities, if any.

b. As long as the Homebuyer is a low-income family it will be assisted toward the homeownership goal by HUD annual contributions. In addition, the amount accumulated to the Homebuyer's credit in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve will be used to reduce his share of the debt. Thus, the more that is saved in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve the earlier the time of homeownership will arrive.

c. The anticipated minimum period for achieving ownership would be about 25 years, but depending upon the amount of credit which the Homebuyer can accumulate through maintenance and voluntary payments, the period will be shortened accordingly.

16. Ownership Before Debt Retirement

a. Homeownership may be achieved by those Homebuyers whose income increase to the level where they are no longer low-income families eligible for public housing subsidy (see paragraph 4b). The Homebuyer will be able to purchase the Home by paying the outstanding balance of the debt with respect to his Home and costs incidental to acquiring ownership, using his credit in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve and financing the remainder. It is anticipated that the Homebuyer will receive counseling and guidance from the Authority and the Homebuyers Association as to the circumstances under which it would be most advantageous for him to purchase his dwelling through such financing.

b. In the event of a purchase by the Homebuyer within the first 10 years of his occupancy, the Authority shall restrict the title conveyed by it so as to entitle the Authority, in the event of any resale by the Homebuyer or any successor within 10 years from the date title was conveyed by the Authority, to receive from the seller the amount by which the resale price exceeds the sum of the following:

(1) The amount paid by the Homebuyer to the Authority to achieve ownership, including the funds that were applied for that purpose from his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve;

(2) The estimated interest on the amount in (1) that the Homebuyer would have earned at the prevailing bank interest rates from the time of his acquisition of ownership to the date of the resale;

(3) The value of any improvements made by the Homebuyer; and

(4) Reasonable and necessary expenses incidental to the resale.

17. Ownership by Subsequent Occupants

a. For the following purposes, a "subsequent occupant" is not one who shall have the right to be substituted for the Homebuyer on the Homebuyer's Ownership Agreement in the event of the death or other loss of the Homebuyer.

b. A low-income family succeeding the initial occupant in the Home can also achieve ownership thereof with the assistance of Federal subsidy and in the same manner as described above for its predecessor by making the required monthly payments, performing its own maintenance and repairs, and making voluntary payments. The amount of debt to be amortized will be either the amount necessary to retire the Authority's debt with respect to the Home, determined as in paragraph 15, or the fair market value of the Home at the time the successor family moves in, whichever is the greater.

c. If the amount necessary to retire the Authority's debt with respect to the Home is the greater of the two amounts, the Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership when this amount is fully paid, or when the amount in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to this amount plus the costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier.

d. If the fair market value is the greater of the two amounts, that amount will be established, at the commencement of the successor's occupancy, as a capital debt to be amortized over a 25-year period at the then current bond interest rate for Authority financing, and the Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership at the end of the 25-year period, or when the amount in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to the unamortized balance of the capital debt plus the amount of costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier. After the end of the development's 25th year, any portions of this Homebuyer's payments that would theretofore have been used to reduce Federal annual contributions shall be paid to HUD until (1) the Homebuyer becomes entitled to ownership, or (2) the amount of the HUD annual contributions for his Home has been reimbursed.

e. Illustration of case under 17d

(1) A new occupant takes over a Home in the 10th year of the development. The fair market value of the Home at that time is determined to be $10,000, which happens to be a sum greater than the outstanding balance of the Authority's capital debt with respect to that Home in the 10th year. Therefore, the Authority will establish the sum of $10,000 as if it were a capital debt to be amortized over a 25-year period at the then current bond interest rate which we will assume is 4 percent. On this assumption, the level debt service (principal and interest) would be $640.12 per year, and the Authority would then annually reduce the $10,000 on the basis of this rate of level debt service.

(2) In the development's 25th year, the Authority would have amortized its indebtedness with respect to all Homes in the development, including the Home in this example; however, this will be only the 15th year for the successor occupant so his account will show an outstanding balance at that time of $5,192.00. Therefore, the successor occupant will continue to make monthly payments as before until the $5,192 balance has been further reduced by subsequent annual debt service credits to the point where he can afford to purchase the Home with funds from his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve or private financing. In any event he would become the owner on the 25th anniversary of his occupancy.

(3) As indicated, the successor occupant continues to make monthly payments after the development's 25th year even though no further annual contributions are payable. Any part of these monthly payments in excess of the minimum amount required to meet the Authority's operating expenses (that is, the excess amount which previously was applied by the Authority to reduce the amount of annual contributions payable by the Government as described in paragraph 9b) will be paid to HUD until the family becomes entitled to ownership or until the amount of annual contributions paid by HUD has been reimbursed.

18. Transfer of Title to Homebuyer

When the Homebuyer is entitled to ownership, as described in paragraphs 15, 16, and 17, a closing date will be mutually agreed upon by the parties. On the closing date, the Homebuyer will pay the required amount of money (including any amounts available to him in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve or the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve) to the Authority and receive a warranty deed for the Home. The Authority will also provide an owner's title insurance policy showing marketable title in the Homebuyer, subject, if applicable, to the restriction described in paragraph 16b.

19. Responsibilities of Homebuyer After Acquisition of Ownership

After acquisition of ownership, each Homeowner will be required to pay to the Authority or to the Homebuyers Association a monthly fee for (1) the maintenance of community space, grounds, and other common areas, if any, and (2) the maintenance and operation of utility facilities.

HOMEBUYERS OWNERSHIP AGREEMENT

This Agreement is entered into the _____day of _____, 19___, between the _____Housing Authority (herein referred to as the "Authority") and the undersigned.

1. Introduction

The Homebuyer and the Authority have agreed to a homeownership undertaking under which the Homebuyer may achieve full ownership of his Home by making the required monthly payments, performing his own maintenance and repairs, and making voluntary payments.

2. Premises

The Authority hereby leases to the Homebuyer the land designated as Plot No. _____ as shown on a map field _____ together with the improvements thereon (hereinafter referred to as the "Home").

3. Status of Occupant

a. For the purposes of this Agreement, the Homebuyer shall be the signer of this Agreement, or, in the event of his death or loss, his surviving spouse, child, or parent, in the order so named, who resided in the Home with him and who was designated by him as a successor.

b. Initially, the undersigned's status will be that of a tenant of the Authority from month to month, but with an opportunity to achieve the status of Homebuyer whenever, within the first two years, he builds up a credit of at least $200 in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve, described in paragraph 9. In the event that the undersigned fails to achieve the status of Homebuyer within two years, the Authority and the Homebuyers Association (provided for in paragraph 4 of this Agreement) will investigate and take appropriate action.

c. For convenience, the undersigned is referred to as the "Homebuyer" in the provisions which follow.

d. The maximum income limit for continued occupancy by the Homebuyer with the aid of the HUD annual contributions shall be what the Federal Housing Administration would approve at that time for a less subsidized or, if that is unavailable, an unsubsidized, FHA-insured home loan for the Home. Should the Homebuyer reach this point, he shall either buy his Home or vacate the Home, unless the Authority determines that due to his inability to obtain the necessary financing or any other special circumstances he is unable to find decent, safe, and sanitary housing within his financial reach although making every reasonable effort to do so. Under such circumstances, he will be required to make a higher monthly payment consistent with his higher income, up to the ceiling established by the Authority.

4. Homebuyers Association

a. Upon signing this Agreement, each Homebuyer becomes a member of the Homebuyers Association, which shall be composed of all the Homebuyers in the development and which shall have at least the following purposes:

(1) To represent the occupants, individually and collectively, in their relationships with the Authority;

(2) To establish Association rules and recommend general Authority rules, so as to assure maximum enjoyment by the occupants of their homes and property;

(3) To inform and advise occupants on questions relating to the accumulation of credits toward homeownership, the required services to be performed, investment of funds, etc;

(4) To advise and assist the occupants in procedures and practices designed to hasten the date when each may receive title to his home;

(5) To carry out, with the Authority, periodic inspections of dwelling units;

(6) In general, to provide assistance to the occupants on all matters regarding their rights and obligations under this program with respect to their property and that of their neighbors, the Authority, and the community;

(7) To acquire and hold title, on behalf of the occupants, to all common grounds, buildings and facilities, and act as the enforcing agent for all covenants and obligations imposed on the land or with respect to dwellings in the interest of all occupants.

b. The relationship between the Homebuyers Association and the Authority will be set forth in an agreement between the Authority and the Association.

5. Repair, Maintenance, and Use of Premises

a. The Homebuyer shall, at his own cost and expense, keep and maintain the Home and its fixtures in good repair, condition, and appearance, to the satisfaction of the Homebuyers Association and the Authority.

b. The Homebuyer agrees to permit officials, employees, or agents of the Authority and the Homebuyers Association to inspect his house and grounds in accordance with rules established by the Authority and the Homebuyers Association.

c. The Homebuyer agrees not to use or occupy his house or grounds for an unlawful purpose nor use them for any purpose deemed hazardous on account of fire or other risks by insurance companies. The Homebuyer also agrees to use the house and grounds only as a place to live for himself and his family as identified in his initial application and the subsequent records of the Authority.

d. Should the Homebuyer want to make any structural changes in or additions to his house or on his grounds, he may do so only after obtaining the written consent of the Homebuyers Association and the Authority.

6. Monthly Payments

a. The Homebuyer agrees to pay to the Authority on the first day of each month, so long as this Agreement is in effect, a sum equal to 20 percent of the Homebuyer's family's average monthly income, as shall be determined by the Authority annually at a scheduled time on the basis of documentary evidence submitted by the Homebuyer (see paragraph 13 below), less an allowance of $_____ for the utilities which the Homebuyer shall pay for directly; provided that this monthly payment shall in no event be less than the Minimum Monthly Payment (see subparagraph b below).

b. The Minimum Monthly Payment is the total amount required by the Authority for:

First: The payment of a Monthly Operating Expense established for the development (see paragraph 7 below);

Second: The establishment of a Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve for the Home (see paragraph 8 below); and

c. Until changed in accordance with this Agreement, the Homebuyer's Monthly Payment shall be $_____ per month, due and payable on or before the first day of the month.

d. If the Homebuyer's income should fall below the minimum, he shall continue to make the Minimum Monthly Payment even though such payment exceeds 20 percent of his income. However, if the Homebuyer is eligible for any additional HUD subsidy, such subsidy may be used, to the extent available, to pay the difference between 20 percent of his income and the amount of the Minimum Monthly Payment.

e. When the Homebuyer's monthly payment based on a percentage of his income is in excess of the minimum, the excess will be applied by the Authority to the payment of payments in lieu of taxes applicable to such excess, and the balance to the reduction of annual contributions payable by the Government.

f. To enable the Homebuyer to acquire title to his Home within a shorter period, he may make additional voluntary payments to the Authority either periodically or in a lump sum. All such payments will be held by the Authority for the account of the Homebuyer (see paragraph 9 below).

7. Monthly Operating Expense

a. A Monthly Operating Expense will be established at a rate which will be sufficient for the payment of expenses and provision of a reserve as listed below:

(1) Administration Expense--administrative salaries, legal expense, travel, office supplies, postage, etc.

(2) Utilities Expense--those items, if any, to be furnished by the Authority.

(3) Common Property Maintenance--for office equipment, community space, grounds, and other common areas, if any.

(4) General Expense--premiums for fire and other insurance, payments in lieu of taxes to the local taxing body, etc.

(5) Provision for Operating Reserve--to build up a reserve for the purposes described in paragraph 10 below.

b. The Monthly Operating Expense rate for each fiscal year will be established on the basis of the Authority's approved Operating Budget for each such fiscal year. If it is subsequently determined that actual operating expense for a fiscal year was more or less than the amount provided by the Monthly Operating Expense established for such fiscal year, the Minimum Monthly Payment for the next fiscal year may be adjusted to account for the difference.

8. Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve

a. A portion of the Homebuyer's monthly payment will be used to establish a Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve for the Home. The purpose of this reserve is to provide funds for the infrequent but costly items of maintenance which may be required over a period of years, such as exterior painting, replacement of range and refrigerator, repair or replacement of roof, major repair to heating, plumbing, or electrical systems, etc. The amount of the monthly payment to be set aside for this reserve will be determined by the Authority with the concurrence of the Homeowners Association and the approval of HUD.

b. When the maintenance for which this reserve is established is provided by the Authority, the cost will be charged to the Maintenance Reserve for the Home involved. Such maintenance may be provided by the Homebuyer, but only pursuant to prior written agreement with the Authority covering the nature and scope of the work and the amount of credit the Homebuyer is to receive; and in such cases the agreed amount shall be charged to the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve and credited to the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve.

c. The Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve applicable to the Home may be transferred by the Authority to the Homebuyer to enable him to complete payment for the dwelling, provided that the Authority and the Homebuyers Association agree that such reserve is not then needed for anticipated nonroutine maintenance for the Home.

d. When the aggregate amount of the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve balances for the Homes exceeds the estimated reserve requirements for 90 days, the Authority will invest the excess in savings accounts and/or securities approved by HUD for the investment of monies on deposit in the General Fund. Interest earned on such investments will be prorated and credited to each dwelling in proportion to the amount invested from each Homebuyer's Nonroutine Dwelling Maintenance Reserve account or by such other method as may be determined to be equitable for all Homebuyers.

9. Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve

a. Since the Homebuyer will be responsible for maintaining his Home, a portion of his monthly payment (an amount equal to the Authority's estimated monthly cost for routine maintenance) will be set aside in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve. If the Homebuyer should elect to make any additional voluntary equity payments to acquire ownership at an earlier date, such voluntary equity payments will also be credited to this reserve.

b. The Homebuyer must see that the required maintenance is performed. Should he fail to do so, his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve will be charged for the costs therefor in accordance with the procedures established by the Homebuyers Association and the Authority.

c. As stated in paragraph 3, the undersigned must build up a minimum balance of $200 within two years in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve in order to be entitled to the status and rights of a Homebuyer. The Homebuyer further agrees to continue adding to the reserve until it reaches $350 and thereafter to keep adding to that amount.

d. Under exceptional circumstance, as determined by the Homebuyers Association and the Authority, the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve may be used to pay delinquent monthly payments, provided the amount used for this purpose does not reduce the reserve to a balance below $350 once this sum has been achieved. If the reserve is reduced to a balance below $350, the Authority and the Homebuyers Association will investigate and take appropriate corrective action.

e. When the aggregate amount of all Homebuyers' Ownership Reserve balances exceeds the estimated reserve requirements for 90 days, the Authority will invest the excess (1) in savings accounts and/or securities approved by HUD and the Homebuyer's Association for the investment of monies on deposit in the General Fund, or, (2) if subscribed to by the Homebuyer, in any organization, such as savings and loan institutions or credit unions, approved by HUD and the Homebuyers Association. Interest earned on the investment of such funds will be prorated and credited to each Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve account in proportion to the amount invested from each Homebuyer's account or by such other method as may be determined to be equitable for all Homebuyers. It is understood that the Authority will not be responsible for any losses that may be thereby incurred.

f. If this Agreement is terminated prior to ownership or if the Homebuyer vacates the Home for any reason, the balance in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve, after payment of costs specified in paragraph 16 below, will be refunded to the Homebuyer.

10. Operating Reserve

a. The Authority will establish an Operating Reserve to provide funds for extraordinary maintenance and/or replacement of equipment applicable to the community space, and grounds, if any, and other areas for which the Authority is responsible, and for unanticipated items for both dwelling and nondwelling structures. The reserve will be accumulated at the rate of $_____ per unit per month.

b. Since actual operating receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year will not ordinarily equal the amounts budgeted, the amount available to supplement the reserve at the end of the fiscal year may be more or less than the amount budgeted for the reserve. In such cases, the excess or deficit in the reserve will be taken into consideration when preparing the next Operating Budget and the Monthly Operating Expense rate may be decreased or increased accordingly.

c. No part of this Operating Reserve will be transferred or paid to the Homebuyer either in the event of termination of this Agreement or upon transfer of title to the Homebuyer, but the reserve may ultimately be transferred to the Homeowners Association for the purposes specified in subparagraph a above.

11. Books of Account

The Authority will maintain Books of Account and will provide the Homebuyer with an annual statement which will show the following with respect to the Homebuyer:

(a) Balance of the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve including the total voluntary payments deposited therein;

(b) Balance of the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve for his dwelling;

(c) Balance outstanding of the indebtedness with respect to his Home (see paragraphs 17 and 19).

12. Insurance

Until the closing date referred to in paragraph 19, the Authority will carry fire and extended coverage insurance upon the Homebuyer's Home in such form and amount and with such company or companies as it determines. The Authority will not carry any insurance on the Homebuyer's furniture, clothing, automobile, or any other personal property, or personal liability insurance covering the Homebuyer. In the event the Homebuyer's Home is damaged or destroyed by fire or other casualty, the Authority, at its discretion, may (a) repair or rebuild the Home with the insurance proceeds, or (b) distribute the unused insurance proceeds as follows: first, to reduce or retire the Authority's indebtedness attributable to the Home; second, to reimburse HUD for all annual contributions payments made by it; and third, to the Homebuyer.

13. Statements of Income and Assets

a. The Homebuyer agrees to submit to the Authority, once a year upon the request of the Authority, a signed statement in such a form as the Authority may request, setting forth the facts as to the number, sex, and age of members of his family, how they are employed, how much each earns, the amount and source of any other income each receives, and what assets each has. Promptly upon completion of any examination or reexamination of income and/or family composition, the Authority will mail a written Notice of Monthly Payment Adjustment to the Homebuyer, addressed to him at the Home herein designated, if a change in monthly payment is to be made, showing a change in the amount of estimated annual income and the change in monthly payment as a result of such a reexamination, and the Homebuyer agrees to accept said Notice of Monthly Payment Adjustment as an amendment to this Agreement.

b. Such information may be requested more frequently if the Authority and the Homebuyers Association decide that the circumstances warrant a reexamination of income.

14. Subletting and Assignment

The Homebuyer shall not sublet his Home or assign this lease without the prior approval of the Authority.

15. Breach of Agreement

Should the Homebuyer abandon the Home or fail to fulfill any of his obligations or responsibilities under this Agreement, including any case where the balance of his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve has failed to reach $200 within two years or has been reduced to less than $350 after once obtaining that sum, the Authority, after consultation with the Homebuyers Association, may require the Homebuyer to forfeit his rights under this Agreement and to vacate the Home upon 30 days prior written notice, provided that such a breach shall not prevent a new arrangement, in the discretion of the Authority, whereby the Homebuyer continues in occupancy as a tenant of the Authority or immediately acquires the Home under the provisions of paragraph 18.

16. Application of Funds Upon Vacating of Dwelling

a. In the event the Homebuyers Ownership Agreement with the Authority is terminated or if the Homebuyer vacates the Home, the Authority may charge against his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve the amount required to pay (1) the amount due the Authority, including the monthly payments he is obligated to pay; (2) the Monthly Operating Expense accrued while the Home is vacant, not to exceed 30 days; and (3) the cost of repairs and other work required to put the Home in good condition for the next occupant. If the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve balance is not sufficient to cover all of these charges, the Authority will require the Homebuyer to pay the additional amount due; if the amount in the reserve exceeds these charges, the excess will be paid to him.

b. Settlement with the Homebuyer will be made after 30 days from the time he vacates, and after the actual cost of repairs has been determined. The Homebuyer may, however, obtain a settlement as of the date he vacates if he has given to the Authority notice of his intention to vacate 30 days prior to the date he vacates and if the amount to be charged against his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is based on (1) the Authority's estimate as to the cost of repairs and other work required to put the Home in good condition for the next occupant; (2) Monthly Operating Expense for 30 days vacancy, unless a successor occupant is scheduled to move in on an earlier date; and (3) any other amounts the Homebuyer is obligated to pay to the Authority.

c. The unused balance of the Nonroutine Maintenance Reserve and of the Operating Reserve will not be refunded, but will be retained by the Authority for the benefit of the Home and the development, respectively.

17. Achievement of Ownership by Initial Occupant

a. The Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership when his share of the capital debt of the development (based on the actual development cost of his Home) is fully paid, or when the amount in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to the outstanding balance of the debt plus the costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier. The capital debt with respect to the Home will be established in the books of the Authority at the time of initial occupancy of the Home, as the aggregate debt service (principal plus interest) to be paid on that Home over the 25-year period of amortization. In the event the total development has been financed by the issuance of notes as opposed to bonds, this figure may have to be estimated, until the actual interest costs are computed. The development cost of each Home will be determined by prorating the total cost of the development as determined by the Authority on an equitable basis which takes into consideration the size of the dwellings and their type of construction. The development cost of each Home will include (1) the cost of the dwelling structure and equipment; (2) the cost of land which becomes a part of the Home, including landscaping cost, if any; and (3) a prorated share of the cost of all common grounds, buildings, and facilities, if any.

b. As long as the Homebuyer is a low-income family it will be assisted toward the homeownership goal by HUD annual contributions. In addition, the amount accumulated to the family's credit in its Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve will also be used to reduce its share of the debt. Thus, the more that is saved in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve the earlier the time of homeownership will arrive.

ALTERNATIVE 17. Achievement of Ownership by Subsequent Occupant *

a. As of the date of this Agreement, a determination has been made that (1) the amount necessary to retire the Authority's debt with respect to the Home is $_____ and (2) the fair market value of the Home is $_____.

* This paragraph is to be used only for a subsequent occupant.

b.  Because the amount necessary to retire the Authority's debt with respect to the Home is the greater of these two amounts, the Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership when this debt is fully paid, or when the amount in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to the outstanding amount necessary to retire the debt plus the amount of the costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier.

c.  Because the fair market value of the Home is the greater of these two amounts, that amount is hereby established as the capital debt to the amortized over a 25-year period at _____ percent interest /the bond interest rate for Authority financing on the date of the Agreement/ and the Homebuyer will be entitled to ownership at the end of the 25-year period, or when the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve is equal to the unamortized balance of the capital debt plus the amount of the costs incidental to acquiring ownership, whichever is earlier.

18. Ownership Before Debt Retirement

a. Homeownership shall be achieved by a Homebuyer whose income reaches the level specified in paragraph 3.d. The Homebuyer will be able to purchase the Home by paying the outstanding balance of the debt with respect to his Home and costs incidental to acquiring ownership, using his credit in his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve and financing the remainder. The Authority and the Homeowners Association may provide the Homebuyer with counseling and guidance as to the circumstances under which it would be most advantageous for him to purchase his Home with such financing.

b. In the event of a purchase by the Homebuyer within the first 10 years of his occupancy, the Authority shall restrict the title conveyed by it so as to entitle the Authority, in the event of any resale by the Homebuyer or any successor within 10 years from the date title was conveyed by the Authority, to receive from the seller the amount by which the resale price exceeds the sum of the following:

(1) The amount paid by the Homebuyer to the Authority to achieve ownership, including the funds that were applied for that purpose from his Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve;

 Either b or c will apply, but not both.

(2) The estimated interest on the amount in (1) that the Homebuyer would have earned at the prevailing bank interest rates from the time of his acquisition of ownership to the date of the resale;

(3) The value of any improvements made by the Homebuyer; and

(4) Reasonable and necessary expenses incidental to the resale.

19. Transfer of Title to Homebuyer

When the Homebuyer becomes entitled to ownership under the provisions of paragraphs 17 or 18, the Authority and the Homebuyer will mutually agree on a date for transfer of title to the Home. This date will be referred to as the "closing date." On that date the Authority, upon receipt from the Homebuyer of the required amount of money (including amounts credited to him in the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve), will deliver a Warranty Deed for the Home to the Homebuyer together with an owner's policy of title insurance showing marketable fee simple title in the Homebuyer, subject, where applicable, to the option described in paragraph 18.b. The costs incidental to the transfer of title and obtaining the title insurance policy will be deducted from the Homebuyer's Ownership Reserve.

20. Responsibilities of Homebuyer after Transfer of Title

After transfer of title, each Homeowner will be required to pay to the Authority or to the Homebuyers Association a monthly fee for (1) the maintenance of community space, grounds, and other common areas, and (2) the maintenance and operation of utility facilities.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

WHAT IS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL?

"Southern Regional Council of what?" is the way the question is often put to us. The simplest answer is "of Southerners!" It is a council in the dictionary sense: "An assembly summoned for consultation and advice."

The SRC is biracial, non-sectarian, politically non-partisan, and non-profit. It is a private organization, and is incorporated in the state of Georgia.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL?

The legend on our letterhead reads "A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South." A fuller statement of purpose, adopted by the Council in 1951 and in 1962, reads in part:

"The South of the future toward which our efforts are directed is a South freed of stultifying inheritances from the past. It is a South where the measure of a man will be his ability, not his race; where a common citizenship will work in democratic understanding for the common good; where all who labor will be rewarded in proportion to their skill and achievement; where all can feel confident of personal safety and equality before the law; where segregation will be recognized as a cruel and needless penalty on the human spirit and will no longer be imposed; where above all, every individual will enjoy a full share of dignity and self respect, in recognition of his creation in the image of God."

To these ends the SRC works by means of research, provision of information, education, and experimental field programs.

HOW LONG HAS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL EXISTED?

The SRC was founded in 1944. Its incorporators were the late Dr. Rufus Clement, President of Atlanta University; the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson, President of Fisk University; Ralph McGill, Publisher of the Atlanta Constitution; Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Church; and the late Dr. Howard W. Odum of the University of North Carolina.

The history of the SRC goes back further. The Council is successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, which was founded in 1919 by a group of the South's leading church people to create and sustain a sincere and open-minded dialogue between Negroes and whites.

HOW IS THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL FINANCED?

The SRC is supported by donations from foundations, church denominations, businesses, trade unions, and individuals. The Council has no endowment and, as a matter of policy, does not utilize government grants.

The yearly budget of the SRC typically is approximately $300,000 exclusive of special projects. Special project budgets total about $750,000 per year.

WHO BELONGS TO THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL?

The SRC consists of one hundred distinguished men and women drawn from the 11 southern states. Originally it was a voluntary membership organization, but beginning in 1954 the SRC helped establish state councils on human relations and used its members in each state as the nuclei of those independent associations.

The 100-member Board meets annually, usually for three days, to review concerns of the region and set policy of the SRC. Between annual meetings an Executive Committee of fifteen members meets periodically to plan and review program and to direct the staff.

The Council currently employs a staff of 40 persons, including special project staffs.

WHAT IS THE PROGRAM OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL?

Research and Information

Basic to all that the SRC does is its program of research and information. To get the facts about the South and its people and to get those facts reported are the first and foremost functions of the Southern Regional Council.

The Council's library is a specialized collection of thousands of volumes, pamphlets, reports, and studies. Our research staff clips dozens of daily newspapers, including some from each southern state. It also collects articles from dozens of periodicals.

Research associates on our staff answer hundreds of queries each year from journalists, scholars, government agencies, and other private agencies.

The Council's reputation for accuracy and reliability is zealously guarded.

Publications

The Council not only provides information to others, but also is a frequent publisher of original studies on issues, both critical and emergent. These publications are demonstrably influential.

Typical titles are Public Assistance: To What End?; School Desegregation: The Slow Undoing; Negro Youth in a Southern Metropolis; Black Belt Schools: Beyond Desegregation; Racial Discrimination in Southern Federal Courts; and Hungry Children.

The SRC's quarterly magazine, New South, features in-depth articles by some of the foremost writers in the field and roundups of significant developments in the region.

Field Activities

State Councils on Human Relations. The SRC helped organize state councils on human relations, which now exist in ten southern states. These are independent agencies, but the SRC continues to work closely with them. The state councils number more than 12,000 members and their combined budgets total more than $400,000.

Fellowship of the Concerned. The Fellowship provides for conferences, workshops and consultations among the leaders of church women's organizations. It grew out of the old Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, and is maintained under SRC auspices.

Southern Inter-Agency Conference. The SRC serves as the secretariat for the Southern Interagency Conference, which is an informal, quarterly consultation of virtually all intergroup relations agencies working in the region.

Occasional Projects. The SRC is frequently called upon to carry out short-term projects. Early in 1964, for example, we sponsored a South-wide effort to assure calm compliance with the public accommodations section of the pending Civil Rights Act of 1964. In 1966, in each southern state, conferences on school desegregation under Title VI of that law were co-sponsored by the SRC and other agencies. Also in that year we carried out an experimental paper back books distribution project. At the request of federal agencies we frequently entertain foreign visitors interested in the South. The SRC sponsors or co-sponsors innumerable conferences, large and small, on a broad range of subjects.

Special Projects

Voter Education Project. The current VEP, which is the second to be sponsored by the Council, is the largest of SRC's special projects. The two projects have played a significant role in the increase of Negro registration in the South from 1.5 million to about 2.8 million. The VEP also sponsors seminars and institutes for Negroes newly elected to public office, places students as interns to learn the political processes, and sponsors citizenship education projects.

Community Organization Project. This special project provides advice and technical assistance for all kinds of self-help organizations, from credit unions and cooperative buying clubs to tenant organizations. The Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative Association, The Federation of Southern Co-ops, the West Tennessee Self-Help Development Association and the Southern Cooperative Development Association are just a few of the organizations assisted in their formation by the Community Organization Project.

Housing and Urban Planning Project. Through a program of publication and consultation, this project seeks to secure consideration of the human relations implications of urban planning and housing programs.

Labor Project. This project seeks equal employment opportunities, especially through an extensive program of education for the local and state leadership of the labor movement.

Crime and Correction Project. Through consultation, publication and organization of ad hoc groups, this project seeks equal administration of justice, particularly in the matter of corrections. Its interests are broad-ranging and include a sentence disparity study, a study of the attitudes of ghetto youth, and the design of prison facilities.

ATLANTA COMMUNITY RELATIONS PROGRAM

ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEETING

12:15 p.m., Tuesday, January 21, 1969
40 Marietta Street, Atlanta, Georgia

MINUTES

Attending: Henry deGive, Ralph Spillman, Moreland Smith, James Costen, Margaret Via, Winifred McPhedran

Staff: Jack Tatum, Rosena Flint

Chairman Henry de Give called for a brief period of silence before beginning the meeting.

Winifred McPhedran reported that the Atlanta Area Fair Housing Association has been formed and is looking forward to another meeting at some time in the near future. This is now an official organization and each of the present neighborhood fair housing committees has been asked to name its representative to the Association.

The Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference has elected officers. They are: Chairman, the Rev. Randolph Taylor; Vice-Chairman, Jack Tatum; Treasurer, Moreland Smith; Secretary, Kathleen Wood. There are six committee chairmen and six members-at-large.

43.1 The chief activity of the Board of the Metropolitan Atlanta Housing Conference has been in planning a Housing Workshop to be held February 26 at Ebenezer Baptist Church. This one-day session is planned as a teaching session. There will be three seminars on Low-Cost Housing, Open Housing, and Neighborhood Stabilization. Each person attending the Workshop will participate in each of the three seminars. The main speaker will be Saddel Sachs from Fair Housing, Inc., in Boston. Mrs. Sachs' achievements include obtaining FHA loans for families on welfare. The planning committee has been working on resource leaders. Each seminar will have a lecturer, a resource person, and a discussion leader.

43.2 Th Board of MAHC has agreed that another conference should be held in May -- perhaps in DeKalb County, to point out the broader aspects of our housing problems and to emphasize that housing is not just an Atlanta problem.

Moreland Smith expressed a hope that the February Workshop and the May conference would provide a stimulus to the neighborhood fair housing committees.

43.3 Jack Tatum, reporting on local fair housing committees, stated he had found a group in Forest Park quite interested in equal opportunity in housing.

The first black neighborhood fair housing committee is being formed in the Collier Heights area. The people in this area are proud of their community and want it known that it is an open community.

The Rev. James Costen reported that SWAP has organized a company called Pathwaye, Inc., which hopes to buy up available land in the southwest area for the building of single family dwellings. People are paying much more for homes in this area than in other areas of Atlanta and this group hopes to provide housing for less affluent families. They will try to obtain the needed funds through government loans and through individual purchases of shares in the company.

Jack Tatum also reported that there is a possibility of the formation of a fair housing group in Scottdale.

43.4 There was a general discussion on the advantages of cooperative housing over low-income housing. Cooperative housing units not only permit people to achieve ownership of their homes, but also permits them to improve their homes as their financial situation improves.

James Costen pointed out the problems created by the Atlanta Housing Authority, which does not encourage cooperative housing projects and which permits private planners to come in and buy up available land.

It was suggested that we make every effort to work with Interfaith in its effort to build cooperative housing projects.

Moreland Smith proposed that a definite plan be formulated for getting persons sympathetic to cooperative housing on the Atlanta Housing Authority. A special effort should be made to shorten the term of the members and to increase the number of members.

43.5 Jack Tatum presented a proposal that the Atlanta Community Relations Program sponsor a real estate counseling service to serve as a clearinghouse for prospective buyers and sellers, an advisory and counseling service to families contemplating purchasing a home, and as a liaison agent between real estate brokers and prospective home buyers and sellers.

This proposal was unanimously and enthusiastically approved by the members present.

Chairman de Give requested the program director to submit this proposal, with an estimate of costs of publicizing the service, to the AFSC High Point office for their consideration and approval. Moreland Smith pointed out that AFSC should plan to carry the service for three years. It is hoped that at the end of this time the City of Atlanta would assume this responsibility.

The meeting was adjourned after a brief period of silence.

NCDH PROGRAM OF LITIGATION AND RESEARCH TO END EXCLUSIONARY LAND-USE CONTROLS AND OTHER REGULATORY DEVICES WHICH BLOCK HOUSING FOR LOW- AND MODERATE-INCOME FAMILIES IN THE SUBURBS

NCDH PROGRAM OF LITIGATION AND RESEARCH TO END EXCLUSIONARY LAND-USE CONTROLS AND OTHER REGULATORY DEVICES WHICH BLOCK HOUSING FOR LOW- AND MODERATE-INCOME FAMILIES IN THE SUBURBS

Summary Report to the NCDH Board of Directors

The National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, Inc. (NCDH), is underway with a major nationwide program of litigation, undergirded by extensive ongoing research projects in the Northeast and on the West Coast, aimed at eradicating the widespread practice of excluding housing for moderate- and low-income families from suburban communities through local land-use controls and other restrictive devices.

As reported to the Board of Directors at its two-day meeting in Tarrytown (N.Y.) on April 10-11, this vitally significant and potentially far-reaching new phase of the NCDH program will attempt to overturn institutionalized systems which automatically "build in" housing segregation along racial, economic, and city/suburban lines. Carefully selected legal cases, supported by solid research findings, will challenge patterns of discrimination which result from such local devices as large-lot zoning ordinances, restrictive building codes, and outmoded construction standards. A major objective will be a series of precedent-setting judicial decisions relating to entire systems of exclusion.

National Housing Policy

In 1968, for the first time in its history, the United States established a national housing policy which constitutes an unequivocal commitment to the provision of decent housing on an open market for every American family, regardless of race, color, creed, or national origin.

* The 1968 Housing and Development Act, the most comprehensive ever adopted by the Congress, provides new tools for meeting the housing needs of lower-income families.

* The Supreme Court decision in Jones v. Mayer outlaws racial discrimination in the total housing supply, existing and future.

* The Civil Rights Act of 1968, under Title VIII, establishes fair housing as the policy of the United States and provides machinery for implementation.

NCDH and its allies played a pivotal role in creating the educational climate and providing the body of information and technical assistance which led to these major breakthroughs. In order to transform these new requirements of law into patterns of actual conduct, the emphasis now must be on the provision of housing (a) in adequate volume; (b) at costs within the means of low- and moderate-income groups; (c) in locations conveniently accessible to the greatest employment and other opportunities; and (d) available to all Americans without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin.

In a single decade following 1958, fair housing laws spread to 23 states and more than 250 localities. The movement toward open housing under law culminated last year in a nationwide fair housing statute and a judicial decision outlawing racial discrimination in all sales and rentals. This phase of the war on discrimination in housing was a vital, first step. Without it, housing and development programs, no matter how massive, could not reverse continuously expanding ghettoization. With discrimination rendered illegal, housing programs now have the potential of creating open communities if properly funded and administered and if suburban barriers to the construction of housing for lower-income families are removed.

Local Obstacles to Implementation

Essentially, this means a massive, nationwide attack upon the system of restrictive practices used by suburban governments to prevent the construction of housing for lower-income households, a practice which effectively excludes the vast majority of Negro and other minority families from living in suburban areas. Until local governments have been deprived of the power to exclude subsidized housing and to manipulate zoning and other controls to screen out families on the basis of income and, implicitly, of race, there can be no effective progress in halting the trend toward predominantly black cities surrounded by almost entirely white suburbs -- the geographic manifestation of "two nations -- one black, one white, separate and unequal."

The power of suburban governments to block residency by low- and moderate-income families effectively reduces Federal guarantees of open housing to an empty right for the bulk of America's minority families. This suburban power, likewise, largely frustrates the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, since its goal of building an average of 2.6 million homes annually for the next ten years can be achieved only through massive construction on open land in outlying localities. Land-locked central cities, especially their overcrowded ghetto areas, can accommodate only a relatively small portion of this annual volume of urgently needed housing. In addition to space limitations, building progress in central cities is tortuously slow because of relocation problems, clearance of buildings, high-rise construction, and other conditions which impede rebuilding.

NCDH Leadership Role

NCDH is the logical organization to mount a massive, nationwide assault on exclusionary land-use and other restrictive housing practices as the next phase of its unrelenting drive to achieve a slum-free, ghetto-free America. For 20 years, it has pioneered in the legal and educational aspects of housing/civil rights. It has been the center for information and public education, the provider of expert technical assistance, the legal resource, the innovator of new techniques and approaches, the consultant to and negotiator with government agencies and other institutions. The distinguished lawyers associated with NCDH over many years represent a unique assemblage of legal scholars with specialized knowledge and competence in this highly complex area.

NCDH's entire history qualifies it for the leading role it now assumes in this fight on exclusionary housing practices in the suburbs. Its demonstrated capability in marshalling national and local resources and talents in the fight for fair housing has won for it the confidence of the key individuals, institutions and organizations that is so essential in an effort of this scope. NCDH's 51 affiliated organizations constitute a cross-section of America's public interest groups and compose a powerful network of grass roots contacts. Its connections with thousands of local fair housing and other community groups provide NCDH with eyes and ears throughout the length and breadth of the nation, essential to keep its finger on the pulse of public opinion and useful in raising local issues to national prominence.

Expanded Resources and Programs

Housing discrimination is now barred in the United States. NCDH's crucial role in that forward step has brought it increased financial support, resulting in the tripling of its staff and program activities in recent months. Additional expansion is scheduled.

A professionally-staffed Legal Division is now in operation, is already involved in litigation focusing primarily on zoning and other land-use problems in several communities, and is seeking to develop legal action in other localities. Plans are well advanced for immediate and substantial enlargement of this division into a Legal Department fully equipped to carry forward a broad-scale program of litigation and a wide range of related services.

A Department of Field Services and Planning has been established to provide professional guidance in housing and planning to public and private agencies and organizations in communities throughout the country. Through this outreach program, the NCDH field staff will be able to make professional on-the-spot analyses of critical problems, and to identify situations requiring court action to remedy exclusionary practices.

Manifestly, extensive and soundly-conceived research is an essential component of this legal program. For several years, NCDH has been investigating the relationship between access to housing and employment opportunities in suburban localities where the good jobs increasingly are locating. Publication in early 1968 of its preliminary study, "The Impact of Housing Patterns on Job Opportunities," led to the development of a fully-staffed Research Department which is now engaged in in-depth studies of zoning ordinances, building codes, real estate practices, job locations and classifications, skills needed and skills available, open land for the development of new urban centers, transportation problems and possibilities -- and the relationship of these various factors to the mobility of the minority labor force.

These problems are being researched mainly through two major NCDH projects referred to above:

* A two-year study of the growth of suburban employment opportunities and the lack of suburban housing opportunities for minorities and related factors in the Tri-State New York Metropolitan Region, with particular attention to the role of restrictive zoning as an impediment to such opportunities. This project is funded by a $480,000 grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

* A three-year research/action urban renewal demonstration project in the nine-county San Francisco Bay Area to devise, test, and report on more effective methods for achieving large-scale desegregation in a major metropolitan area, and to develop guidelines for similar action in other regions. This program is being carried forward under a $435,000 contract with the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

In addition to its new and expanded headquarters in New York City, NCDH has established a Washington (D. C.) Bureau and a Field Office in San Francisco to service the Western states and the Rocky Mountain Region.

This overall expansion of resources and program confirms NCDH's recognized capacity to conduct large-scale national efforts and will, of course, greatly enhance its total effectiveness.

Involvement of Lawyers, Scholars, Government and Industry

In anticipation of future litigation and the need for model legislation, NCDH has convened a meeting of some of the nation's foremost scholars and legal experts to explore the best approaches to litigative and legislative reform. This meeting will be preliminary to a major national conference on the subject of exclusionary land-use controls in the fall. At the fall conference outstanding representatives from government and the construction industry will join the legal experts and scholars in considering proposals for new forms of land development controls and new approaches to community building.

The Challenge for United Action

NCDH is fully cognizant of the magnitude of this undertaking and, consequently, of the grave responsibility it imposes upon us. We see this stage of the fight to open the lily-white suburbs as comparable to the 1940's in the historic fight to open lily-white schools. As in the assault upon segregated schools, we propose to resort to a strategy of education and litigation, based on extensive and detailed sociological, economic, and legal research to demonstrate that exclusionary controls are an institutionalized pattern with dire results for the public welfare.

The foregoing programs will tax NCDH's resources to the utmost. We will need all the support we can possibly muster. We will need, above all, the awareness and cooperation of all national organizations and leaders in public affairs. We stand prepared to welcome as allies and collaborators all men of good will and all organizations devoted to the public interest.

We are confident of the firm support of each Board member and each of our national cooperating organizations. The time and the issue permit us to say, without indulging in pretentious rhetoric, that we stand in the shadow of history. The nation is being challenged to carry forward the task begun a century ago and left unfinished. NCDH hopes that its thousands of supporters and millions of well-wishers will rise to the challenge of these times and close ranks with us to win open communities as the basis of an open society and of one nation -- with justice and equality for all.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed is a circular entitled "A Homeownership Program for Low-Income Families," for your information, review and comments.

You will note from the cover sheet that the program is still in a very early stage of development, and guidelines rather than final fixed procedures are provided.

We believe this Homeownership program offers a valuable new tool to provide both good housing and new social and economic opportunities for families of low income.

I would be very pleased to receive your comments and suggestions on this circular, so that we may improve future issues.

Sincerely yours,

A. E. Rosfeld

HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF NEW ORLEANS
MONTHLY REPORT

Room BE11 - City Hall
529-4311 - EXT. 475

Volume II, No. 5 August, 1969

N.O.M.E.C. CHOOSES "WHITE ONLY"; LOSES DUES.

Chief Administrative Officer Bernard Levy, with the concurrence of Mayor Victor Schiro, has agreed to the recommendation of the Human Relations Committee that the New Orleans Municipal Employees Club (NOMEC) lose its payroll dues deduction and other privileges for not ending racially discriminatory membership policies. Mr. Levy has directed city finance director, Robert Develle, to "discontinue payroll deductions representing dues of club members." This was recorded in a memo from Mr. Levy dated July 30.

The Human Relations Committee has attempted to persuade NOMEC, either directly or indirectly, to change its "white only" membership policy since November of 1968. After all this time, they have still refused to do so. Most recently, Mr. Levy made clear to NOMEC leadership the consequences of their refusal to change. In June, the answer still came back, "White only."

NOMEC has the right to be a private social club if it so chooses, but it should not receive the benefits of a public employee's organization. Thus, HRC feels that an end to payroll deductions of dues and an end of their pretense to represent all city employees is completely in order. .

Mr. Levy and Mayor Schiro are to be commended for their action. Councilman James Moreau has also sent a memorandum to all councilmen recommending that NOMEC be denied use of the Council Chamber in the future. HRC hopes that this recommendation will also receive favorable action.

TO SCATTER OR NOT TO SCATTER?

(This statement was adopted by the Human Relations Committee at its August 4 meeting)

The desperate need for decent, subsidized low-income housing for the 200,000 plus human beings at or below the poverty level in New Orleans -- that is what recent statements on scattered-site housing by the Real Estate Board, the Times-Picayune, and even sympathetic critics have subordinated to peripheral concerns.

The Real Estate Board of New Orleans, in a statement of either incredible inaccuracy or deliberate distortion, cringes at the fear of attracting "countless new low-income families from rural communities and from towns and cities other than New Orleans where no such public housing programs exist."

Perhaps the Real Estate Board in its parochial way does not care about houses for human beings unless they are from New Orleans.

Nevertheless, two facts almost guarantee that New Orleans public housing will not draw the "outsiders" feared by the Real Estate Board. First, there are some forty housing authorities in small towns and cities throughout Louisiana, and more in other southern states. Far more units per capita are being built elsewhere than in New Orleans. Second, even if someone left these more productive areas, he faces the prospect of being placed at the end of a waiting list of over 18,000 Orleanians who desire entry to the proposed 3,000 plus scattered-site units of which only 384 have been built.

In this case, the Real Estate Board is concerned unnecessarily -- there will be no room for "outsiders" in scattered-sites. Indeed, there will not be enough units for those Orleanians on the waiting list thanks to opposition from groups of like mind with the Real Estate Board.

The Times-Picayune, in a July 30 editorial, does not oppose scattered sites but raises questions based on ostensibly color-blind, middle-income interests in "Progress is the communication mechanism of the New Orleans Human Relations Committee. Our basic policy is to advise the community of significant concerns in the field of human relations."

Others contributing articles to this issue:

Henry Jullen, Summer Employee

these words: "Whether uniform or racially mixed, middle-income neighborhoods have expressed concern that introduction of large numbers of low-income or welfare families would depreciate the area, regardless of the original physical attractiveness of the units."

This statement contains two fallacies. First, "large numbers" of families would not be introduced into any one area. The essence of the scattered-site concept is that only small numbers of units are built in any one place to avoid massive, concentrated projects like Desire with over a thousand units. The recent Carrollton proposal allows only 150 units on 20 sites scattered over a wide area.

In scattered sites, most buildings are townhouses, duplexes, four-plexes, or small garden apartment houses. Larger homeownership developments such as Christopher Homes, with over a hundred units, are built in open undeveloped areas on community unit plans with recreation space included. Thus, the "large numbers" fear is basically invalid. The Times-Picayune should be correcting this misconception rather than compounding it by repetition.

The second fallacy is the newspaper's opinion that opposition is middle-income, class derived without regard to race. While it is true that there has been some black middle-class opposition to particular proposals, close study by the Human Relations Committee indicates that it has differed sharply from most white opposition. Blacks have often questioned the numbers of the units, wanting fewer but willing to accept some; whites have usually opposed having any units at all. Blacks have questioned the adequacy of citizen planning participation, designs that prevent ownership, and HANO's advance information processes -- as have the HRC's representatives and many other groups who favor scattered sites. This is quite different from some white middle- or moderate-income opponents who, even after being given full information on designs, opposed as few as four or six units in their area. The Times-Picayune is superficial in not distinguishing occasional constructive criticism from racially motivated negativism.

The Human Relations Committee reiterates its position in favor of units that are truly scattered throughout the city in small numbers so that no one area is threatened with the crowding and chaos of existing projects. The Committee supports more home ownership type developments in open space areas.

Finally, the HRC urges those citizens genuinely concerned about improving obedience to law and maintenance of civil order to think twice about opposing decent scattered sites. Families without decent housing are forced to survive in the private slums and public projects which are the breeding grounds of crime and disorder. They are kept from rearing children in a wholesome, uncongested environment with a chance to escape the problems of poverty. Crime-producing slums and projects are the alternatives to scattered sites and urban decongestion. Human beings need a decent place to live to have a fair chance to be human.

Think about it.

POLICE COMPLAINTS: AND THE BEAT GOES ON!

In the last issue of PROGRESS, the HRC called upon the U.S. Attorney and others who were involved in the investigation of the McKenna/Sims brutality cases to release the details of their investigations to the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice.

In this context, HRC received a letter from U.S. Attorney Louis Lacour explaining that his office had requested a complete investigation of these cases by the FBI. This investigation had been conducted and the results forwarded to his office. He in turn forwarded the results of the FBI investigation, along with the prosecutive opinions of his office, to the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department. It was the U.S. Attorney's opinion that the facts and evidence uncovered in the FBI investigation of the McKenna/Sims cases would not sustain successful criminal prosecution. However, Mr. LaCour stated that his declining "prosecution....because of insufficient and lack of proper evidence to warrant successful prosecution should in no way be interpreted as a condonation of improper police conduct nor as a contribution to a 'sweeping under the rug' of such conduct."

It is commendable that the U.S. Attorney has made clear that his decision not to prosecute does not mean that there was no improper police conduct to be dealt with administratively.

Other complaints received indicate that problems of internal police discipline persist. On June 10, two police officers were investigating an incident involving a 20 year old white man and two black youths, ages 12 and 8. It was alleged by a Mrs. Ophelia Green that the two officers forced their way into her home, cursed and hit her when she asked to see a search warrant, and then arrested and charged her with assaulting an officer. When the Human Relations Committee attempted to obtain a copy of the findings of the police investigation, an HRC staff member was told that their reports are "confidential" and could not be released.

Another complaint involves the arrest July 25 of a 12 year old youth on a charge of car theft. There were no witnesses to the theft, but when the police arrived, it is alleged that one of the officers grabbed the youth who was standing nearby, threw him into the car, and kicked him. When the youth's sixteen year old brother protested, the officers grabbed him and threw him against the patrol car, kicked him in the stomach and tossed him in the back of the patrol car. The youths were held for two hours before being brought to Juvenile Court and charged with car theft. The younger boy was released at that time but the older youth was held for three days.

Allegations such as these cause many to question the objectivity of a self-investigating police force and the practice of withholding pertinent information from the public under the guise of confidential reports. More internal discipline is required if police officers are to maintain the respect of the public.

THE WELFARE MESS "Aid to Dependent Children grants have been 'adjusted.'" These are the words of Louisiana Welfare Commissioner Garland Bonin. As a result of this adjustment, almost three-fourths of the dependent families in the state received cuts in the actual amount of their ADC checks. The cuts range from one to forty per cent. The average overall reduction is somewhere around twelve per cent as reflected in the legislature's failure to allocate this projected amount of money to finance the 1969 fiscal ADC budget.

Since the "adjustment" took effect on July 15, the Human Relations Committee, the Welfare Rights Organization, the Urban League and a host of other community groups have been working to alleviate the consequences of the cuts and to get the reductions removed.

As of this writing, a number of groups are planning an eight-day march to Baton Rouge, leaving New Orleans on August 5, to dramatize the need for rescinding the cuts. At the same time, demonstrations are planned in the city to point out the plight of ADC families locally.

A Louisiana legislative study committee on welfare has passed a resolution calling for emergency funds from the U.S. Health, Education and Welfare Department during the current crisis. The announcement came at called by Representative Ernest Morial, vice-chairman of the study group. Morial also called on agencies that have dealings with welfare recipients to be lenient. He asked churches and community giving organizations to raise money to help the needy during the crisis. Other Orleans legislators on the study committee are Rep. Edward Booker and Sen. William Guste.

A similar request had been made in a City Council resolution introduced by Councilmen Moon Landrieu and Eddie Sapir. The City Council also appropriated $20,000 to the city welfare emergency fund.

In another related effort, a delegation made up of HRC staff, representatives of the Welfare Rights Organization, and Lower Ninth Ward President Sam Bell traveled to Washington, D.C. to see if the food stamp program could be adjusted in Louisiana to help compensate for the ADC cuts. The delegation found that present food stamp legislation does not allow for administrative reduction in the food stamp charge. A bill, H.R.12222, is not in the U.S. Congress which would allow this procedure, and the delegation is making every effort to see that the legislation passes as soon as possible. Meanwhile the Washington group did find one emergency food program that can provide assistance to some of the children affected by the cuts. An application is now being developed by Total Community Action for a food supplement program that can be run as part of existing summer recreation projects.

In yet another effort, numerous groups in the community have asked Gov. McKeithen to do what he can to have the cuts rescinded or to take steps to have the U.S. Welfare Department provide emergency aid. At least three delegations have seen McKeithen in the last month in an effort to have the Governor take some action. Although McKeithen has agreed to try to get federal aid, in each meeting he has pointed out the lack of money in the state to finance welfare and other programs. The Governor's recurrent theme is that Louisiana needs more taxes. Sales taxes are unacceptable to pro-welfare groups, however, and business opposes other measures such as income tax exemption changes. However, McKeithen says he will not call a special session for tax appropriations because he feels the people of the state will not support a larger tax burden, especially since it takes a two-thirds vote of the legislature to approve tax increases.

The most consistent proposal for getting more state revenues from the groups that have seen the Governor is the idea of elimination of the federal income tax exemption on state income taxes. The contention is that it would not require a two-thirds legislative vote to pass this revenue measure and that it would bring in about 70 million dollars, which is more than enough to help the welfare budget and many other state programs.

At present the welfare mess is a mess. There is no indication that a remedy is going to be found for the present crisis and the possibility of a long range solution -- jobs for all who can work and decent aid for those who can't -- is tied to the complex and sometimes mysterious workings of national politics. In the meantime, thousands of people in this state and other states in the Union wait for some type of rational breakthrough that will end the dependency cycle and the anti-welfare state and mark the beginning of the just society.

 HIGHLIGHTS *****

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS STUDY The Human Relations Committee submitted its findings on the need for a local public accommodations ordinance to the City Council at its July 24 meeting. The proposal asks that the councilmen consider the Committee's study regarding the extent of discrimination in the New Orleans area. A proposed draft of the law makes it illegal for a person to be turned away, simply on the basis of color, from any establishment open to the public. Community support for the public accommodations ordinance is growing. The Executive Board of the Metropolitan Area Committee, a group of some of the most powerful and influential men in New Orleans, has given its approval to the concept of local public accommodations. All of the neighborhood councils of the anti-poverty program have come out in favor of the law. The Chamber of Commerce, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the League of Women Voters, the Urban League, the NAACP, the Knights of Peter Claver, and dozens of other church and social action groups are supporting HRC in its efforts to obtain a local public accommodations law.

DOOR-TO-DOOR PEDDLERS Because of many complaints to the Answer Desk and to organizations such as New Orleans Legal Assistance Corporation, the HRC has proposed a new city ordinance to regulate door-to-door peddlers. Many irresponsible and unscrupulous agents have been taking advantage of low income persons by getting them to sign purchase agreements which result in costs as much as two or three times the value of the goods purchased. The proposed ordinance requires the licensing of door-to-door peddlers with the stipulation that the license may be revoked if the seller engages in misleading or unfair sales practices.
The ordinance makes it unlawful for any licensee to use "fictitious price tags," or to make untruthful statements about the character, quality, description or costs of articles. Persons violating the ordinance might be convicted of a misdemeanor and receive a fine of $100 or 90 days in jail, or both.

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS PAMPHLET The HRC is preparing a local version of a pamphlet called Know Your Rights. This pamphlet is designed as an educational service to inform the public of the proper procedures to follow in encounters or contacts with police officers. Many persons are unaware of what responsibilities they have to cooperate with officers and of what rights they have in their dealings with police and the law.
The Know Your Rights pamphlet is designed for use with groups interested in studying this problem and the Committee will attempt to develop educational meetings along with other organizations.
The value of this pamphlet is demonstrated by the fact that it has been distributed to all policemen by the police departments of Atlanta, Ga., Augusta, Ga., Savannah, Ga., Albany, Ga., and Durham, N.C. It has also been distributed to all high school students in social studies by the schools of Baltimore, Md. It is the hope of HRC that this pamphlet will help create relations of respect between the people and the police in the city of New Orleans.
It is expected that copies will be available by the end of August.

THE PULL OF POOLS?
The closing of the Pontchartrain Beach Pool due to lack of attendance is most unfortunate. Patronage was limited at the outset by very poor publicity and a very high admission charge. The onset of rainy weeks in July has lowered pool attendance throughout the city and this had its impact on Pontchartrain. Clearly, a better formula for the use of this magnificent facility can be and should be worked out.
The proposal that the Levee Board make an arrangement with NORD to operate the pool next year is one that deserves the careful attention and participation of all the capable and concerned citizens who helped to re-vitalize the Audubon Pool, including C.O.P. (Committee for Open Pools), the Recreation Sub-Committee of HRC, and many others. The time to begin making these plans is now.
Reports from Audubon Park Pool indicate that the pool had been doing very well in attendance up till July 4 when the rains began to come - and come - and come. As a result of declining attendance during July, it has been necessary to reduce the size of the staff. Audubon Pool now needs 500 admissions per day to break even and guarantee successful operation again next year. It is struggling to make it.
The opening of the Audubon Pool has been marked by notable success in race relations among those attending the facility. The director of the pool reports that there have been no incidents with racial overtones at all and that the general behavior and cooperation of the public has been excellent. Despite this fact and perhaps because they have not learned how to be in a minority gracefully, white attendance at the pool has become relatively low in recent weeks, averaging only about 20 per day. Audubon Park Park Pool needs the support of actual swimmers -- young and old, black and white, not just outside cheerleaders. Make it out there soon. A little rain won't hurt.

NEW HRC MEMBERS The City Council has approved the Mayor's appointment of two replacements to the Human Relations Committee. Richard Bell, a forty-five year old businessman, will replace Edward Rowley as the HRC representative from the Metropolitan Area Committee (MAC). The other new member is Mattheo Suarez, a 31 year old trucking firm executive and former civil rights activist. He is taking the Committee spot formerly held by Warren McKenna, the Business Manager of Xavier who, due to demands on his time, had to resign after making an excellent contribution to the Committee.
The new appointees will serve out the terms of the men they replace. The terms of all HRC members will expire in April of 1970.

PREFERENTIAL PERMITS QUESTIONED During a meeting held at the Jefferson Davis Elementary School, located ironically enough on Grant Street in East Gentilly, concerned black parents and one white parent alleged that most white parents are given preferential treatment in their applications for permits to attend junior high school out of district.
The district school is Carver -- all parents, black and white, want to avoid attending Carver Junior High.
The juxtaposition of the Jefferson elementary district with the junior high districts, Carver and McDonough #28, should be noted. The boundary line between the Carver district and one of the McDonough busing districts virtually cuts right down the middle of the Jefferson Davis district. The children west of the line attend Carver and the neighborhood is predominately black. The children who live east of the line are bused to McDonough #28 and the neighborhood is predominately white.
While consideration of racial balance may motivate the School Board in this case, the charge of discrimination in the granting of permits transcends that consideration. Hence, the Human Relations Committee is concerned to investigate the charge.

CRC PANEL RECOMMENDED FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS
HRC has asked the New Orleans School Board to publicize the availability of the Community Relations Panel to the PTA's of schools in the New Orleans area, in an effort to have this interracial group included in the social or cultural programs of public schools throughout the year. The Panel is made up of individuals who have experienced racial or religious misunderstanding and prejudice. The Panel members relate how they have dealt with this problem within the context of their own lives.
HRC feels that this Panel format will help foster improved human relations and understanding. The Committee also hopes that this concept could be developed using students and that it could be included in the extracurricula program of the public school system.

HRC SUPPORTS SCATTERED-SITES AT CPC HEARING HRC members Luis Zervigon and Alvin Sargent appeared at a recent hearing held by the City Planning Commission on a request by the Housing Authority of New Orleans for permission to acquire 20 sites in the Carrollton area for location of 150 scattered-site housing units. This particular proposal has been under attack by some residents of the area.
Zerivigon told the Commission that HRC is committed to the belief that scattered-site housing is vital to the improvement of neighborhoods. However, Zervigon, who is a member of HRC's Housing Sub-Committee and a Carrollton resident, said that HRC is "alarmed" by some aspects of the scattered-site proposals because certain details remain unknown until HANO's notices of its plans are posted in the areas. He also said that neighborhood groups are not consulted during the planning phases of the program.
Alvin Sargent, head of HRC's Housing Sub-Committee, said that he sometimes wondered if "human relations could work in this city" after watching the actions of "opponents of such progressive programs as scattered-site housing."
The Planning Commission decided to take the specific HANO request in the Carrollton area under advisement until further investigation could be made. Opponents and supporters of this particular project and the concept of scattered sites were concerned about the communications between HANO and neighborhood residents.
HRC is following up this concern and requesting more information from the Housing Authority on future scattered-site proposals.

LET THE BLOOD FLOW!
(Editor's Note: Background information for this article has been obtained from the July, 1969 issue of Hospital Practice and a medical doctor who requests not to be identified.)
A recent survey conducted by the U.S. Health, Education and Welfare Department shows that at least 11 hospitals in Louisiana administer blood transfusions on a racially segregated basis. This practice follows a 1958 state law which requires blood to be provided according to the race of the donor and the patient. This Louisiana statute is in conflict with Title VI of the Federal Civil Rights Act which H.E.W. interprets to mean that segregation of blood tends to deny all people equal medical protection, in many cases delays the delivery of blood to those who need it, and constitutes racial discrimination prohibted by law.

Large supplies of blood are needed in hospitals throughout the country, and because of new and complicated surgical procedures that require more blood as well as the ever increasing importance of blood components, the needs will increase. Because of the erratic public response to requests for donors, as well as the increasing needs, there is a shortage of blood throughout the country. This critical situation is magnified in Louisiana where, because of legal blood segregation, the American Red Cross, a large supplier of blood elsewhere in the country, is prevented from transferring blood into local blood banks. The Red Cross has a national policy of non-discrimination.

To fill the void left by the lack of out of state blood supplied by the Red Cross and other blood banks, many privately owned non-hospital blood banks have been established to serve the transfusion needs of the various communities in Louisiana. These non-hospital blook banks currently follow a policy of strict adherence to the state blood labeling law. During a July 16th interview on WWL-TV, Dr. Ralph Meyer, Acting Medical Director of the New Orleans Blook Bank, confirmed that all blood from the NOBB was labeled by race and that this practice would continue until the law was changed.

Besides the reduced inter-state traffic of blood, the local distribution of blood between hospitals has been affected by the archiac Louisiana blood labeling law. One community hospital in New Orleans, in trying to stock its depleted blood bank, had difficulty in getting the most common type of blood, O+, from the New Orleans Blood Bank. For two days, the hospital was told by NOBB that the blood was "not available", and only after a demand to send "any type" was it discovered that the NOBB was delaying the transfer of O+ Caucasian blood while it awaited O+ Negro donors for blood to fulfill the request. Requests for blood from certain "integrated" hospitals often elicit the "not available" response from the NOBB, but just as often the blood becomes available when the Blood Bank is told to send the blood of any race, not just Negro or Caucasian blood. It is ironic, in view of the federal civil rights action, that many of the non-hospital community blood banks are federally licensed by the Division of Biologics Standards of the National Institute of Health. According to Dr. Meyer, the unethical and illegal segregation of blood has been noted for several years by the DBS inspectors who make bi-annual, unannounced inspections of Blood Bank facilities. Their response, according to him, was to "just laugh."

There is no scientific basis for separation of blood by race. The American Association of Blood Banks, which sets the standards by which almost all blood banks operate, has adhered to the prestigious National Academy of Science report that the practice of racial separation is scientifically unsound and that it adds nothing to the safety of transfusion procedures. Those supposedly respectable whites, including the Governor and some other officials, who claim that it is their prerogative or "right" to choose the racial origin of the blood they receive might only look at the definition of "choice" (Webster's Third New International Dictionary) - a "voluntary and purposive or deliberate action of picking, singling out or selecting from two or more that which is favored or superior" to see that to choose at all between human bloods is to perpetuate the myth (and white hope) of Negro inferiority, even to the quality of blood.

But the burden of responsibility does not fall completely upon the blood banks. Patients and their physicians must end their practice of perpetuating this law by adhering to it. Human blood should be treated as human blood; patients should not request blood of a specific race, and physicians should not order racially specific blood or comply with requests for it. This would be a step towards the elimination of just another facet of racial prejudice from our biased society, and it would be a step towards more efficient medical care for all citizens of this state.

The Louisiana Mental Health Association is establishing a Half-Way House for women in New Orleans for patients just coming from mental institutions which will continue their rehabilitation and treatment. It will be the first such institution for women in the state. (There are three for men at the present time.)
There is a great need for furnishings and equipment for the house and Miss Cyd Nepon, chairman of the committee, is requesting help from church members and groups. They need furniture for living, bedroom and kitchen, linens, a hot water heater, etc. Those having any of these things to contribute may take them to the Louisiana Mental Health Association, 1528 Jackson Ave., or call 523-3845 for pick-up. Green and Top Value stamps are acceptable also. These gifts are tax deductible, of course.

Issues Forum

Issues Forum, a new thrust in community consciousness, has made its bow in the city. A non-partisan creation of the Tulane Urban Studies Center, Issues Forum aims to stimulate dialogue between groups which have not had the opportunity to meet before. It also hopes to educate the community at large in the issues at stake in the future of New Orleans, especially in the face of the forthcoming municipal elections.
A kick-off dinner will be held in late August featuring a well-known speaker on urban affairs. Details will be announced later.
Issues Forum will make its major thrust in September with the scheduling of speakers for community meetings. Needed are names of persons who can serve as informed speakers on any of the issues confronting New Orleans.
Call the Issues office at 865-7373 to make suggestions.

At 2135 Second Street, in the old St. Francis DeSales Church School Building, a group of nine architectural students from Southern University, Baton Rouge are working together as VISTA Associate Volunteers for the summer. This program, VISTA Associates, is an attempt to bring badly needed technical assistance into the New Orleans Model Cities Target Areas -- Central City, Desire/Florida, and the Lower Ninth Ward.
The students are presently involved with projects which focus on many of the problems of physical environment in these areas. At this point in the program, they are constructing large (approximately 15x15 feet) architectural models of the target areas, working with neighborhood residents and attending community and Model Cities meetings, designing and proposing projects and lending technical assistance in various other ways when called upon by target area groups.
This program is financed by OEO and each student volunteer only receives finances to cover his living expenses for the summer. In addition, the National AIA will give each student a $600 scholarship. Considering that expenses for tuition at Southern University will be over $1000 for the next school year, this scholarship will not suffice to finance the complete year. Additional scholarship monies are necessary and are being sought to make the program a complete success.
The work of VISTA Associates is open to the public and can be viewed at the school building at any time. If any further information is needed about the program or if anyone would want to lend assistance on the projects or help the students continue their education, please call 897-3690 or visit the school building.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES: REPORT AND DISSENT

Government insurance of mortgage loans (through either the Federal Housing Administration or the Veterans Administration) has traditionally been accompanied by a ceiling on the interest rate which such loans could carry. More often than not, the ceiling has resembled a floor and in periods of scarcity of loan funds, lenders have circumvented it by requiring discounts on loans. (A discount, or the payment of "points," means that a portion is deducted from the principal at the time the loan is originated. Since repayment is on the basis of the full face value of the principal, the effect of the discount is equivalent to an increase in the interest rate over the nominal one.) While it is true that FHA insists that the seller must pay any "points," the latter is likely to cover this, as other expenses, in the price of the house, so that the borrower pays it in the end, anyway.

The fact that the ceiling has tended to be ineffective has encouraged segments of the housing and mortgage industry to seek its elimination. A step in that direction was taken in early 1968 when the Secretary of HUD and the Administrator of VA were given temporary authority to set the ceilings at their discretion. (Increases have been made in the ceiling twice under this authority.) At the same time that Congress authorized this "experiment," it called for a Commission to study the matter of mortgage interest rates and to make recommendations on both the specific issue of the ceiling and on broader matters relating to the securing of "an adequate supply of mortgage credit at a reasonable cost to the consumer." The Commission consisted of ten Members of Congress (equally divided between the two parties) and five Presidential appointees,"at least three of whom will be public members representing the consumer." (When President Johnson named the five non-Congressional appointees last November, there were those who wondered where the three consumer representatives were, since the five included a stock broker, a representative of the mortgage bankers, a representative of the mutual savings banks, and a representative of the National Association of Homebuilders.)

The Commission's Report, filed in early August, documents the critical situation in mortgage credit. At a time when the nation was supposedly gearing up to dramatically increase housing production, residential mortgages have fallen from one-third of net borrowings in the nation's non-financial sector, to only one-fifth. This means that residential construction, which represented 5% of the Gross National Product in the 1950's, has dropped to 3½% in recent years. (The largest increase in share of GNP has been registered by business investment, with state and local government spending coming next, and Federal spending third. Personal consumption expenditures are accounting for a reduced share of output, leading one to wonder why the government continues to treat the situation as if it were a classic case of "demand" inflation, by relying on personal taxes and increased interest rates to "dampen it down.")

As hardly needs documenting, interest rates have soared to what the Commission calls "the highest levels since at least the mid 1800's." The monthly housing expense on a new FHA-financed home has gone up by some 90% in the last dozen years. One-sixth of that increase has been due solely to increased interest rates. An obvious result is that "almost all the decline in insured loan activity . . . was felt by families at the low end of the income scale."

The more-than-two-dozen recommendations contained in the Commission Report are a mixture of rhetoric and reluctance. It endorses the official housing goal and calls for policies to shift economic resources "away from other sectors and into homebuilding," but, as Commissioner Nathaniel Rogg (of the National Association of Homebuilders) notes, "without identification of the areas to be affected by such shifts and the specific techniques by which the shifting could be accomplished." The Report emphasizes the need for "funding to assist low- and moderate-income families in obtaining decent housing," and it calls on the government to "provide the necessary mortgage credit - either through direct lending or in other ways -- for all assisted housing programs that are funded, whenever the supply of mortgage credit from private lenders is inadequate." But the Report neither proposes any new techniques for doing the job, nor deals directly with the issue of the interest rates on that credit.

In fact, the Report admits (on page 101) to a bias in favor of a "permissive" approach and "an unregulated market." Thus, while candidly reporting that "The Federal Government's own pension and trust fund accounts are the worst 'offenders' in ignoring the mortgage market," the Report does not call for any specific legislative or administrative action to change that situation. This same bias doubtless underlies the Commission's failure to consider alternatives to "monetary restraint" [i. e., high interest rates] as a weapon against inflation, though the Report clearly notes that "an undue share of the burden of such restraint" falls on housing.

Given this bias and the composition of the Commission, it is not surprising that its recommendation on the statutory ceiling on interest rates chargeable on FHA- and VA-insured mortgages is to call for abolition of the ceiling. To ease the "transition" into this "unregulated market," the Report suggests a 3-year period of "tandem" rates, under which the mortgage lender could choose to abide by a ceiling (set by the Secretary of HUD and the VA Administrator) and go on charging "points" in periods of tight money, or escape the ceiling by foregoing any "points" [which would hardly be necessary in the absence of a ceiling, anyway].

Commissioners Wright Patman and Leonor Sullivan (both Democrats and members of the House Banking and Currency Committee) refused to sign the Report and filed a 12-page dissent. They flatly oppose ending the FHA-VA interest ceiling as "inimicable to the consumer" (and go on to question the assumption that higher interest rates will provide more mortgage credit). Moreover, they note that the current situation actually amounts to "the rationing of housing -- by mortgage interest rates." The dissent includes a series of recommendations which "the Commission should have" made, including requiring commercial banks which hold Federal tax and loan accounts (as interest-free deposits) to become active in providing mortgage money; requiring the Federal Reserve System's Open Market Committee to purchase "a sufficient quantity of insured mortgage paper to meet the national housing goals"; instituting direct loans for "that segment of the population which is worthy of mortgage credit but cannot obtain it through conventional lending institutions"; and developing "new instruments to raise investment funds (at no more than 6%) to be devoted entirely to mortgages on [low- and moderate-income] homes." (Mrs. Sullivan has since introduced legislation to implement this latter recommendation -- H.R.13694, to create a Home Owners Mortgage Loan Corporation.)

It is the charge of the minority that the Commission majority refused "to confront stark problems with courageous solutions," and instead came out with "a Report which steps on no toes . . . and blandly accepts as inevitable and immutable conditions in the mortgage market which are immoral and unconscionable." It seems at least true that the Commission's bias against actions which might be regarded as "running . . . counter to the American free enterprise system," precluded it from dealing with the problems it so clearly documented on anything like a basic institutional level.

MORE NOTES ON REHAB'

Reports on various efforts in the residential rehabilitation field continue to come in [see also Bulletins for May, pages 6-8, and June, page 6]. The current House and Home devotes two pages to the delayed success of Allegheny Housing Rehabilitation Corp. Initially funded by forty corporations, AHRCO was established at the suggestion of Bernard Loshbough, Executive Director of Pittsburgh's non-profit housing development corporation, Action-Housing. Loshbough convinced the firms involved that conventional rehab', not built around "product favoritism or other gimmicks," could be profitable. The first year's experience was not encouraging. AHRCO did only 20 houses and lost $300,000 (not counting $262,000 in "start-up" expense), proving, as an executive in one of the sponsoring firms put it, "that rehab by committee doesn't work."

For its second year, AHRCO took on a single executive, experienced in rehab', and now says that it will clear $100,000 on 363 units. The target for its third year is to more than double that output level. House and Home stresses the contrast between AHRCO's "stick by stick" conventional approach and the "systems approach," which emphasizes technology but has yet to prove itself economically. An AHRCO job, for example, will save all interior walls that can be repaired, rather than engage in wholesale replacement. It will include all new 'mechanicals' (heating, plumbing, and wiring), as a rule. A typical job is said to involve buying a 3-bedroom unit for $2,000, putting $8,500 in work into it, and re-selling to a non-profit sponsor (such as Action-Housing) for $12,700. (Out of that 20% margin, AHRCO expects to clear about $750 before taxes.)

It is noteworthy that 90% of AHRCO's work force is black, which has led to a dispute with the Pittsburgh Building Trades Council. The union group has agreed to join AHRCO in an apprenticeship training program, but demands that those involved give up any non-union "moonlighting." AHRCO staff contend that discrimination against blacks on union jobs is such that its workmen need the right to take extra jobs, as an "escape clause."

FARMERS HOME AND HOUSING IN FISCAL 1969

Farmers Home Administration has released statistics on its housing programs for the fiscal year ended last June 30th and they are summarized in the table below. The agency made more than 46-thousand homeownership loans to rural families, including 769 to families participating in self-help programs; and it made another 5,500 loans for home repairs (to eliminate health and safety hazards). About one-eighth of the homeownership loans carried interest supplements (and FmHA also processed about 500 loans under the Federal Housing Administration's Section 235 program last year, which are not indicated in the table). The ownership loan program reflected about a 3% increase in families served over the preceding fiscal year, with the self-help loans and the "special 502" loans (smaller loans, limited to improvement or enlargement work), showing a much more rapid rate of growth than the program in general. As might be expected, the average loan size increased somewhat -- from $9,315 to $9,550 for contractor-built houses, and from $7,430 to $7,511 for self-help houses.

[b] FY '69 figures include 1 cooperative loan for $150,000 on 18 units.

FmHA's rental housing loans increased by more than 50%, though still a relatively small part of the program. The 2,064 units financed last year averaged $8,408 each in loan amount, down somewhat from the previous fiscal year. The farm labor housing program also showed an increase, especially in the grant portion, though the rise in dormitory-type housing financed was more than offset by a decline in family units funded.

In general, last year's "target" of activity seems to have been met by FmHA, but it will require a tripling of that level in the current fiscal year, if the goal announced in the President's Budget is to be achieved. There is little likelihood of that occurring.

PROGNOSIS ON "BREAKTHROUGH"

As a follow-up to HUD's mid-July briefing on "Operation Breakthrough" (which attracted more than 1,200 industry representatives and overflowed the largest government auditorium), The Wall Street Journal (8/21/69) sampled opinion in the industry on the program's prospects for success. In government, of course, it found optimism. HUD Under Secretary Richard Van Dusen points not only at the briefing attendance (more than 950 companies have reportedly indicated interest now), but cites statewide conferences called by five governors [all Republicans as it happens] as evidence of progress on the market aggregation phase; and argues that organized labor is showing more flexibility.

Skepticism, on the other hand, is the word for the attitude of men in the building business. The Journal summarized "Breakthrough"'s goals as threefold: cutting costs, securing a start on volume production by 1971, and closing the gap between current housing production rates and the national goal of 2.6 million units a year. It reports the following as typical responses on each of these goals --

On cost cutting:

> "The cost of money and land is the biggest portion of the cost of a home," asserts Earl F. Bennett, an official of Koppers Co. "Technological breakthroughs on the cost of the shell alone won't cut the cost of housing. They'll be lucky if they can hold ground."

On volume production by 1971:

> "The Federal Government is notoriously slow," agrees Echo Modules' Mr. Wood [consultant to a firm specializing in ready-made units for on-site assembly]. "I can't see how they'll even evaluate the prototypes in two years."

On closing the production gap:

> "No housing program is going to achieve anything without spending lots of Federal money," says Don MacLauchlan, vice president of National Homes Corp. . . . . "If the Government wants that kind of housing production, it will have to radically expand its subsidy programs."

MEGALOPOLIS DELAYED?

Based on various special enumerations taken over the years from 1964 through 1968, the Census Bureau has now prepared and published county-by-county population estimates for mid-1966. The most significant aspect of the numbers is their indication that the trend toward urban concentration has perhaps slowed. While metropolitan counties continued to exhibit more rapid population growth than non-metropolitan ones during the period 1960-66, the rate of that growth was less than in the 1950's; while, for non-metropolitan counties, the rate of growth in the '60's was greater than in the '50's. Since all areas experienced a decline in the birth rate since 1960, the Census Bureau notes that the increasing rate of non-metropolitan growth "must be attributed in good part to a lessening of out-migration to the metropolitan centers."

Except for New England and the Mountain states, where both metropolitan and non-metropolitan counties had a slowing of growth rate, the pattern was true of all areas, but there was far from uniformity of degree [see map below]. The most dramatic contrast was in the South Central states (Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama to Texas and Oklahoma), where the non-metropolitan counties reversed a net loss of population, characteristic of the 1950's, to a net increase of about 1% a year.

CHANGE IN AVERAGE ANNUAL POPULATION GROWTH
BETWEEN 1950'S AND 1960'S

United States:
Metro: 2.4% (1950-60) to 1.7% (1960-66)
Non-Metro: 0.5% (1950-60) to 0.9% (1960-66)

Demographer Calvin Beale, of the Department of Agriculture, has analyzed the same county data to compare the pattern for counties that were predominantly rural (more than half the population living on farms or in places of less than 2,500) at the beginning of each period. He found that the growth rate for such counties had also increased (from 0.7% a year in the '50's to 0.9% a year in the '60's), though not as much as for non-metropolitan counties as a whole. The pattern for rural counties was also not uniform across the country. In five of the geographic areas it was similar to that for non-metropolitan counties generally. But, in the Northeastern region (New England and the Middle Atlantic states), and in the East North Central and the Pacific areas, the growth rate for rural counties fell, while, as the map shows, that for non-metropolitan counties was relatively stable.

PUBLICATIONS ROUND-UP

* Home Ownership for Low-Income Families is a monograph in the series being published by the National Legal Aid and Defender Association. Attorney Charles Edson, the author, is now with the Housing Assistance Administration, but also has experience in the Legal Services program of the Office of Economic Opportunity. His study summarizes the Section 235 mortgage assistance program, but gives primary attention to the various ownership options available under the public housing program (including less well-known ones such as the payment of assistance on behalf of cooperative members). The Appendices include the text of the HUD Handbook on the 235 program and the HAA Circular on its regular HOPLIF (Home Ownership Program for Low Income Families). [90 pages, available at $1.50 each from National Legal Aid and Defender Association, 1155 East 60th Street, Chicago 60637.]

* HUD has revised its catalog HUD Programs (SP/MP-78). Printed on looseleaf filler sheets (9½" x 6"), it gives a one-page summary for each of the Department's 73 programs and also provides a listing of regional, insuring, and administering offices, and an index. HUD has also issued a brochure which unfolds into a large chart, digesting HUD Residential Rehabilitation Programs (R/IP-131). While the focus is rehab', there are digests for almost all HUD low-income programs, including rent supplements, public housing, the new 235 and 236 programs, etc. [Both available, without charge, from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington 20410.]

* People Have a Right . . ., the report of the first National Conference on Rural Housing [see June Bulletin, pages 4-6], is back from the printer. It includes a ten-point statement of principles and fifty recommendations for action, as well as a listing of Conference participants, sponsors, etc. [43 pages, available on request from Rural Housing Alliance.]

* The Urban Coalition has turned out several publications relevant to low-income housing. The latest is a 19-page brochure, Pointers For Urban Coalition Housing Task Forces, which notes approaches for using existing institutions or for creating new ones. Earlier publications were Guide to Federal Low- & Moderate-Income Housing and Community Development Programs (27 pages), and Agenda for Positive Action: State Programs in Housing and Community Development (24 pages). Both are excellent introductions for those new to the housing field.

The former is reportedly in short supply, but presumably will be reprinted to meet demand. [Requests for any or all should go to Urban Coalition, 1819 H Street, N. W., Washington 20006.]

* Housing - Patterns for Action #1 was published jointly by Urban America and the National Council of Churches' Joint Strategy and Action Committee. It combines articles on need, involvement and experience in housing with a six-page summary of relevant Federal programs. A section on "What Sponsors Must Know" outlines the role of housing development corporations, the technicians that make up a housing development team, and some of the essentials of site selection. [48 pages, available at 75¢ each from Urban America, 1717 Massachusetts, N. W., Washington 20036.]

* Urban America has also prepared, for the League of Women Voters, of the United States, The Ill-Housed, "a compendium of writings on housing," drawn primarily from the studies of the Kaiser Committee and the Douglas Commission. A comparative table lists some of the recommendations of both groups and those of the National Housing Conference. Substantive passages from these and other sources are presented in an organized fashion with a minimum of editorial comment. [62 pages, available at $1.25 each from League of Women Voters, 1730 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.]

NOTE: Editor-publisher Ash Gerecht, of Housing Affairs Letter (see last month's Bulletin, page 3), advises that he will send a sample issue on request and without obligation. Write to 1319 F Street, N.W., Washington 20004.

POSTSCRIPT TO A POST-MORTEM: In our report on the trials of the Commission on Urban Problems ("Douglas Commission Confidential," page 3, July Bulletin*), we concluded -- erroneously, it turns out --• that the printed version of the report was the "expurgated" one which Howard Shuman said HUD had transmitted to Congress and the President. Shuman advises, however, that "we [the Commission staff] carried our own version to the Hill . . . and finally got the Report published in full in March." So, House Document 91-34 is the full text.*

HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEE OF NEW ORLEANS
MONTHLY REPORT

Room BE11 - City Hall
529-4311 - EXT. 475

Volume II, Issue 9 December, 1969

COUNCIL VOTE ON PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS IMMINENT!

At a November 13 meeting with groups supporting the local public accommodations ordinance proposed by the Human Relations Committee, six city councilmen agreed to vote on the issue before the end of the year. The ordinance provides for a $100 fine or three months in jail for a proprietor found guilty of racial discrimination in the use of a facility open to the public.

Some councilmen are considering amending the HRC draft to exclude personal and professional service (i.e., barber shops, beauty parlors, etc.) from coverage. The wording of the law which will be considered by the Council sometime in December is legally the prerogative of the councilmen.

Meanwhile, another convention group, the Headstart and Child Development Association, has called for the passage of a local anti-discrimination law. The group has indicated that it will ask other conventions or functions planned for New Orleans for the next two years not to come here unless a public accommodations law is passed. The Headstart organization also raised objections to employment practices locally and in particular at the Jung Hotel where the convention was held.

The increasing frequency of public accommodations complaints by groups and individuals who live in and visit the city has solidified strong support for the measure's passage. It is almost certain now that the issue will reach a climax about the third or fourth week in December.

HRC strongly urges all individuals who want to see New Orleans remain a major tourist capital and a progressive city to give their wholehearted support to the passage of the public accommodations ordinance. This is just the first step toward relevant racial justice, and it is a step that the Committee feels should be taken more quickly than with "all deliberate speed" if New Orleans wants to function in the human half of the twentieth century.

HRC APPROVES DROPOUT AND RECREATION PROPOSALS

The Human Relations Committee has approved a proposal submitted by Dr. Loretta Butler of Xavier University and Thugs United, the city's major ghetto youth and community self-help organization, for a program to help high school drop outs to either complete their education or to be eligible for better employment positions. The pilot project to test the workability of the Thugs program will run for 12 weeks and will utilize techniques developed by Thugs in motivating drop outs. Dr. Butler has been contracted by the HRC to evaluate the program for recommendations for permanent funding by the U.S. Office of Education, which is considering an expanded program submitted by Thugs, or by the New Orleans School Board which does not now have an effective drop out program.

The Thugs test program will work with 12 drop outs selected by the program's counselor and Dr. Butler. It will use teachers who in the estimation of the director can relate to ghetto youth. The drop outs will be trained in basic skills and counseled toward improving their life situations. A detailed evaluation of the program will be submitted within three months after the project is completed. The HRC is now waiting for approval from the city administration to give the go ahead to the program.

The Committee is also awaiting approval of a recreation proposal designed to test implementaiton methods for community groups in organizing and planning a program for use of school recreation facilities by neighborhood people. The test project will be carried out by the PTA at Lusher School located at Willow and Lowerline Streets. The evaluation will be done by a Tulane professor and an education consultant to see if a model can be developed to organize neighborhood people in carrying out recreation projects.

The funding for these two proposals and the Inter-Racial Dialogue Program which is already in operation comes from the HRC Contractual Services budget. The money is being utilized to test programs which will improve racial communications and bring about a more just social order.

 HIGHLIGHTS *****

HRC BUDGET SLASHED 20% The City Council has approved a city operating budget which appropriates approximately $13,000 less for Human Relations Committee operation than last year. The 1970 budget calls for $60,100 for the Committee. Last year HRC operated with $73,000. The Committee had asked for an increased budget for additional clerical help and a Research Director position. However, the Chief Administrative Office recommended money for the Research Director without extra clerical help for a total budget of $74,000. Then the Council cut the Research Director and took an additional $5,000 from the Contractual Services budget, leaving the Committee with $60,100.

POLICE AUTO POUND The city administration has agreed not to re-locate the Police Auto Pound under the Claiborne Expressway between Ursuline and St. Nicholas Streets as a result of opposition by the Treme Community Improvement Association and the intervention of the Human Relations Committee. The site had been recommended as a temporary (2 year) location when it became necessary to move the Auto Pound so that the Expressway link-up between Tulane Avenue and the Claiborne overpass could be completed. (The Auto Pound is now located under the Claiborne overpass.) When the matter came up for councilmanic approval on November 13, the Treme organization and HRC reiterated their opposition to the re-location in a residential and small business area along Claiborne Avenue. The Council asked the Chief Administrative Office to have the matter studied. Two weeks later, after the Treme group met with a representative of the CAO's office, the administration agreed that they would not place the Pound at the previously recommended site. The City Planning Commission is now studying two other possible sites. Approval of a new location will probably be considered at a Council meeting in early December.

OPEN BEACH POOL The Human Relations Committee has urged the Mayor and City Council to include operating funds for Pontchartrain Beach Pool in the city budget for 1970. Mr. Edward Lennox of the Orleans Levee Board has indicated that he welcomes city operation of this facility since the lease of Playland Amusements does not include management of the beach pool. Informal exploration of the idea of NORD operation occurred earlier this year. There is no good reason why a capital investment representing hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money should be allowed to sit vacant in the summer months. With proper publicity, a lower admission charge, and city financial support, the Pontchartrain Beach Pool should become a successful operation.

1=3 GETS 3 TO 1 The Urban Renewal referendum, to the surprise of many people, passed by a 3 to 1 margin, losing closely in only 3 or 4 precincts out of 411. The vote carried substantially in precincts serving the Lower Ninth Ward. The incentive of one local dollar being matched by two federal dollars (1=3) and the extensive efforts to assure citizen participation and support seem to have made the difference. The success of this referendum marks the end of a preliminary struggle which has involved hundreds of people in this city for months and even years, beginning with the push to secure enabling legislation from the state legislature. This referendum allows the actual urban renewal program to get underway. The end of this struggle, however, means the beginning of an even more important process -- to assure that all programs will be planned and carried out in a humane, creative and just manner serving the needs of people and the development of the city.

SCATTERED SITES FOR CARROLLTON The City Council approved approximately 40 new scattered site, low rent housing units for the Carrollton area at one of its November meetings. For the first time there was no opposition to a scattered-site proposal at a Council hearing. There was a large number of groups and individuals appearing in support of the development. Leading the supporters were representatives of the Carrollton Central Steering Committee. HRC reaffirmed its stand in favor of scattered site housing which provides relocation for citizens involved.

HRC MEETS IN CARROLLTON COMMUNITY The Human Relations Committee held its second November meeting at the Carrollton Central building located at Leonidas and Willow Streets. The neighborhood meeting at which some 30 Carrollton residents were present was highlighted by the first presentation of the Know Your Rights pamphlet. David Marcello, a law student at Tulane University, presented the Know Your Rights material which is designed to give New Orleans citizens the facts about their rights and obligations when they come into contact with policemen. It was apparent from this presentation that the Know Your Rights project has to be expanded to bring in more than just the legal interpretation of what one should do when confronted by a policeman. Many of the Carrollton residents were more concerned about what should be done to stop police from unjustly stopping someone on the street, abusing someone verbally, or brutalizing an individual. These questions relate more to the politics of the police and society. In that respect, the Committee is now considering broadening the presentation to include some community leaders who have extensive knowledge and contact with law officers along with a policeman from the Community Relations Division and a lawyer.

Prior to the Know Your Rights segment of the Carrollton meeting, a number of people expressed themselves on problems in the area. One man pointed out that there was a need for more police protection around Priestly High School when the students were getting off at 3:30. Another gentleman talked about the need for a traffic light at Leonidas and Willow. The Carrollton group pointed out the need for a health center there. A woman who had been receiving welfare money for drugs talked about her hardship.

The HRC staff took the list of complaints and suggestions and is in the process of following them up.

SUGAR BOWL PARADE Announcement of plans for the first Sugar Bowl parade has caused great excitement in New Orleans. The Human Relations Committee has been in touch with Mr. Joseph Rault, the chairman of the corporation sponsoring the parade, to urge that participation in the parade by beauty queens, maids, bands and marching units be representative of the racial and ethnic composition of the city of New Orleans and the state of Louisiana. Mr. Rault has responded very affirmatively and has pointed out that the parade welcomes participation by all. Dr. Leonard Burns of New Orleans, the first black chairman of the Louisiana State Tourist Commission and a member of the parade committee, commented that efforts are being made to have an inclusive parade despite obstacles due to financing.

HRC FUNDS RESEARCH PROJECT TO HELP OVER-CROWDING PROBLEM IN PARISH PRISON

The Human Relations Committee has funded a research project to assess the effectiveness of the Release on Recognizance Program, Inc. The ROR operation provides systematic interview, evaluation and recommendation to eligible state charged arrestees, for pre-trial release on their own recognizance without requiring any of the said arrestees to pay any fee or post any bond.

The ROR program has been operating with volunteer personnel since February, 1968. They have interviewed over 3,800 state charged arrestees. After verification and recommendation of those eligible, 1,006 individuals have been released without having to pay bond. Released persons are required to make weekly reports, by telephone, to ROR and to appear in court for all hearings. Of 1,006 scheduled appearances, only 83 have failed to occur and of these, only 36 remain at large.

It is estimated that at least 75 defendants awaiting trial are released daily as a direct result of the ROR service. In prisoner maintenance cost alone, ROR saves the city between $40,000 and $136,000 per year. Random samplings have demonstrated that the pre-trial population of the prison has been cut by more than 25% as a result of ROR.

The HRC funded a study of the operation with paid professional staffing as a basis for evaluating possible future appropriations to the project under the Model Cities program.

For further information on the program, please contact Mr. Peter Castano at 822-1299. ROR is located in Parish Prison at 2700 Tulane Avenue.

FREE ACCESS LAW

The local public accommodations ordinance has thus far sustained constitutional attacks from a group of 80 bar owners through the Municipal Court, District Court, Louisiana Supreme Court, a federal judge, and the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The law became effective January 8 after a favorable ruling overturning a temporary injunction in the State Supreme Court.

There have been two reported complaints in connection with the new law. One involved apparent price discrimination against two Negro men in a bar on Baronne Street. The other case involves a bar on St. Claude Street which turned into an instant private club when a black man went there to buy a bag of potato chips.

Overall, the ordinance has received general compliance in the community and favorable editorial comment from all of the major media. Metropolitan Area Committee chairman, Sam Israel, had this to say about the ordinance before MAC's Annual Meeting on January 13:

"Continuing my theme that 1969 reflected the awakening of a new, progressive public attitude, I point now to the adoption last month by the City Council of a public accommodations ordinance, by a vote of 7 to 0.

The event was a classic demonstration of democracy functioning as it should. For months the issue was ventilated as a matter of general public discussion. A case for the supporters and a case for the opponents was aired thoroughly. Then the Council held a scheduled, orderly hearing. All aspects were given full consideration. After due deliberation, the Council acted -- a unanimous decision buttressed by an ample showing that the majority of the citizens supported the move.

Representing as it does a victory in favor of equal justice for all of the people over practices that had stemmed from a past era, the public accommodations ordinance takes on added significance -- as a commentary on the new look for New Orleans -- when you realize that the change resulted from the democratic process and not from court action.

EDITOR: Bill Rouselle, Deputy Director

"PROGRESS is the communication mechanism of the New Orleans Human Relations Committee. Our basic policy is to advise the community of significant concerns in the field of human relations."

The change was produced by the elected representatives of the people of New Orleans. There was no federal mandate, no federal court decree ordering the Council to enact a local ordinance. The city did so on its own responsibility."

A more critical view of the ordinance was aired in the Plain Truth, a black newspaper published by the Free Southern Theatre:

"In reality, however, the new Public Accommodations Ordinance will do very little, if anything, to improve the plight of the Black people in this city... This paper believes that an all inclusive public accommodations ordinance is necessary and long overdue. However... the real and substantial benefits of the ordinance go to the white business community. The ordinance was, is, and will be used by the white business community as a "guarantee" to large conventions and the Super Bowl that Black members of their groups or teams will not be discriminated against while in the city. It should be remembered that tourism is this city's second largest industry. With the port rapidly becoming out-dated and in great financial turmoil, New Orleans could not afford to lose large conventions and events like the Super Bowl. The plain truth of the matter is that the passage of the Public Accommodations Ordinance was an economic necessity to this city's second largest industry...
The passage of the Public Accommodations Ordinance is not without significance for the Black Community. For what it's worth we now have the legal right to go into any bar or laundromat in the city -- a right which should have always been ours. Also, as a result of our experiences with the ordinance, we should now know how to exert economic pressure through outside conventions and the Super Bowl."

The Human Relations Committee wishes to thank all those groups who supported passage of the ordinance. HRC urges compliance with the provisions of the law which include regulations on price discrimination and posting of discriminatory signs or literature as well as an anti-intimidation section for people who attempt to coerce places to remain segregated.

The Committee staff is available for assistance if a citizen encounters discrimination. Just call our office, 529-4311, Ext. 475, or the Police Department, 822-4161. We will be happy to assist anyone with a valid complaint. We hope that will not be necessary too often, and from early reports, there appears to be a good chance that most of the places affected are complying.

HRC is optimistic about future racial progress with the success of this law. We will be working for change in other areas based on the substantial indication of commitment toward progress in our community.

* HIGHLIGHTS ****

CITIZEN PARTICIPATION IN REGIONAL PLANNING The Regional Planning Commission has instituted a citizen involvement unit to assist in coordinating planning projects which will affect New Orleans and the metropolitan area. HRC Deputy Director, Bill Rouselle, is a member of the Advisory Board which is recommending a broad-based citizen group to serve in the planning commission's program. The concept calls for three groups -- one made up of public officials, a second made up of technical people, and a third made up of average citizens -- to interact in planning. An attempt is being made to insure adequate discussion which will hopefully lead to consensus on plans for future projects which require federal funding. This would include the areas of transportation, housing, and public education. The Human Relations Committee endorses the concept of broad community participation in planning. The Committee will assist RPC in any possible way to get relevant planning through broad participation.

MARTIN LUTHER KING NATIONAL HOLIDAY The Human Relations Committee has adopted a resolution calling for a national day of observence in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, the slain civil rights leader. The Committee sent the resolution to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference which is conducting a national campaign to have Dr. King's birthday, January 15, declared a national holiday. The text of the resolution is included below.

"Be it resolved that the Human Relations Committee of the City of New Orleans strongly urges the proclamation of January 15 as a national holiday in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King, who gave his life to the cause of justice in America, symbolizes the best facets of the American tradition and in particular the hope of a more human and open society.
The New Orleans Human Relations Committee supports the efforts of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in having Dr. King's birthday set aside as the first federal holiday honoring a black American. This Committee feels that the symbolic implication of this action will help lessen the growing tension between black and white Americans and will serve as a clear indication that our country is proceeding down the road toward a just, pluralistic society. We urge all Congressmen to support this effort."

Earlier the Committee had asked the Mayor to issue a proclamation in honor of Dr. King. HRC also asked the City Council to pay tribute to King during January 15 Council meeting. The Council invited SCLC's Rev. Percy Simpson to deliver the prayer at the meeting. However, the Mayor's office received the proclamation request too late to take action on it. HRC urges more recognition of the achievements and contributions of black Americans as an indication to black people of our country's good faith.

CHARITY IMPLEMENTS COURTESY UNIT The Human Relations Committee congratulates new Charity Hospital Director, Dr. Charles Mary, for instituting a courtesy committee to recommend policy changes to make the hospital more accommodating to its patients. In a Times Picayune article dated January 18, 1970, Dr. Mary pointed out the need to treat all people who are in need of help with a sense of human dignity. This human insight, which has often been lacking in public institutions, clearly indicates that Charity Hospital is on the road toward real progress. Dr. Mary has also said he will communicate with neighborhood groups in an effort to bring about more comprehensive health services in New Orleans. The HRC is pleased with both of these new policies, and we wish the new director the best of luck.

LCSW ANNUAL MEETING HRC Director, John Pecoul and Deputy Director, William Rouselle were among featured speakers at the annual regional meeting of the Louisiana Conference of Social Welfare in December. The meeting theme was, "The Generation Gap".

JANUARY "PROGRESS" SHELVED DUE TO BUDGET CUT The HRC staff regrets not being able to publish a January edition of PROGRESS. Because our budget was cut by 20% as a result of City Council action, the decision was made to forego the January issue of the newsletter. A formal request has been sent to the Council for restoration of needed funds. The CAO's office had recommended a $73,000 budget for Committee operation for 1970, but the Council cut the recommended budget to $60,000.

COUNT THE PEOPLE The U.S. Census Bureau will be conducting tests and training during March for persons to work in gathering census information in New Orleans. Anyone interested must be willing to commit at least 30 hours per week to work in the census taking operation. Salaries range from $2.00 per hour upward, according to the job an applicant is qualified to undertake.

Total Community Action, the local anti-poverty agency, is attempting to get residents of low income neighborhoods involved in the census operation. Some tests will be conducted at the neighborhood service centers. However, people living outside the target neighborhoods can also apply. June Twinam, Research Director for TCA, says a real effort is being made this year to obtain an accurate count particularly in low income areas where previous census counts have proven insufficient. She urges persons interested in working with the census operation to apply before April 15.

TOWARD URBAN LEADERSHIP The National Urban Fellows are men and women in their twenties and thirties, mainly from ethnic minorities, selected competitively on the basis of their potential for leadership in urban government. The necessity for such leadership is demonstrated by the nationwide shortage of competent urban administrators -- a shortage that is particularly acute among minority groups. The leadership development program for Urban Fellows combines on-the-job assignments with mayors or other urban administrators and three kinds of academic instruction:

An intensive six-week summer course in urban studies at Yale, attended by the Fellows prior to job assignment;
Work-related graduate courses for each Fellow at a local university;
Three-to-five-day mid-year seminars on topics chosen by Fellows.

An Urban Fellow is assigned for 10 months to a Mentor, who may be a mayor, a city manager, a school superintendent, a budget director, or other top-level administrator. In the capacity of special assistant to his Mentor, the Fellow learns, by doing and by observing, the nature of an urban administrator's job. Applications for a National Urban Fellowship are accepted from men and women who:

- are citizens of the United States
- are between 25 and 39
- have a bachelor's degree or equivalent experience (that is, experience giving the applicant basic understanding of urban problems and the ability to use conceptual material);
- have been employed for at least two years, preferably in an administrative capacity;
- have demonstrated exceptional ability, leadership potential, and commitment to the solution of urban problems.

The 1970-1971 fellowships begin July 1, 1970, and end June 30, 1971. The deadline for receipt of completed applications is March 15, 1970.

THE ANSWER DESK

The following is an example of a case handled by the Answer Desk, the volunteer information and referral service of the Human Relations Committee.

Dec. 5

Mr. X called the Answer Desk and reported the following facts in the case of Mrs. C.B. who lives in the Florida Project. Mr. X's daughter is a nurse at Charity Hospital and made this report to Mr. X.

Mrs. B has 3 children and is receiving $78 per month.

She is expecting her 4th child any time.

She is divorced and her ex-husband's address is unknown.

Her son is now in Charity with a diagnosis of a possible brain tumor; Mrs. B remains with him day and night.

Friends care for the other 2 children and expect her to pay more for their upkeep.

Mrs. B has epilepsy.

The project manager contends she broke the refrigerator and must pay for it ($22.20) and has refused to replace it. Mrs. B contends she did not damage the unit.

Mr. Olivier of the Answer Desk contacted the project manager who said Mrs. B can repay the damages at a rate of one or two dollars per month. She can also go to HANO headquarters on Camp St. to discuss the matter with them - they may relieve her of the charge. The manager said the refrigerator has been replaced. Mrs. B's welfare worker is out of town and will be for another week. The welfare supervisor said Mrs. B. should have called him directly. He will assign another worker to the case.

Mr. Olivier was informed that Mrs. B apparently needs food and that she goes to the women's dressing room in Charity washes her clothes and puts them back on -- wet.

Dec. 12

Mr. Olivier called the welfare supervisor and he reported:

He has talked with Mrs. B who said she has solved the problem of care of her children -- they are staying with her mother.

The case has been discussed with the social service office -- all arrangements have been made for her confinement for the 4th child. When it is born, Mrs. B will receive additional ADC. He told her to notify him when the child is born.

COMMUNITY SERVICE CENTER

Many do not know that there is a program and center devoted to counseling and job placement of ex-inmates coming from Orleans Parish Prison and the Louisiana State Penitentiary at Angola.

The Community Service Center is a private nonprofit corporation formed for the purpose of helping men and women in the New Orleans area upon their release from prison. Their hope is that through individual counseling and job placement, they may reduce the repetition of crime in our community. They are also involved in finding jobs for men on Work-Release program from Orleans Parish Prison and Angola. They work in cooperation with the Rehabilitation Department of Parish Prison, the State and Federal Parole Officers, the Louisiana Division of Employment Service, Vocational Rehabilitation, the Salvation Army, the Volunteers of America and other social agencies.

William D. Rucker, the executive director, emphasizes their need for volunteers who can help with the counseling and aid in providing wholesome recreation for the clients and their families. Call 525-0993.

HRC ISSUES REGISTRATION REPORT

The Human Relations Committee has adopted a report on voter registration procedures. The report was compiled by Henry Julien, a political science graduate of Xavier University and currently a student at Columbia University Law School in New York. Mr. Julien worked in the HRC office as a summer intern. The Committee accepted the full document at its Feb. 16 meeting. A summary of the conclusions and recommendations are recorded below.

1. To overcome any possible lack of confidence, a major emphasis of the Registrar's office should be to encourage citizens to register and to make it easier to do so. To achieve this purpose, HRC recommends the establishment of subsidiary and/or mobile registration offices.
2. The new constitutional amendment authorizing the City Council to appoint a new registrar in May of 1970 gives an excellent opportunity for improving the operation of the Registrar's office. HRC believes this opportunity can best be utilized if basic criteria for evaluating persons proposed as registrar are adopted by the City Council in making their selection. The Committee therefore suggests that changes in the operating procedure recommended by this report be considered in making the selection. HRC further recommends that the Council adopt a procedure for receiving recommendations of individuals from concerned community groups and professional agencies, with the Council selecting a registrar from among the names submitted. This would insure a maximum of community acceptance for the person whom the Council selects.
3. Erratic interpretation of residence requirements by clerks often results in an applicant having to return several times before being registered. HRC recommends that, since there is a difference in the state directive and the parish directive regarding proof of residence, the state directive, which requests proof of residence only in cases where the applicant has difficulty proving his identity, be used consistently.
   The parish directive, requiring proof of residency to register, appears to be a usurpation of power with no legal basis. The State Constitution makes no reference to persons being required to prove residence.
4. The tendency on the part of some clerks to confuse the terms, "present address" and "precinct" often results in eligible persons being turned away. According to the State Constitution, the requirement is residency in a precinct for 90 days.
   HRC recommends that the State Constitution be observed, and that the Registration Office issue a statement clarifying this clause.
5. The divergence of interpretative powers, from the level of State Director down to the individual clerks, was originally intended to provide flexibility of operation. The result too often, however, is inefficient and inconsistent implementation of the registration procedure. This is particularly evident in the following three instances.
   Use of Marriage License as Proof of Identity - as presently enforced, married women whose husbands are registered voters may use their marriage license as identification if they have no other documents in their own name. HRC recommends that this be expanded to include all married women.
   Reputable Sources - the vague wording of this clause, listed in the state directive, results in inconsistent use by clerks who must relie on their interpretation of "reputable source". HRC recommends that the registration office compile a list of individuals and groups who would be accepted as reputable sources, thereby eliminating individual interpretation by clerks.
   Signed Affidavits - State regulations appear to allow the use of signed affidavits as a proof of eligibility to register. HRC recommends that use of affidavits signed by registrant be allowed. Although there is no absolute means of preventing subversion of the registration procedure, use of the affidavit by a registrant should be no more suspect than use of a rent receipt which is six months old.

AN EFFECTIVE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE (POLICE AND THE COMMUNITY)

The Human Relations Committee has called on the Police Department to make investigations of police abuse cases available to the public as a means of strengthening police-community relations. In a statement released February 3, Committee Chairman, Msgr. Arthur Screen, said:

> Recent police-community incidents unfortunately reveal increased tension in many areas in police-community relations. The Human Relations Committee of the City of New Orleans has been and is anxious to encourage an atmosphere of respect for the law and for those charged with administering and enforcing it. But it is equally anxious that public officials and law officers be sensitive and concerned with the rights, sensitivities, and safety of all citizens, regardless of position or status.
> The Committee has repeatedly urged that the details in disciplinary results of investigations of alleged abuses by law officers be made public, and even more importantly, that officers be carefully trained so as to obviate biased attitudes and consequent incidents that only serve to lessen the effectiveness of the officers and the regard of many citizens for police authority. Neither blanket condemnation of all police officers nor simple faith that no police can possibly be abusive is helpful. The Committee feels that better investigations, consistent discipline, and effective attitudinal training will serve to identify and remove inhumane officers and will not weaken law enforcement but strengthen it. This would remove the excuse from the person who might hide behind it to cover his own disobedience of the law. It would also increase total community respect for the police and the law in general.
> The present situation of conflict must be changed by those who really want good law enforcement and a better, safer and more prosperous community with impartial justice for all citizens.

The Superintendent subsequently indicated that he had released results of specific cases to groups requesting them in the past, but would not make investigations public as a general policy. He also questioned the timing of the HRC statement.

The HRC statement was the result of a marked rise in community tension as indicated by an increase in the number of police complaints received by this office (8 in one week), and the heated public controversy over a statement made by Judge Matthew Braniff regarding police brutality and the response of the Superintendent to that statement.

The whole issue had become muddled with charges and countercharges between the ACLU, the Times-Picayune and the Police Department. HRC issued its statement in an effort to bring some clarity to the whole issue of the police and the community. The Committee's statement was likewise misinterpreted as an attack on the police, when in actuality, it was an attempt to suggest the best course of action to ease community tensions.

Perhaps the best statement on the issue was contained in the States-Item Editorial of February 5 entitled, "Grievance Procedure":

> This newspaper believes a need exists for a better method of handling complaints against police officers, one that would have the confidence of private citizens and police officers alike. Several recent incidents have revealed the presence of increased tension between certain segments of the community and the Police Department.
> One way to reduce the probability of such situations occurring would be the establishment of an administrative procedure for the investigation of compliants against police officers, with the results of such investigations being made public at the appropriate time.
>
> We are not recommending the creation of a civilian review board. Nor are we suggesting that the Police Department, or any other agency release the details of any investigation before that investigation has run its full course through the proper channels, whether it be the Civil Service Commission, the courts, or both.
>
> Premature disclosure of such information in many instances obviously would prejudice a police officer's chances of receiving a fair hearing or trial. However, there should be some provision for making the details of such an investigation public after the requirements of due process of law have been satisfied.
>
> The benefits of such a procedure are many, in our opinion.
>
> To begin with, public disclosure would expose those policemen who are not doing a good job. It would also provide the incentive to do a better job. At the same time, it would protect those policemen who are doing a good job by eliminating the tendency to blame the whole police force for the poor conduct of a few.
> Moreover, it would expose those allegations of police misconduct which are not founded in fact, thereby publicly exonerating any officer who had been the victim of false accusation. At the same time, it would publicize those grievances which have their basis in merit. This would assure that injustices committed by police officers would not go unnoticed by the public.

We believe this would have the effect, first, of keeping the Police Department on its toes, and second, and more importantly, of building up greater confidence in the department, thereby making its job less difficult.

There is, of course, no substitute for a well-trained, high-caliber police force. Our goal should be no less. And we must be willing to pay for it.

However, there will always be the need, in our opinion, for an adequate method of handling complaints against police officers, one that will build public confidence in the Police Department.

CITY COUNCIL APPROVES $50,000 INCREASE IN FOOD STAMP PROGRAM

The New Orleans City Council has approved a $50,000 increase in the funds appropriated to administer the Food Stamp Program. The money will be spent to open two new Food Stamp Distribution Centers and to hire more personnel. The added funds were the result of a substantial rise in the number of people who qualified to received the stamps.

As of February 1, the food stamp qualifications were liberalized in an effort to provide food stamps to a number of people who were not eligible under the old plan, but who desperately needed the dietary supplement. This resulted in a doubling, and in some cases, tripling, of the number of people being served by the existing centers. This was reflected in extremely long lines at all of the centers, but in particular, Central City and Desire.

To handle the increased load, TCA Director, Dan Vincent, says two new centers and more people will be needed. Originally, the TCA representatives asked for an additional $25,000 but, after a meeting with city officials on Monday, February 23, it was clear that more than the original request would be needed. At that meeting, a suggestion was made to try further actions to help alleviate the strain on neighborhood centers.

Jim Pezant, the city administrator for the Food Stamp Program, has written to State Welfare Commissioner Garland Bonin asking him to change the procedure for issuing checks so that the centers would not be deluged on the 1st and 15th of each month, when old age and ADC checks are mailed out in bulk. It was also indicated by neighborhood residents that many food stores and groceries raise their prices these days. In response to this, Pezant asked that checks be issued according to alphabetical listings throughout the month. Bonin has said he would not change the check issuing days. He also indicated that the Welfare Department was considering issuing all checks on one day. This would make the current crisis even worse.

The City Council has requested a meeting with Bonin in an effort to get him to change his position.

HRC SUPPORTS MINIMUM WELFARE STANDARDS

The Human Relations Committee has issued a statement in support of the Family Assistance Program currently being considered in the U.S. Congress. Under the Administration sponsored proposal, the federal government would provide a basic $1600 for a family of four who qualified for aid. Although the program has been questioned by numerous groups on some of the other provisions included, the HRC feels the endorsement of minimum standards is an absolute necessity in resolving the nationwide welfare crisis. In its February 16 statement, HRC said it > strongly supports the concept of federal minimum standards for welfare assistance.

> The basic problem -- the inability of the states to meet the growing welfare needs -- is due to a series of chaotic, ineffective and irrational welfare systems which overlap and often contradict each other.
>
> The Human Relations Committee feels that a minimum federal floor and assistance to the working poor are essential first steps toward correcting the many injustices in the present system. A proposal for minimum standards is currently being studied by a congressional committee. HRC urges the congressmen involved to be aware of the plight of indigent people in communities across the country and to report the proposal favorably.
>
> In particular, the Committee calls on representatives from Louisiana to consider the broad range of community support for minimum standards. HRC urges the Louisiana delegation to support this program and concurrent legislation for its implementation.
>
> The welfare crisis is one of America's most crucial problems. The Human Relations Committee calls on all interested citizens of this community to make their congressional representatives aware of their concern about the welfare crisis.

HRC ASKS MRBA TO PROVIDE RELOCATION

In light of the current controversy over the location of the proposed uptown Mississippi River bridge, the Human Relations Committee issued the following statement at the end of its February 16 meeting:

The Committee has approved a resolution calling on the Mississippi River Bridge Authority to make adequate provisions for relocation of anyone displaced by the proposed uptown Mississippi River bridge and its approaches. By the MRBA's own admission, there will be a loss of two out of three housing units under the General Taylor Street bridge-tunnel plan.

Committee Chairman, Msgr. Arthur Screen, pointed out that the Committee did not have enough facts and technical resources to take a position on the location of the proposed facility. He said, however, due to the critical housing situation in New Orleans, it is absolutely necessary for the Bridge Authority to provide moving costs and interim accommodations no matter what location is finally adopted.

The Committee feels attention should be focused on this basic human need for the families affected by this or any other public building project. Such provisions are now required under Urban Renewal, Model Cities and Interstate Highway Programs; no less should be expected of the Bridge Authority.

TOWARD QUALITY EDUCATION

In the current furor over methods to achieve an end to the unconstitutional dual school system, the Human Relations Committee supports the concept of "one nation ... with liberty and justice for all". It calls on Governor McKeithen to implement his high ideal of declaring and enforcing a unitary system for each parish of the state. In this connection, as State Senator Jamar Adcock of Monroe indicated, we would not be facing this crisis today if Louisiana had decided to obey the law of the land ten years ago.

De facto segregation, northern style, is no excuse for creating a new freedom-of-choice de facto segregation, southern style. The courts know well that in many rural parishes, black families who exercise their "freedom of choice" are subjected to physical, economic and social intimidation which prevents the exercise of real freedom. While the theory of freedom of choice is quite valid, the practice of it in reality has simply meant keeping black students away from the educational advantages denied them by a dual school system. Thus, there is no real comparison between freedom of choice as it may be practiced in New York and freedom of choice as it has been practiced in Louisiana -- except that each promotes a different type of de facto segregation.

The Human Relations Committee of the City of New Orleans calls on the Governor to avoid flamboyant rhetoric and address himself to the problem of implementing the federal law with the added resources necessary to achieve quality public education. With the future of our children's education at stake, a high statesmanship is called for. If what is really being sought is avoidance and not compliance, it will only serve to inflame feelings and to make more difficult the task of many local school boards. Encouraging the development of private schools for the purpose of circumventing desegregation orders is against the state's welfare. It must be recognized that a public educational system with equal opportunity for all is the only answer.

* HIGHLIGHTS ****

NEW LOOK AT CHARITY Charity Hospital needs and objectives in the spring session of the Louisiana State Legislature formed the bases for a very useful discussion between representatives of HRC and the new, dynamic director of Charity Hospital, Dr. Charles Mary. HRC Health and Welfare Sub-committee chairman, Miss Jutta Mandel, and the HRC directors requested participation in new channels of communication being established by Dr. Mary to assure better citizen involvement in Charity Hospital. The Committee representatives learned that the following actions are necessary to enable Charity to serve the people of New Orleans:

1) Changes in Act 20 of the legislature so that Charity may keep all of the funds received under this act and not have to turn them in to the state.
2) Because Louisiana does not fully participate in the federal medicaid program, the state loses up to $100 million in federal medicaid dollars every year. Full participation in more medicaid is vital to Charity's effectiveness. With full medicaid, Charity could spend up to $60 million to serve citizens rather than the present $30-$40 million. Medicaid participation fully implemented would also mean additional funds to reimburse the medical schools for supervision of interns.
3) Money collected from the operation of the Charity Hospital accident room is presently funneled into the research and training fund of the State Department of Hospitals to be spent all over the state, when those funds are urgently needed for Charity itself. Charity Hospital should be allowed to keep those funds which it generates.

The Health and Welfare Sub-committee will be in touch with Dr. Mary as the legislative program is developed.

CHANNEL 8 REQUEST Representatives of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, on strike from WYES, Channel 8, appeared before the February 16 meeting of the Human Relations Committee requesting mediation assistance in their dispute with the station manager. Through questioning by Committee members, it was learned that the union had not yet appeared before the Board of Channel 8. The Committee therefore voted not to offer direct mediation assistance but to communicate with the Board of Channel 8 requesting that they hear the representatives of the union.

The union representatives agreed that it was desirable to have a chance to communicate with the Board before involving an outside agency.

It is discouraging that these problems at Channel 8 have crippled much of the local programming done there. It is even more discouraging that two outstanding community-oriented program staff directors, Miss Ruth Young and Mr. William Manschott, have found it necessary to resign. Their work on neighborhood and community problems has earned respect from all who worked with them. Channel 8 cannot afford such losses.

Community support requires personnel who enjoy the confidence of all segments of the community, and community support is what Channel 8 needs most now in its time of financial and personnel problems.

WANT TO BE A MEMBER OF HRC? Twelve of the Human Relations Committee members are chosen by elections at the neighborhood level. The city is divided into six districts, with one black and one white winner selected in each.

If you want a chance to represent your neighborhood's viewpoint on a citizen committee which has direct communication with the Mayor and City Council and which has representation from all major business, labor, religious, civil rights, civic and university groups, then YOU should run.

Think about it now. Filing time and qualifications will be announced in the April edition of PROGRESS.

Thank you for the issues of "Progress". It is very informative. The information contained in this publication is not always reported. METRO-LINK OPENS DESIGN CLINIC

A new community service agency, "Metro-Link", has been established here to help local citizens develop architectural and urban planning solutions to the city's problems. It will function as a non-profit design "clinic", specializing in work with other non-profit or low-income groups that would otherwise be unable to afford professional design and planning services.

To obtain assistance from Metro-Link, a community group should:

1) Submit a written request for assistance, outlining the nature of the problem, explaining what work has been completed on the project already and what is still required.
2) A selection committee will review the proposal and, if accepted, will assign Metro-Link staff members and/or volunteers to work with the group.
3) Metro-Link will work with the group to produce preliminary plans, drawings, sketches, slides, models, reports and other material. If the project is small (like a park or a teen center), Metro-Link will finish the project. If it is large (such as multi-unit project of federally-financed houses), Metro-Link will eventually release its client-approved preliminary drawings to an outside developer of the clients' choice.

BEAUTIFUL BLOCKS CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED

The Human Relations Committee and the New Orleans States-Item are sponsoring a city-wide beautification pilot program. The purposes of the program are to recognize those neighborhood groups who have started beautification projects, and to encourage those who have not to participate.

Each week, beginning June 15, a different group of blocks, organized to participate by a neighborhood committee, will begin a four-week beautification effort. This process will continue for 20 weeks, thus allowing 20 different groups of blocks to be recognized in this project.

The States-Item will take pictures at the beginning and at the end of the four-week period for each group of blocks. Those groups making significant improvements will receive a Beautiful Blocks Award to display in the neighborhood and a letter of commendation from the Mayor.

In addition, these blocks will be eligible to compete for the Beautiful Blocks of the Year 1970 Award, a special cash grant for further neighborhood improvement and other items contributed by interested merchants and civic leaders. This award will be presented by Mayor Landrieu, the chairman of the Human Relations Committee, and the editor of the States-Item at a special reception. One group of blocks among all participants will be chosen for this top award at the end of 1970. The key factor will be the amount and quality of change in the four weeks from "before" to "after", and the maintenance and extension of improvements made for the remainder of the year.

Judges have been selected from the ranks of civic leaders and urban design specialists. Among the initial group of judges are the following:

Arthur J. Chapital, past urban program director and present volunteer worker with the NAACP - New Orleans branch.
Christopher Friedrichs, landscape architect
John W. Lawrence, Dean of the School of Architecture, Tulane
William Rushton, architecture and urban design critic for the Vieux Carre Courier.
George Wilson, executive secretary, New Orleans Federation of Churches.

Groups interested in participating in the Beautiful Blocks campaign can come into the HRC office, Room BE11 in City Hall, to file their application. For more information, please call 529-4311, Extension 475. HRC coordinators for this project are Miss Verna Oubre and Mr. Bernard King.

THE BROADMOOR IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION
A Description of its History, Goals, and Plans

August 1970

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE ASSOCIATION

The Broadmoor section of New Orleans has never had official boundaries, but it is widely regarded as being that area through which run such major thoroughfares as Napoleon Avenue, Fontainbleau Drive, South Broad and Washington Avenue. It has been a well-established residential area with primarily frame houses, both single and two story with a number of the typical New Orleans "doubles" and raised cottages, most of which were built during the late 1920's and 1930's. Along some streets, notably Napoleon Avenue, Jefferson Avenue and Octavia Street, are brick homes of considerable value. The area has been regarded as a stable section for middle and some upper-middle class families. During the 1940's and early 1950's, the Wilson Elementary School located in the section was considered one of the city's better public schools. In addition to easy access to the downtown business district, the section was served by a small business area on the boundary of the section. This business district contained a public library, movie theatre, a large automobile dealer, and a wide variety of small shops and markets, all unpretentious but neat.

This description might be said to adequately picture the Broadmoor section until the advent of the 1960's. Until that time, the section was predominantly white, but black citizens began a slow move into some of the smaller double houses located in the area between Toledano and Napoleon Avenue. As the population density grew in the Central City area of New Orleans and as large public housing projects were built in the 1950's adjacent to the Broadmoor section, the racial composition of the Wilson School changed so that by 1970 it is almost entirely a black school. At the same time the area's business district began to look less attractive. The movie theatre closed and remained vacant for years; many shops have made few physical improvements in appearance. The slow signs of decay began to become visible despite the wide tree-lined avenues which run through the section.

Toward the end of 1969, some residents of the section and parishioners of St. Matthias Roman Catholic Church which is located in the area, began to express some concern about the sudden rush to sell homes on one of the section's finer streets, Louisiana Avenue Parkway. Despite the movement of black citizens into smaller homes in the immediate vicinity of the Parkway, it had remained an attractive, tree-lined street of well-kept single and two story homes for upper-middle class white families. At about the same time residents were openly expressing concern for the sudden change in the Parkway, Sister Mary Jordan of the St. Matthias Parish had organized a social action committee which had as its purpose a fostering of improved race relations within the Parish congregation and the study of housing problems as it effected black citizens. Sister Jordan undertook some research programs aimed at gathering data on housing and racial changes in the Parish. The members of the social action committee were eager to help preserve the area but at the same time they were also eager and willing to work with black citizens. As the suspicion and evidence grew that standard block-busting practices were being used along Louisiana Avenue Parkway, members of the committee were determined to try to thwart the efforts of those who would destroy an established neighborhood at the expense of both white and black citizens. The bi-racial committee was interested in stabilizing the area. This was understood to mean preventing the wholesale movement of white citizens out and an influx of black families. What the committee desired was a section of the city open to all races; one where real estate firms obeyed the Fair Housing Laws and sold to both blacks and whites at legitimate prices.

During the early months of 1970 the social action committee had several immediate decisions to make. It could try to talk to residents along Louisiana Avenue Parkway in an effort to convince them not to hastily sell out of the fear of black neighbors or of property value loss. But after consideration and discussion with a number of community leaders, the group decided that the problems were much deeper and more complex than merely block-busting along one street and that any precipitous action by the committee might have the effect not of stemming an outward movement of whites but of actually increasing such a movement. At this point the committee began to consider the basic problems of the area and also to consider how to best organize efforts to deal with them.

In order to avoid becoming or appearing a strictly denominational effort, the group decided to become secular and to invite clergy and members of other denominations located in the section into membership. A new name, the Broadmoor Improvement Association, was adopted and a provisional constitution was adopted pending application for state charter as a non-profit corporation. Weekly meetings were held at which time the group heard from such community leaders as the executive director of the city's Human Relations Committee, the director of the city's Housing Improvement Agency, and several priests with considerable experience both in community organization and housing needs. The group adopted the formal boundaries of Broadmoor to be the area between South Claiborne Avenue, Washington Avenue and Toledano, and Octavia Street and South Jefferson Davis Parkway. This pie-shaped area, located practically in the geographic heart of the city corresponds exactly with the geographic boundaries of the St. Matthias Parish and also closely coincides with census tracts 103, 112, and 123.

THE PROBLEM IN BROADMOOR

The most explicit statement of the immediate problem appears in a paper entitled "Housing Problem in St. Matthias Parish" written by Sister Mary Jordan. Excerpts of that paper are quoted below.

"In 1960, St. Matthias Parish contained 3277 housing units with a population of 9481. At this time, 25 units in tract 103 were dilapidated, 4 units in tract 112 were dilapidated, and 9 units in tract 123 were dilapidated. 1455 of the 3277 units were owner-occupied; in other words, 44% of the units were owner-occupied. This compared favorably with the situation in the city as a whole; of the 202,643 housing units in the city, 71,283 or 37.6% were owner-occupied.

"Now nine years later there are 96 dilapidated units in tract 103; 8 in tract in tract 112; 9 in tract 123. Although tract 123 has remained substantially the same, dilapidated units in tract 112 have doubled. Worse still, dilapidated units in tract 103 have almost quadrupled. The rapid deterioration which has occurred in a concentrated segment of tract 103 during the past nine years is extremely significant: 23 of these units are located on Delachaise St., 18 on the south side of Toledano, 14 on General Taylor St., 12 on the 3500 block of S. Tonti St., 6 in the 3500 block of S. Miro St. The other units are scattered on S. Galvez, S. Prieur St., S. Claiborne Ave., General Pershing, Milan, and Derbigny streets.

"Ten years ago there were relatively few Blacks in census tract 103. Now the area is about half Black. The substandard housing of the area, which has practically quadrupled during the past ten years, is non-white occupied with the exception of a few units which are inhabited by elderly white women.

"This observation is not meant as an implication that the influx of Blacks has caused the deterioration. The fact is that the two changes have occurred simultaneously. There are many causes for the deterioration of this area. Many of the units were allowed to deteriorate when the White owners saw that the area was going Black. Some of the units have deteriorated because of overcrowding. Units have been subdivided into smaller units as has 3526 S. Tonti St. where four households now dwell. Other examples of subdividing can be found at 3508 1/4 S. Tonti, 3523 1/2 S. Miro, 3519 1/2 General Taylor, 3021 1/2 General Taylor, 3032 1/2 Toledano, 3034 1/2 Toledano and 3412 1/2 Toledano.

"The failure to make needed repairs and the subdividing of one unit into two or more units appear to be the chief causes of deterioration in census tract 103. Most of the units are rented, frequently from Black landlords. The substandard units are rented by Blacks almost always. The tenants know they are not getting their money's worth, but they have no place to move to. Many areas are closed to them because of the failure to enforce the open occupancy law. In addition, the Broadmoor area has the lowest vacancy rate in all the sections in the city, only 5% vacancy. Rental property which the low income Blacks must seek is simply not available to them, so they are forced to take what they can get and pay what they must. In addition, moving is expensive.

"But another factor keeps Blacks in this area. Potentially, this section is a balanced community. It has the conveniences of good bus service, large food stores such as Winn Dixie, small corner groceries, cleaners, drug stores, restaurants, bar rooms, and a small shopping center. There are two schools for elementary grade education--Wilson Public School and St. Matthias Catholic School. The neighborhood is mixed and somewhat quieter than the real ghetto area from which many of these tenants have migrated.

"However, the mixed quality of St. Matthias Parish is now in jeopardy. Whites continue to move seeking a homogenous community, usually in the suburbs. These seekers of homogeneity are destroying the heterogeneity of the community they have. The great benefit of a balanced community is that people learn from each other by direct observation and contact something of the whole complex structure of society. Children grow up seeing men at work, having contact with the aged, knowing rich and poor, black and white. But as Whites continue their exodus, St. Matthias Parish is likely to become more Black. Census tract 103 is apt to become solidly Black. It is unlikely that the houses vacated by Whites will be bought by other Whites because the Black element is becoming very pronounced. As Laurenti points out, the resistance of Whites to buying or renting in racially mixed neighborhoods is considerably reduced when the non-White group is not numerous; however the resistance is usually quite strong when the non-white group is perceived to be the dominant group. This area seems to be changing rapidly to solid Black. This would be unfortunate for both racial groups.

"As long as Blacks continue to move into rented houses vacated by Whites, the property is likely to remain substandard. In New Orleans as a whole, 33% of the renter-occupied houses are substandard while only 10% of the owner-occupied units are substandard. Absentee landlords do little to improve the housing situation in an area, and if these landlords rent to Blacks they are likely to do even less since the Black tenant is under a special disadvantage. Laurenti attributes the white-held belief about substandard maintainance by non-whites to 'observation of overcrowded slum areas, where non-whites are predominantly tenants and where most landlords spend little, if anything, to maintain the appearance of property in which their only interest is the derivation of income.' Where people of any race live as tenants in overcrowded areas which are poorly maintained by absentee landlords, there is little incentive to take good care of their housing units. Apathy or rebellion may be at least part of the reason behind a broken screen or marked up wall. One does not get the impression that there is great motivation for taking pride in one's house under these circumstances. Yet, amazingly enough some of these ghetto dwellers do try to keep their housing units as neat and clean as possible. It is difficult to really care when something is not one's own.

"What then is the solution to the housing problem in St. Matthias Parish? Four measures would be of help in solving, or partially solving, the problem: first, enforcement of open occupancy throughout the entire New Orleans area; second, enforcement or prohibition of mass solicitation of realtors along streets which are just beginning to go Black; third, concentrated code enforcement under urban renewal; fourth, tax reform."

Members of the Broadmoor Improvement Association believe that the problems confronting our section are even more complex and difficult than those related exclusively to housing. Our section is not, despite the changes whcih have taken place during the past decade, a slum. To the casual observer driving along one of the major avenues of the area, there has been little negative change in the section. A number of upper-middle class families continue to reside in the section particularly in the area between Napoleon Avenue and Octavia Street. This is still considered by whites in New Orleans to be a pleasant, attractive and safe section of uptown New Orleans. Thus, Broadmoor cannot qualify for consideration as an urban renewal target area. Nor is there an activated sense of community among most of the residents as there is, for example, in the Central City or Lower Ninth Ward areas. The black residents of Broadmoor are relatively better off than blacks in the Central City ghetto, and the majority of white citizens, many of whom are elderly, either lack the energy or do not sense any immediate threat except for those living along a few streets such as Louisiana Avenue Parkway.

Essentially then, the problem is how to motivate the residents to take steps to keep the Broadmoor area from becoming seriously blighted. Like older residential neighborhoods in most American cities, we must now begin to compete with the suburbs for the loyalty of residents. Why would anyone want to live in Broadmoor? Aside from the convenience to downtown, several hospitals and universities, what else is there that can compete with new homes at lower cost, large lawns, paved streets, underground wiring, air-conditioned shopping centers, and the "safe" neighbors of the newer areas? Is it possible for an area such as Broadmoor to retain its advantages in the face of such competition? If the answer is no, then ultimately all of uptown New Orleans with but few exceptions will eventually become exclusively black. The white middle class will hurry for the suburbs and with them will go what remains of the city's tax base and of the American dream of the "melting pot."

We believe that what is happening in Broadmoor is crucial for the very survival of the city itself. If Broadmoor, located as it is in the geographic heart of the city and hemmed in by Central City and Carrollton, can maintain itself as a viable integrated but stable neighborhood, remaining attractive to younger middle and upper-middle class whites and blacks, containing good schools, good recreational facilities, paved and landscaped streets, and neat shopping areas, then New Orleans will have been given some hope of saving itself from the fate already realized in most other metropolitan areas--a black inner core surrounded by white bedroom communities.

SOME POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS

The Broadmoor Improvement Association believes that efforts to solve the section's immediate and long-term problems must be directed in two areas and must involve not only our own endeavors but also those of governmental agencies.

First, we must deal with the physical realities. Of immediate importance is putting a stop to the apparent block-busting which is taking place along Louisiana Avenue Parkway. Unless this is done, whites will continue to leave and the blacks that move in will no longer have the available capital to maintain their homes. We also believe that immediate steps must be taken to thoroughly enforce existing zoning ordinances. Unless this is done, some residents will continue to subdivide their homes into smaller rental units and will thus contribute to the deterioration of the entire area. We further believe that our area must offer recreational facilities for both young and old, and we believe that the commercial enterprises operating in or near the area must make major improvements in their appearance. Finally, we believe that our area should be designated for participation under the Certified Area Program of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. With participation in this program we will be able to provide low cost home improvement loans to residents to maintain their property, and the city will be able to have all streets in Broadmoor fully paved and drained. If we can achieve all of these goals, then physically, at least, Broadmoor will be attractive.

Aside from physical improvements, we must undertake efforts to deal with the human relations problems. We must, for example, mount an effective educational campaign designed to educate white citizens that property values do not have to drop when blacks move into a neighborhood. At the same time, we must create projects on which blacks and whites can work together for the common betterment of their neighborhood and by so doing convince both racial groups to trust and respect one another. To do this we would hope to initiate more contacts between the two elementary schools in Broadmoor, and perhaps to start a summer Headstart program. We must create a sense of "community" throughout the section by which all residents feel a sense of responsibility for the well-being of the section.

We must, in other words, give all residents, blacks and whites, some real reasons for remaining in or moving into Broadmoor. If residents have a sense of pride and of personal commitment, and if they no longer fear either each other or imagined economic consequences of mixed neighborhoods, then they will not quickly move to the suburbs. Besides retaining its present population, Broadmoor will attract new residents who are looking for a section which has no race problems because there is no fear; which has no blight because there is pride. These qualities, combined with proximity to downtown, hospitals and universities, could make Broadmoor a strong, stable, pivotal section for New Orleans.

CAN THE BROADMOOR IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION SUCCEED?

Members of the Broadmoor Improvement Association, while thoroughly aware of the difficulties in solving the area's problems, believe that it can provide viable solutions. We believe this for several reasons. First, we have been engaged for over half a year in an on-going effort to educate ourselves both as to what the nature of the problems are, how other cities have dealt with them, and what private and governmental agencies can do. Second, we represent residents of the area itself and are therefore not a group of non-resident "do-gooders" who move into an area with solutions which have little relationship to the real problems of this particular area. Third, we have the support of a number of the religious leaders of several denominations represented in the section. Fourth, because our membership has been bi-racial from the inception of the group. And fifth, because the new Mayor of New Orleans is himself a long-time resident of the section and ran on a platform to achieve racial justice and to begin the long job of coming to grips with decay in the city. We are confident, then, that he will be especially receptive to our efforts.

By August, 1970, as we undertake efforts to expand our membership and to file for state charter as a non-profit corporation, The Broadmoor Improvement Association looks forward to many years of hard but ultimately successful efforts.

WASHINGTON (NC) — Evidence is mounting that the national civil rights movement will turn its attention to a vast new frontier in the decade of the 70s: sprawling, job-rich suburbia, the nearly all-white rings around increasingly black, job-poor central cities.

The first stage of the effort already is under way — through court tests in several states against suburban zoning practices, and through hearings before federal committees.

In late August alone, two important hearings have focused on the rapid growth of new job opportunities in suburban areas, and the inability of the urban poor, particularly minorities, to compete for those jobs because of residential exclusion from the suburbs.

After three days of testimony on job and housing patterns in Baltimore and its surrounding county, Father Theodore M. Hesburgh, C.S.C., chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, complained that the federal government has failed miserably —"it isn't really serious," he said — in promoting access to suburban jobs and housing for blacks locked in the cities.

His commission found that, while roughly 66 percent of all new jobs created in the Baltimore metropolitan region in the past ten years were located in the suburbs, the percentage of non-whites living in the suburbs actually fell from six to three percent.

YET THE TYPES of jobs being created outside the city, the commission learned, were in the very fields — especially manufacturing and services — that the unemployed urban poor could best fill.

The jobs expanding in the city, on the other hand, were the type the poor could least hope to fill, primarily in real estate, finance and white-collar office positions.

Several days later, the leaders of the non-profit National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, one of the key activist rights groups in the field, told a U.S. Senate committee that the pattern of suburban job growth and minority exclusion is a severe nationwide phenomenon—and has worsened, rather than improved, in the past decade.

Robert L. Carter, president of the housing group, testified that the pattern casts its shadow over every significant area of human need. He said it makes a farce of any federal programs that attempt to create "equal opportunities," like integrated school systems, without "opening up" the suburbs.

Carter's executive co-director, Edward Rutledge, pointed to the San Francisco metropolitan region as a case similar to Baltimore's: in the past decade, 750,000 new jobs developed in the region, but low-income minority workers were excluded from competition for most of them because they live in remote black and Mexican-American urban ghettos.

RUTLEDGE already had drawn public attention to nearly identical situations in St. Louis — where city-based jobs decreased by 50,000 between 1952 and 1966 while suburban jobs rose by nearly 200,000 — and Philadelphia, which had a net decrease of 15,000 jobs in the period while its predominantly white suburbs gained 250,000.

Besides taking an avowed aim at the U.S. Supreme Court by suing three "model" suburban communities —Union City, Calif.; Lawton, Oklahoma; and Montclair, N. J. — over exclusionary zoning practices, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing produced a landmark 250-page interim report earlier this year that documented the dramatic loss of job and housing opportunities for minorities in the New York metropolitan area between 1950-1970.

It offered reasons why nearly 15 percent of New York city's population is now on welfare, and why 70 percent of the entire region's non-whites are packed into the city: the poor have moved to the city in increasing waves in search of work; whites and industries have fled to the suburbs and locked the doors, using discriminatory zoning statutes.

THE HOUSING group found that of 990,000 new jobs created in the New York region in the past ten years alone, 744,000, or 75 percent, were located in suburban areas with low minority populations.

And while jobs in the manufacturing field declined by 47,000, 138,000 new manufacturing jobs were created in the suburban ring with no appreciable increase in minority residential population. The picture was similar in the wholesaling, retailing and services fields: the low-income jobs had gone where low-income minorities could not.

Several thousand workers in the region, the committee observed, have had to become "reverse commuters," traveling, for example, from Harlem to the Ford assembly plant in Mahwah, across the river in northern New Jersey. But for most of the urban poor, the distances and costs involved and the lack of transportation were too great a disincentive against working in the suburbs.

UNDER A two-year grant from the Carnegie Foundation, the committee has probed deeply into job growth and real estate practices in hundreds of suburban communities in seven New York metropolitan counties, to determine how and why the towns have been able to avoid any role in relieving urban problems, even with federal government help.

The results of their final report, due next year, will be aimed straight at Washington — at Congress and such major agencies as the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Through the housing committee's activities and the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund, which is filing suit in Oyster Bay, Long Island, the federal government already has been served notice that, unless it begins to act, civil rights groups will have to find alternative ways to promote racial and social integration in the suburbs.

LANDRIEU URGES PRIDE FOR CITY

T-P 9/14/70

Says 56 Amendments Are Key to Progress

Mayor Moon Landrieu urged New Orleanians Sunday night to show their pride in the city by passing the 56 constitutional amendments that will go before voters in November.

Speaking at a dinner meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of Touro Synagogue, Landrieu stressed especially the amendment that would permit the city to set its own bonding capacity.

"During the next five years," said Landrieu, "the bonding capacity of New Orleans will be about $22 million. In the fourth and fifth years, the capacity will be $2 million.

"At the same time, other cities are floating bonds of $500 million a year. Is it any wonder, then, that they're making progress when we're not?"

CANNOT AFFORD

Landrieu said that without increased bonding capacity, the city could not afford Urban Renewal, recreation facilities, street improvements, public libraries, police protection and a host of other services and facilities.

At present, the state constitution prevents a city from borrowing money at a rate of interest exceeding 6 per cent. This, said Landrieu, makes it virtually impossible for cities to borrow money in these days of inflation.

Landrieu said he would shortly start a campaign called "Where Is Your Pride in New Orleans?"

NEGATIVE FORCE

He said the failure of the city to pay for better services and facilities could only be attributed to what he called "a great negative force, a lack of pride."

Landrieu said in the next few weeks he hopes to challenge the citizens of the city to pass the constitutional amendments that would enable the city to determine its own revenue and financial structure.

"If we're successful in arousing the city's pride, we're capable of passing these amendments," said Landrieu.

An Analysis of the 1970 New Orleans Mayoral Election

JAMES CHUBBUCK, EDWARD RENWICK, AND JOE WALKER *

On May 4, 1970, Moon Landrieu was inaugurated as mayor of New Orleans, climaxing the most significant election year in the city's modern political history. Landrieu's victory came after intense campaigns in two Democratic primaries and then a general election in which Republicans mounted the most serious challenge for the mayor's office in this century. A number of significant factors influenced the outcome.

For the first time, black voter registration reached a level where it became the decisive element. In addition, the voters were confronted with an unprecedented choice of issues and candidates. The city's newspapers, radio and television stations, and various civic groups interjected controversial issues into the campaign dialogue. The "city that care forgot" became the "city in crisis." The word "change" became the keynote of the campaign, with the news media repeatedly stressing the concept of change as being essential to the city's future development. After almost a year of relentless urging by the media and a star-studded field of mayoral candidates to accept change, the electorate dismantled its traditional political alliances and formed a new coalition that is likely to influence New Orleans politics throughout the 'seventies.

Twelve candidates filed for the Democratic primary election. Among them were six of the best known names in the city: former city councilman Jimmy Fitzmorris, considered the favorite by virtue of his narrow defeat four years earlier; Councilman-at-Large Moon Landrieu, who at 39 was the youngest man in the field; State Senator William Guste, representing the uptown university area, the only one of the six who had not previously run in a citywide election; Councilman-at-Large John Petre, a city councilman for the past eight years; Civil District Judge David Gertler, who had filed for the mayor's race in 1965 but withdrew; and School Board President Lloyd Rittiner, who had been reelected with a substantial majority in 1968. Of significance also was the fact that the incumbent mayor was not a candidate for the first time in three decades, thus removing City Hall from a direct involvement in the outcome.

A further element was added when the only black state legislator in Louisiana, Representative Ernest Morial, filed for one of the two councilman-at-large posts. He was endorsed for this position by Landrieu, Guste, and Gertler.

Of the six major candidates, Fitzmorris was considered the most conservative. He had the support of a large segment of the business community and many individuals in City Hall. Petre and Rittiner were somewhere near the middle, while Landrieu, Guste, and Gertler were viewed as more liberal. Landrieu had the backing of some of the most influential civic and business leaders in the community, while Gertler had sizable support from organized labor. The major black organizations endorsed either Landrieu, Guste, or Gertler, with Landrieu receiving the strongest support. All of the candidates concentrated their campaigns on the same basic issues being stressed by the news media: taxation and city services, economic development, crime and police, and race relations. The strong-issue orientation of the campaign gave the voters a clearer choice between the various candidates' approaches to the problems of governing the city than would otherwise have been possible.

As expected, Fitzmorris led the field in the first Democratic primary, receiving some 34 percent of the votes cast. Landrieu followed with 19 percent, and Guste was close behind with 17 percent. Petre received 13 percent and Gertler, 11 percent. Rittiner was far back in sixth place. About 80 percent of the registered voters cast ballots in the first primary.

Blacks divided their votes mainly among three candidates, with Landrieu getting 39 percent; Guste, about 30 percent; and Gertler, 22 percent. The Landrieu and Guste white-voter support was very similar: upper middle- and upper-SES (Socio-Economic Status) precincts in the uptown section, the most affluent white residential area of New Orleans.[1] The Fitzmorris vote was almost entirely white and was spread throughout the city. His strongest support, though, came from middle- to lower-SES white precincts. Because of his wide lead, and the fact that he had the backing of most of the old-line white political organizations in the city, Fitzmorris was generally expected to win the runoff primary.

In the councilman-at-large race, Representative Morial entered the runoff primary against former councilman Joseph DiRosa. Fitzmorris endorsed DiRosa during the second primary campaign, while Morial was supported by Landrieu. Morial's white backing was very similar to that of Landrieu.[2]

During the month between primaries, Petre endorsed Fitzmorris, while Guste remained neutral. The issues remained basically the same, and no new developments occurred. A television debate between Landrieu and Fitzmorris took place during the last week of the campaign, but it did not appear to have any measurable impact on the eventual outcome.

The second Democratic primary on December 13, 1969, was a landmark election in New Orleans politics, with Landrieu winning a decisive upset victory over Fitzmorris. The outcome represented a major break in the pattern of recent city elections and finally solidified a socio-economic-racial model that some mayoral candidates had been trying to construct since the halcyon days of the late Chep Morrison, who served as mayor from 1946 to 1961. Landrieu, in effect, put together a coalition of voters that will have major significance for the future of New Orleans politics.

Landrieu's majority was composed essentially of upper middle- and upper-SES whites combined with extensive support in the black community. In geographic terms, the coalition consisted principally of the affluent white areas along St. Charles Avenue and surrounding Tulane and Loyola universities, the upper middle white suburban section of Algiers across the Mississippi River, and the black precincts throughout the city.

From a racial standpoint, Landrieu received approximately 40 percent of the white vote and slightly over 90 percent of the black vote. The election dramatically illustrates the critical influence the black vote now has on New Orleans politics. Negroes constituted slightly over 30 percent of the registered voters in the December primary, and the magnitude of the black support for Landrieu gave him a solid base on which to build his majority. Approximately 76 percent of all registered voters went to the polls. The black-voter participation was slightly higher than that of the whites, with 77 percent of those registered voting.

Landrieu lost only the mid-city area. This consists largely of lower- and middle-SES white voters whose assessor, one of the most potent political figures in New Orleans for many years, was a Fitzmorris supporter.

of each area, shown in Table 2, the role of the black vote is evident.

The downtown area gave Landrieu 41 percent of his total vote; followed by uptown, 27 percent; central city, 13 percent; mid-city, 12 percent; and Algiers, the remaining 7 percent. As shown in Table 1, the downtown area contains 42 percent of the total registered vote of the city.

The most significant development in the pattern of black voting behavior was its shift away from Fitzmorris. Since he had received over 65 percent of the black vote in the 1965 contest with Mayor Victor Schiro, Fitzmorris expected to retain a sufficient portion of this support to ensure victory in 1969. He actively sought the black vote in 1965. Schiro, who won with a strong segregationist appeal in 1961, made a behind-the-scenes appeal for Negro support in the 1965 race. This effort gained for him over 30 percent of the black vote, enough for reelection. In the race against Landrieu, Fitzmorris adopted the Schiro strategy and assiduously avoided an overt appeal for black votes.

Given opportunities on several television programs to declare specifically whether or not he would appoint a Negro to head a city department, Fitzmorris refused to do so.[3] Also, he did not endorse the black candidate, Representative Morial, for a seat on the city council. Landrieu pursued the opposite strategy, actively seeking black support, hoping that he would not lose so many white votes in the process as to deny him the election.

In southern politics, blacks have traditionally supported white candidates who did not overtly ask for their vote because they accepted the thesis that whites would vote only for candidates who did not openly seek the black vote. The December primary effectively destroyed that thesis in New Orleans politics. The blacks demanded public appeals for their vote—such as all white groups traditionally have done—and received them from every major first primary candidate except Fitzmorris. Landrieu, who polled less than 15 percent of the white vote in the first primary, was not risking his chances for election by his pursuit of Negro votes, for without significant black support in the runoff his candidacy was obviously doomed. Fitzmorris, however, took the traditional position. In the race against Schiro he pursued the black vote and lost; he reversed his strategy in this election and again lost. In fact, he received 2,000 fewer votes against Landrieu than he had received against Schiro.

Landrieu attained his greatest white support in those precincts with middle and high income and highly educated voters. Conversely, his least white support came from those voters with the lowest income and educational levels. Table 3 presents data concerning the type of support received by support in terms of two characteristics: wealth and education. Landrieu's vote is divided into high, medium, and low levels of support. Although Fitzmorris did well among all types of white voters, his strongest support came from the low-SES white areas. Landrieu, on the other hand, did not carry a single low-SES white precinct in the second Democratic primary. The type of white support Landrieu received is even more apparent when the twenty-five highest SES precincts are analyzed. Landrieu received a majority in nineteen of these precincts. In addition, the mean educational level in these precincts is 13.4 years of school, compared to 12.7 years in the six precincts Fitzmorris carried.

Landrieu's white-precinct support fluctuated from a low of 17.1 percent to 69.1 percent. In most of the middle- to upper middle-SES areas, he consistently scored between 35 percent and 40 percent of the vote. In only two low-SES white areas, the Irish Channel and the River precincts uptown, was he able to obtain over 35 percent of the vote.

The accompanying map presents in visual terms the new coalition that gave Landrieu his victory. Shown are all of the precincts that Landrieu carried in polling 54 percent of the second primary vote. Four categories are used: high-SES white, middle-SES white, racially mixed, and black. The black precincts are those in which a majority of the registered voters are black, while the white category is 90 percent or more white registrants. The racially mixed precincts are those containing between 10 and 50 percent black voters. The mixed precincts vary from middle to low wealth, depending primarily upon the extent of the black component. Most of the mixed precincts are in the uptown area. The socio-economic-racial pattern of Landrieu's support clearly emerges in geographic terms: a combination of upper- and middle-SES white areas in uptown New Orleans and Algiers and the predominantly black precincts throughout the city.

Although Morial lost the councilmanic race to DiRosa by the narrow margin of 49 percent to 51 percent, he received substantial white support from many of the same precincts that gave Landrieu his vote.[4] In fact, the overall Landrieu and Morial vote came from virtually the same types of voters.[5] There were two major exceptions in the pattern that cost Morial the election. The upper middle- and upper-SES white precincts in Algiers voted for Landrieu and then DiRosa, and Landrieu received a greater share of middle- and lower-SES white votes than Morial.

The pattern of Landrieu's vote resembles that of Adrian Duplantier against Schiro in the 1961 mayoral election, while Fitzmorris' vote resembles that of Schiro.[6] Thus in a sense, while Fitzmorris was emulating Schiro's winning strategy in the 1965 election, Landrieu was pursuing Duplantier's 1961 losing strategy against Schiro. Duplantier was soundly defeated by Schiro, 43 to 57 percent.

Why, then, the difference in voting behavior? There were some major differences between the campaigns of 1961 and 1969. Schiro had the advantage of being the incumbent as well as being the successor of, and closely identified with, Chep Morrison, whose uptown white support was substantial. Also, the black-bloc-vote issue was still an effective campaign tactic in 1961 and Schiro used it to maximum advantage. There is considerable doubt that this tactic could have been effectively employed in 1969, but in any case Fitzmorris chose not to do so. In addition, Landrieu was both a more experienced and better known politician than Duplantier who, when he ran, had only recently entered politics. A final difference was that a majority of Orleanians apparently were ready for a major political and governmental change in 1969.

Beyond these differences, however, were three major factors that will likely continue to influence New Orleans politics. First, black voter registration increased by 13 percent during the eight-year period between the two campaigns, from 36,000 to 66,000—almost double in absolute terms. Second, although numerous black political organizations have long existed in the city, only in the last few years have really effective organizations emerged, those whose endorsements carry great weight in the precincts where they operate. This is particularly true of SOUL (Southern Organization for Unified Leadership) in the Ninth Ward and COUP (Community Organization for Urban Politics) in the Seventh Ward. The third factor was that Landrieu drew a higher proportion of the upper- and middle-SES white support than Duplantier and overall polled a greater share of the white vote citywide, a clear indication that far more whites today are willing to base their electoral decision on issues other than race.

The same basic voting pattern held firm for Landrieu during the general election, when he faced Republican candidate Ben C. Toledano, an attorney who at various times has been affiliated with the Democratic and States Rights parties as well as the Republican Party. A Republican candidate had occasionally contested the Democratic nominee in a nominal manner during the 20th century, and many Orleanians felt at the outset that such a race would again be the case. Landrieu initially ignored the Republican challenge, and interest waned during the Carnival season, which occurred in the middle of the campaign. However, Toledano obtained the support of many of the Fitzmorris leaders and began to wage an intense, well-organized, and well-financed campaign, forcing Landrieu to actively seek the office once again. Toledano used the black-bloc-vote tactic at the outset of his challenge, but near the end of the campaign shifted to the theme that had dominated the rhetoric of the media and the candidates for over a year: the need for "change" in the governmental and political process of the city. Landrieu utilized the same basic appeals he had stressed during both Democratic primaries.

The race concluded with the highest turnout for a municipal general election in New Orleans' modern history; 70 percent of the registered voters cast their ballots. The black participation was even higher than it had been in the second Democratic primary, with almost 80 percent of the registered blacks going to the polls. This increased the relative weight of the black vote, which went almost entirely to Landrieu. The Landrieu vote pattern closely resembled the coalition he had put together in the second Democratic primary,[7] and he increased his margin of victory to 59 percent. Toledano's 41 percent, however, was the best showing by any Republican mayoral candidate in a century.

Although Landrieu increased his black support to 98 percent, his white support remained about 40 percent. Two major shifts in the behavior of the white vote occurred between the second primary and the general election. One, a number of the upper- and upper middle-SES white precincts in the uptown university area and Algiers switched from Landrieu to Toledano. Most of these precincts are areas which have consistently voted for national Republican candidates in recent years. Included in this switch were many of the twenty-five highest SES white precincts in the city. Landrieu carried nineteen of these areas in the second primary and only five in the general election. The other white vote change was in the mid-city area, where many middle- to low-SES precincts that Fitzmorris carried went to Landrieu in the general election. This vote was due in great measure to the support of the assessor, who had endorsed Fitzmorris in the second primary. Otherwise, the Toledano vote pattern was very similar to that of Fitzmorris, with the greatest support coming from the middle- to lower-SES white precincts in the city.

The most significant aspect of the general election pattern from the Republican point of view is that the Toledano white vote resembled the Wallace vote more than the Nixon vote in the 1968 presidential election in New Orleans.[8] Humphrey won a plurality in that election, with 40 percent; Wallace was second, with 33 percent; and Nixon finished last, with 27 percent. In the second Democratic primary, Landrieu received support from Nixon voters,[9] and although he lost a number of Nixon white precincts to Toledano in the general election, the margin of difference was not very great. It thus appears that if the Republican Party hopes to achieve electoral victory in New Orleans city elections it must appeal to the more moderate instincts of the upper- and upper middle-SES white voters in New Orleans as well as to black voters.

What do the results of the election portend for the future? The most significant indication is that New Orleans may be moving to a more progressive type of politics. A number of factors are likely to further this process during the 'seventies.

Black voter registration has increased year by year, and a large reservoir of unregistered black voters remains untapped. The 1970 Census is expected to show that black residents constitute between 40 and 45 percent of the city's total population. With each election, more and more of these potential voters will join the registration rolls, further increasing the importance of the black vote. No longer will a serious candidate for any citywide office be able to ignore this large and growing Negro influence.

As a result, New Orleans elections will become more competitive in the future; the simple black-antiblack dichotomy of the past will no longer be effective. This election saw Landrieu seek black votes openly and directly, while retaining sizable white support. The behavior of black voters in the first primary dramatically illustrated what is likely to happen in future elections: four of the major candidates for mayor sought black votes, while none received a majority of the black vote. Only in the second primary, when one candidate ignored them, did the blacks marshal their forces totally in one direction. Black bloc voting is thus not so much a black phenomenon as a white one. It has been demonstrated that if a white candidate will give the black voter reason to support him, he will. Race-baiting as an effective campaign tactic is thus dying in New Orleans, as is the traditional southern white political strategy of talking to the blacks in an entirely different manner than to the whites. The Negro voter in New Orleans will no longer sit in the back of the political bus.

Another factor that will affect the politics of the 'seventies is the indication that whites of upper and upper middle socio-economic status are not concerned with racial appeals as much as they are with the economic development of the city. These groups are apparently willing to ally with the blacks behind the candidate who appears to offer the best chance for change.

In the final analysis, the key to the successful continuation of the new voter coalition in New Orleans is the white partner in the alliance. The fact that large numbers of whites voted for a man who openly supported the black man's drive for equality is significant in an era when racial polarization and turmoil have become the pattern in most major American cities.

[8] The coefficient of correlation between Toledano and Wallace is .427, while between Toledano and Nixon it is .072.

Druid Hills Committee Supports Fair Housing

Where are some grass-roots efforts in white communities to implement fair housing? One such effort is in Druid Hills, a suburb of Atlanta identified as "one of the ten most desirable residential areas in the nation."

The Druid Hills Fair Housing Committee, formed in July, 1967, has as its purpose "to support and encourage freedom of residence in the community and thereby avert misunderstandings and pressure tactics. It further seeks to develop a neighborhood in which different backgrounds, talents and viewpoints are encouraged as enriching elements for the community and its residents."

Is it true that property values decline in an integrated community? Research has shown that in areas with various percentages of Negro and white residents, home values match or exceed those in similar all-white areas far oftener than they decrease. In the short run, block-busting and panic may depress sales prices of homes, but in the long run home costs are proportionate to such economic factors as current construction costs and interest rates for mortgage credit; they are not so influenced by social factors. (See Luigi Laurenti's book Property Values and Race, University of California Press, or William M. Ladd's article in The American Economic Review, "The Effects of Integration on Property Values," Vol. 52 (Sept. '62) pp. 801-8.)

Schools with children from various backgrounds offer "a better preparation for living in a world of diverse ideas and people. A minority group family financially capable of affording a house in Druid Hills generally has children with aspirations for participation in a creative and imaginative educational program..."

But what about realtors? Druid Hills is in DeKalb County, which has 69 members of the DeKalb Board of Realtors who belong to NARED. A 1965 NARED Statement of Policy states:

> Realtors...have no right or responsibility to determine the racial, creedal, or ethnic composition of any area...No realtor should assume to determine the suitability or eligibility on racial, creedal, or ethnic grounds of any prospective mortgager, tenant or purchaser, and the realtor should invariably submit all written offers made by any prospect in connection with the transaction at hand."

("A Program for Realtors-Equal Opportunity in Housing" published by NARED)

Atlanta is faced with critical housing problems. Decent housing for Negroes has not kept pace with needs and demands. Atlanta's Negro citizens are seeking good housing in good neighborhoods. At least three large institutions in Druid Hills--Emory University, Communicable Disease Center and the VA Hospital--are recruiting professionals from minority groups. The difficulty of securing suitable housing is a major barrier to employing these qualified professionals. As an example of its intent, Emory University will list rooms, apartments and houses only when the landlord has agreed to rent, sell or lease on an open occupancy basis.

In Druid Hills, the Druid Hills Fair Housing Committee is available to assist homeowners and apartment managers in renting or selling on an open occupancy basis, and available to assist minority group families find adequate housing of their choice in the community.

In Metropolitan Atlanta, at least six other fair housing committees are organized with purposes similar to the DHFHC. They are in the following areas:

Ansley Park
Doraville
Morningside
Northside
Southeast Atlanta
Southwest Atlanta

BELIEFS and PRACTICES of the American Friends Service Committee

The Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) was founded about 300 years ago by an Englishman, George Fox. In his preaching, Fox specially emphasized the necessity of inner religious experience and declared that God had placed in every human being an "Inner Light," the living Spirit of God. This Inner Light, rather than a sacred book or the authority of a priesthood, Fox taught, was the supreme guide for conduct. The Bible was regarded as an inspiring record of man's growing knowledge of God, particularly as revealed through the life and teachings of Jesus Christ.

Through the years, the Friends have been known for their emphasis on simplicity in clothing and speech, for their belief in silent meditation as a form of corporate worship, and for their efforts to translate their religious beliefs into everyday life. Friends have long been concerned with improving the conditions in mental hospitals and prisons, with alleviating the suffering of the unemployed and the dispossessed, with abolishing slavery and working for racial equality. Since their earliest days they have been opposed to war, and have sought ways to lessen international tensions by nonviolent methods.

There are today about 202,000 Quakers, of whom 23,000 live in Great Britain and Ireland; 123,000 in the United States, Canada, and the West Indies; 38,000 in Africa; and 6,000 in Mexico, Central and South America. There are small numbers on the continent of Europe, and in the Middle East, Asia, Australia, and New Zealand. These many regional groups are linked together through an organization called the Friends World Committee for Consultation, the central office of which is in Birmingham, England. It has been accorded consultative status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council and with UNESCO.

The American Friends Service Committee was organized in 1917 by American Quakers to give conscientious objectors to war and others a constructive alternative to military duty—"a service of love in wartime." The work of the Committee began with relief and medical services, first in France and Russia during World War I; then, at the end of the war, in Germany. These and many subsequent programs were undertaken in conjunction with a sister organization of British Friends, the Friends Service Council. Since that time the AFSC has continued to aid persons in need in many nations regardless of race, religion, or political belief. Volunteers drawn from a great variety of backgrounds are now serving on the continents of Europe, Asia, Africa, North America, and South America. In many programs, men and women from the immediate community serve as staff. The work of the Committee is supported by private contributions from persons of all religious faiths.

The programs of the Service Committee today are varied. In a half dozen lands the Friends are at present aiding refugees in their resettlement and rehabilitation. Some of this aid is in the form of medical and social services, and some, the distribution of material aids. In many developing nations the Committee is at work in programs of urban and rural community development, helping the people to help themselves.

Since the close of World War II, the AFSC has put increasing emphasis on finding nonviolent solutions to international conflicts. A series of conferences for diplomats, begun in 1952, has brought together mid-career diplomats from many countries into residential, off-the-record gatherings in Europe and Asia. A parallel series of seminars for young leaders—held in the United States, in Western and Eastern Europe, Asia and Africa—have brought together some 6000 advanced students and young professional people. In these gatherings, small groups of persons from many religious, national, racial, and political backgrounds live together as a family for several weeks, developing mutual respect through the study and discussion of different points of view.

In the same spirit the AFSC maintains programs at the United Nations headquarters in Geneva and New York, under the auspices of which U.N. diplomats are brought together for frequent small, informal, off-the-record gatherings. In Washington, D. C., seminars are held for congressmen, government executives, and foreign correspondents. The Service Committee also maintains a Friends Center, or hospitality house, in several key capitals of the world, where small informal gatherings can be held. A Quaker International Affairs Representative, stationed in troubled areas, tries to serve as a bridge to bring men together across political and ideological barriers.

Believing that the time for the next generation to begin building a more peaceful world is now, the AFSC offers youth a whole range of programs. For the very youngest children in the United States there are a variety of service projects and a chance to learn how boys and girls live in other lands. Through a program of school affiliations, American school-age children exchange ideas and materials between the U.S., England, France, Germany, Italy, U.S.S.R., Japan, Rhodesia, and Mexico. Students and teachers are also occasionally exchanged.

High school students within the United States are invited to participate in weekend service projects and week-long seminars as well as summer work camps. American college youth serve in institutions, such as mental hospitals; work in civil rights programs; and serve in summer work camp projects in the United States, Mexico, Western and Eastern Europe (including the U.S.S.R.) the Middle East, Japan, and Africa. Young people between the ages of 21 and 30 are offered a chance to serve and learn in established programs both at home and abroad through Voluntary International Service Assignments.

Since colonial times Quakers in the United States have led the effort to abolish slavery, and then to insure the full realization of equal rights. Presently Quakers are engaged in trying to help solve the problems of Negro Americans, Spanish-speaking people, Indians, and seasonal farm laborers. Programs with U.S. communities to encourage fair housing practices are expanding, as are similar efforts toward the peaceful desegregation of schools.

The long-standing peace testimony of the Quakers has led to the establishment by the AFSC of a series of programs in peace education. Within the United States these include a speakers bureau and a peace literature service; a program for the study of nonviolence; and a project stimulating and encouraging the production and use of serious scholarly criticism of national policies. A review of U.S.-China relations is currently being produced. The Service Committee keeps in close touch with proponents of nonviolence in other countries and sends representatives to international peace conferences.

The world-wide work of the AFSC rests on the belief of Friends that all men are children of God, and that love has relevance to the problems of the world today. Men and women of many races, creeds, and nationalities serve as staff members, as well as participate in programs. All are welcome to join the Service Committee in working for a world society that is nonviolently ordered, and in which men are neither debased nor exploited for any reason.

Quaker-Formed Group Toils Quietly to Solve Local, World Disputes Service Group Angers Some, Helps Out Both Vietnams; Grants for Race Sufferers

A 'Peace Corps' but No Draft

Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

PHILADELPHIA — In its operations, the American Friends Service Committee prefers to work quietly and to stay in the background. Yet it takes full-page ads in the New York Times to broadcast its views. It has members working with social agencies under the jurisdiction of the South Vietnamese government. Yet it has allocated funds to purchase medical supplies for war victims in North Vietnam as well as in South Vietnam.

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee, in a report later withdrawn, in 1965 called the group a "well-known transmission belt for the Communist apparatus." Yet a State Department official speaks well of the AFSC, and officials throughout the Government turn to the group for advice and information.

The American Friends Service Committee Inc. is allied closely, but not officially, with the Religious Society of Friends, or Quakers. The AFSC was formed in 1917 by Quakers to provide an alternative to Quaker youths faced with a conflict between their religious beliefs in nonviolence and demands for military service. It became widely known for its relief efforts after World War I and World War II. More recently, however, the committee has moved almost completely out of relief work and into efforts aimed at reconciling conflicts —domestic and international—before they begin. The committee still holds deeply to its pacifist beliefs.

Variety of Programs

With the change in mission, the AFSC has plunged into some highly controversial areas with a spate of programs ranging from low-cost housing, voter registration in the South and school integration in this country to such overseas programs as teacher exchanges with Russia and seminars for "young Asian leaders." It also runs self-help projects in underdeveloped countries, conferences for mid-career diplomats, its own version of the Peace Corps and a wide-ranging antipoverty operation in the U.S.

For such an ambitious array of projects, the AFSC is spread surprisingly thin. The committee has a 55-man governing board—all of whom are Quakers—and 500 paid fulltime workers, about half of whom are Quakers. The workers operate the Philadelphia headquarters, 11 regional offices in the U.S. and offices in 18 other nations. They operate on a tax-exempt budget of about $5.7 million, most of which comes from individual donations.

Though its budget is relatively small, the AFSC apparently gets the most for its money. "I must say the committee knows how to squeeze value out of a dollar," says Thomas Karter, an official of the Federal Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO). "When they spend a dollar you can almost hear George Washington scream."

Mr. Karter is a fan of the AFSC. "The AFSC always tackles the most difficult problems first," he says. "In fact, they've refused funds to operate programs they thought were too safe or secure." At a time when dozens of private groups are sprouting across the land to administer OEO money, Mr. Karter calls the American Friends Service Committee "about the best problem-solver in the voluntary field." He says that "other groups tend to come back for more money when they hit a snag, but the AFSC solves the problem by itself."

Catalytic Agents

Just how does the AFSC work? "We try to act as catalytic agents" bringing disputing sides together, says Colin Bell, the slight executive director of the AFSC who has been with the committee since he drove a Friends ambulance in China during World War II.

In practice, this usually means working behind the scenes to bring conflicting parties—whether on the domestic or international scene —together either in self-help work projects or simply to talk, in the hope of preventing crises.

Typical of the AFSC's approach to complex social troubles was its reaction to last year's riot in the Watts area of Los Angeles. Unlike many groups that began concentrating their post-riot efforts in Watts, the AFSC set up a two-man community action program in a heavily Negro and deteriorating section of West Pasadena—20 miles from Watts. Since that time the small AFSC staff has helped spur formation of a businessman's council aimed at forestalling the drift of companies—and therefore jobs—to other areas.

"The Watts riot worked to call attention to problems that need solving in West Pasadena," says an AFSC staff worker. "One of our problems is that this area could be another Watts. All the ingredients are there and all that's needed is the spark."

Explaining Civil Rights Act

Early in 1965, after passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the AFSC, joined by the Legal Defense and Education Fund, spread a school desegregation task force across seven Southern states. With little more than a dozen AFSC staff workers and volunteers, the committee held workshops in 100 communities, recruiting local leaders and interpreting for small Negro groups the desegregation provisions of the Civil Rights Act. Washington officials also used the sessions to explain to townspeople Federal guidelines for integrating schools. Throughout the summer, AFSC members and local volunteers visited hundreds of Negro homes, urging parents to send their children to newly integrated schools.

"In our door-to-door walking, we persuaded Negro parents that if enough people joined together, the danger of reprisals would be reduced," says one AFSC official. As a result of such efforts, last fall some 4,000 Negro children attended previously all-white schools in the 100 communities, according to an AFSC study. This year the AFSC and the Legal Defense and Education Fund tripled their staffs on the project and expanded the task force to nine states.

Unlike some of the more eye-catching civil rights groups, the AFSC usually prefers hardly visible, long-range efforts to dramatic hit-and-run tactics. This is necessary, AFSC members say, to effect permanent changes in community attitudes and to help safeguard Negroes against reprisals. In pursuit of the latter goal, the AFSC over the past 12 months has made $20,000 in "suffering grants" to 38 Southern Negro families, victims of various sanctions, such as job loss, eviction, or denial of credit for participating in civil rights efforts.

Once the American Friends Service Committee gets a project going, it prefers to turn it over to local leaders on the theory that a project gains wider acceptance if it is run by persons with roots in the community. A year ago, for instance, the committee turned over to about 100 homeowners a three-year-old fair-housing program in Chicago's wealthy North Shore suburbs.

The North Shore Summer Project is an example of how the AFSC works. Sponsored jointly by the AFSC and local community groups, the project recruited more than 100 Negro and white college-age volunteers to ask hundreds of home-sellers in the suburban Chicago area to list their homes with real estate agents on a nondiscriminatory basis. Of some 673 sellers contacted, about half said they would do so. Also, 82% of 1,560 homeowners contacted said they would accept Negro neighbors.

Later, AFSC-backed volunteers showed the figures to realty agents reluctant to open their multiple-listings to everyone. "We appeal to their conscience," says Charlotte Meacham, head of the AFSC's fair-housing program. "But we also try to convince realty agents that Negro clients won't hurt their business."

Some Direct Action

When appeals to conscience fail, as they have with most Chicago-area agents, the AFSC doesn't hesitate employing the techniques of direct action. This summer the AFSC joined forces with Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference to spur open housing in the Gage Park area of Chicago. AFSC members, four of whom served on Mr. King's 12-man action committee, recommended appropriate areas for non-violent marches, recruited marchers and arranged for their transportation to the demonstration sites.

"We also arranged for Negro home-seekers in the area to visit local realty agents, so that we would have evidence of discrimination before the marches began," says William Moyer, director of the housing opportunities program for the AFSC's Chicago office. But even while the march was making headlines the AFSC remained true to form. "We stayed pretty much in the background," says Mr. Moyer. "Our role is the work and not the publicity."

The AFSC may not have much use of publicity, but they do have an almost mystic faith in the healing powers of communication between contending groups. This outlook took shape after World War II when the committee began moving away from comparatively simple relief projects. In the international sphere alone, the AFSC since 1947 has sponsored more than 225 seminars and conferences for students, diplomats and young Afro-Asian leaders, stretching from Katmandu, Nepal, to such Iron Curtain areas such as Warsaw, Poland, and Sinaia, Rumania.

Such international activities, say AFSC officials, aim to dispel stereotypes and promote understanding between potential and actual combatants, who over the years have included Indians and Pakistanis, Arabs and Israelis, and East and West Germans. "In the sessions, which are always private and off the record, we want potential leaders to broaden their knowledge of countries with whom they may be at odds," says Nora Booth, head of the AFSC's international conferences and seminars program.

What these encounters yield is hard to determine, however. Conceding they've solved no world problems, AFSC members nonetheless point to occasionally surprising incidents. For instance, Indian and Pakistani participants at a recent session in Lahore, Pakistan, sang each other's national songs and later held closed talks among themselves on the Kashmir question.

"Usually you can't get an Indian to say anything critical of India in the presence of a Pakistani," says an AFSC official.

Long a believer in working both sides of a conflict, the AFSC in recent years has stepped up contacts with Communist-bloc countries. Next month the committee will hold, in cooperation with a Soviet quasi-academic agency, a two-week seminar in Moscow suburbs for young American and Russian academicians. The theme: "World peace, national life and individual responsibility."

Helping Out in Vietnam

The committee's involvement in Vietnam illustrates its two-pronged approach to conflicts. Besides paying for medical supplies for war victims in both North Vietnam and South Vietnam, the AFSC has sent members to work on relief projects in South Vietnam and is seeking approval to send members on similar missions to North Vietnam.

In South Vietnam, a committee-sponsored husband-and-wife team recently arrived to work with a child-care center for refugee children in Quang Ngai province. A few weeks ago, three college-age youths, the first batch of a larger contingent the AFSC hopes to send to South Vietnam, arrived in Saigon to work with social agencies under the jurisdiction of the Vietnamese government.

In North Vietnam, the AFSC has proposed that a small group of its members be admitted to operate—with AFSC money—a medical relief project for civilian war victims. "This month our representatives in Europe received word that the proposal is still under active consideration in Hanoi," says Charles Reed, head of the organization's international services division.

As for the war itself, the American Friends Service Committee is definitely against it. Earlier this month it took a full-page ad in the Sunday New York Times and urged a cessation of U.S. bombing in Vietnam and a "swiftly phased withdrawal" of American forces there. The ad cost $6,250.

In addition, the AFSC earlier this year issued a 70-page working paper on the war, urging U.S. de-escalation and inclusion of the Communist National Liberation Front (the political arm of the Vietcong) in a provisional government in Saigon. Also, in recent months the AFSC has stepped up the giving of legal advice to hundreds of "draft resistors" at its 11 regional offices. In September, it added a full-time staff member at its Philadelphia headquarters to counsel conscientious objectors on alternatives to military service.

Even so, at least one State Department official has some kind words about the AFSC. He concedes there's a tendency among some AFSC members "to condemn everything bad we do and forgive everything bad our opponents do. They're appalled by war and aren't satisfied by U.S. foreign policy." But unlike some U.S. critics, "I don't find them as a rule irresponsible or destructive," the official says.

Why does the committee help both sides in the war? Says Mr. Reed: "To meet the suffering occasioned by war, we have always sought wherever possible to work both sides in conflict situations on a strictly humanitarian and nonpolitical basis. This isn't always possible, but we always try."

An AFSC "Peace Corps"

The American Friends Service Committee's effort in South Vietnam is one of about a dozen "community development" and "youth services" programs that the committee has spread across Latin America, Asia and Africa. Among the most recent and wide-ranging program is Voluntary International Service Assignments, or VISA, the committee's equivalent of the Peace Corps.

Begun in 1960, a year before the Peace Corps, VISA enrolled 50 youths—some half of whom were conscientious objectors—and placed them on projects in the U.S., Tanzania, India, Guatemala and West Germany. In their foreign assignments, young people are teaching arts and crafts in a leper colony, schooling peasants in crop improvement techniques and preparing rural peasants for the intricacies of city life.

A comparison of VISA, with the well-heeled Peace Corps illustrates how the AFSC gets things done while pinching pennies. Both Peace Corpsmen and VISA volunteers are rotated every two years, but the AFSC youths get no salary while Corpsmen are paid about $1,300 upon their return to this country. "Our VISA volunteers receive only maintenance and often contribute money of their own to defray costs," says Thelma Howe, who heads the AFSC's youth services division.

"Our volunteers also do without houseboys that Corpsmen are entitled to," adds one AFSC official. As a result of such economies, the average cost of a VISA volunteer in the field is $3,400, compared with $7,788 for a Peace Corpsman. Annual cost of the VISA program: About $194,000.

From Lima to Broken Hill

The committee spends about $400,000 a year on its seven community development programs, which include such varied efforts as spurring formation of rural cooperatives in Jordan, women's sewing cooperatives in Lima, Peru, and furniture-making plants in Broken Hill, Zambia.

These programs also are examples of dollar-stretching. Instead of giving aid directly to a foreign government, as does the Government's Agency for International Development, the committee requires the foreign government and private agencies to contribute to the project as well. What's more, the people being helped must agree to take over the project when the committee decides it should pull out.

This approach doesn't always work. Several years ago, an AFSC job-training program failed in the small Algerian village of Soukel Arba when the villagers, split by factional rivalries, failed to participate fully. "We have a failure when the people don't take the initiative," says Mr. Reed.

The AFSC has little difficulty recruiting for its various projects. In 1964 it had 45 serious applicants for 25 VISA openings. In its hiring, the AFSC looks for people having "religious motivation, but we're far from doctrinaire in our interpretation of this," says Cathryn Evans, personnel secretary, adding that even agnostics aren't unknown to the commiteee. "We're basically looking for somebody who is looking for answers for himself," she says. One such person is Scott Neilson, who two years ago left a $12,000 job with a Hartford, Conn., insurance company to assume a $7,500 post with the AFSC. "There's a revolution going on in this country just as significant as the Revolution in 1776," says the 36-year-old. "I don't want to tell my grandchildren that during this time I had a good job making a good living."

Draft I

Dear Mr._____

Will you consider this a private memorandum. Because of the climate of DeKalb County in regard to housing for minority groups, this is of necessity couched in cautious terms.

Before or after considering the cost of such an experimental proposal, I ask you to look into the cost if something is not done:

1. Housing for minority groups is becoming almost non-existent in DeKalb County. Because the Negro is not a political force numerically in DeKalb, the lack of such housing will in all likelihood continue to decrease.

2. The fear of DeKalb residents (white) of more Negroes moving into DeKalb County is stronger now than ever. (A point which cannot be documented is that the increase of 12,000 new residents per year for a period of the past 12 years has been accomplished by, first, the threat of school integration, and later by the threat of housing integration.) This does not argue well for the future of the minority group in the county.

We believe that such a project as we are proposing could be of great value in helping provide more opportunities for Negroes and more identification as citizens with the County.

We welcome your comments and urge your consideration.

(Signed) Zernona Clayton

DRAFT FOR DISCUSSION

(HUD PROPOSAL) A PROGRAM OF PROFESSIONAL & TECHNICAL SERVICES REQUIRED TO PREPARE A DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM FOR A SERIES OF PROPERTIES UNDER DIFFERENT OWNERSHIPS AS PART OF A UNIFIED LAND DEVELOPMENT.

This program will be divided into three phases as follows:

1. Inventory and analysis of existing conditions.
2. Development of overall sketch plan & securing of agreement among various owners.
3. Translation of sketch plan into formal subdivision suitable for submission to County.

Purpose of Program

To present a case study of cooperative self-help in planning a neighborhood of a parcel of 100 acres of land privately owned by members of the minority group, situated geographically in an area completely surrounded by members of the majority group. (The minority group who own the land have been under considerable pressure in the past from zoning activity and is under pressure now to sell the land. The zoning activity succeeded in separating some of the parcels but in general the 100 acres is still reasonably intact).

Under the sponsorship of American Friends Service Society, or a comparable group, it is anticipated that a neighborhood association would first be formed and that the basis of the proposed program would be that of planning with instead of for. Out of such planning, hopefully, would come some experimentation in the use of newer housing forms as well a working plan for a neighborhood.

At present, the land to be planned consists of a series of approximately 10 separate parcels, each owned by a Negro family. The intent is to produce a unified land design which will permit the most economical and timely development of the several parcels into lots and to make these lots available for residential construction for middle-class Negro families seeking housing in this section of DeKalb County. It is expected that the process of securing agreement by the several property owners on a mutual design will have the additional value of further developing a sense of community identification in this sub-area of the County. The sketch plan will be for a larger area than simply the properties within the 10 ownerships and is intended to provide a context within which the 10 properties may be properly sub-divided. As part of this sketch plan, recognition will be made of any area wide community facilities or other similar improvements; drainage, roads, etc., necessary to provide for a more stable and qualitative subdivision development.

PHASE I

COST NOT TO EXCEED $7,500

Inventory of Existing Conditions

The following steps will be taken to provide the basic information upon which subsequent designs and discussions will take place:

1. Preparation of a property boundary survey for the total composite study parcel to the standards of accuracy required by DeKalb County.

2. Preparation of topographic map with 2ft. contours to standards required by DeKalb County regulations for the 10 parcels.

3. Preparation of a composite base map showing the several parcels involved and their relation to each other and to adjacent properties which will affect the overall development pattern. Such map will be at a scale of from 200 to 400ft. to the inch and shall indicate approximate property lines, shape and location of all major structures, significant water courses, street rights-of-way and significant easements and utility rights-of-way. In addition, to this planametric information, the map shall show by photographic enlargement methods from USGS sources the topography within the study area by 20 ft. contours.

4. Preparation of an mosaic aerial photo of the study area utilizing existing aerial photography of the latest date available.

PHASE II

COST NOT TO EXCEED $5,000

Preparation of Area Sketch Plan and Securing of Agreement Among Owners

This stage shall consist of three steps as follows:

1. Preparation of Development Factors Map - On the base map described in 3 above, those factors which will influence the design, timing and character of development of the subject properties will be inventoried and presented graphically for analysis. This map shall have the dual purpose of conveying information to justify the design proposed to the County officials who will review the final subdivision plat and to communicate to the owners of the properties and adjacent residents the factors that dictate the design of their property. Information is to be placed upon this development study map shall show, by color and/ or other symbol, the following:

a. Areas of excessive slop.
b. Areas of periodic flooding or ponding.
c. Existing zoning.
d. Traffic Volumes on abutting County Roads.
e. Major tree or planting groupings to be preserved.
f. Existing utilities in terms of location, size and kind.
g. Approximate value of housing in study area and occupancy type by renter or owner if avialable.

2. Preparation of Sketch Development Plan- This plan shall recommend an overall pattern of land use and streets for the entire study area and shall relate this pattern to the subject properties. Emphasis will be placed on designing a street system which shall allocate in the most equitable possible fashion the amount of street improvement costs in relation to the number of lots to be secured for each of the properties. Should it be determined that additional community facilities or street widenings or realignments will benefit the study area such recommendations would be presented on the sketch plan. In addition, the existing county zoning will be evaluated in terms of its appropriateness for the type of development now existing and proposed, and appropriate recommendations made for change if such are considered necessary.

3. Securing agreement among property owners on the development of the sketch plan.

PHASE III

Translation of sketch plan into formal sub-division suitable for submission to DeKalb County Authorities. If after the development of phase I and II, it develops that the odds against obtaining approval for this project are too great, then phase III would be omitted.

COST OF PHASE III NOT TO EXCEED $7,500

I find after talking more fully with Mr. Robert Thompson, HUD, that I have made a recommendation and taken a stand on the Advisory Committee based on erroneous information. Quite sometime ago, Mrs. Clayton showed me a piece of property in DeKalb County owned by a Mrs. Gaines which was primarily "land bound". This was the property which I thought we were discussing at our last meeting. However, I now find the property in question is another piece of property which has adequate access at present and is also presently zoned for single family dwellings. The proposed arrangement would not require American Friends to be the sponsor or promoter only to serve administratively as the recipitant and disburser of the Planning Funds ($10,000.00). As can well be imagined the owners do not have the necessary development funds and HUD is desirous of furnishing the "seed money" for making this planning feasibility study.

Because of the "political" atmosphere in DeKalb it is quite possible that existing housing construction codes could be stringently enforced thus getting rid of the present Negro occupancy. Also, it is most possible that this land now zoned for residential purposes could be rezoned for industry. This property is not suitable for industry use and therefore would remain vacant, thus exclude it from Negro residential use.

Because of the above information I strongly urge American Friends to reconsider this case.

I must emphsize because of the local situation time is of the essence and if American Friends are interested in providing a means of action on a delicate matter they must act immediately.

TULANE SLATES SOUL BOWL '70

Entertainment to Raise Scholarship Funds

A student-planned "Soul Bowl" aimed at raising as much as a quarter of a million dollars for scholarship assistance to minority group students has been announced by Tulane University.

"Soul Bowl '70" will begin at noon on Oct. 24 at Tulane Stadium.

Leading "Soul" entertainers who will perform during the six-hour program are Rare Earth, Jr. Walker & the All Stars, the Ike and Tina Turner Revue, Isaac Hayes, James Brown, and Pacific Gas & Electric.

Funds raised will be used to assist Black, Spanish-American and other disadvantaged minority group students in attending Tulane.

Program officials have emphasized that the program is not a rock festival.

NATURE OF MUSIC

"The nature of 'soul music' and the audience it attracts, the physical characteristics of the stadium, the careful selection of artists, the length of the program, the planning for crowd control, and the cause for which the concert is being held are the attributes which separate it from the rock fest genre," sponsors maintained.

The Soul Bowl is being sponsored by Tulane in an effort to replace Rockefeller Foundation funds awarded in 1964 which enabled the university to provide additional support for disadvantaged Negro students.

The Rockefeller grant is now running out and the last new group of students to receive financial assistance under the program were admitted last fall.

LONG RANGE

The primary responsibility for raising the funds has gone to the Tulane Committee on Expanding Educational Opportunity, which was created a year ago to develop long-range plans for recruiting and supporting minority group students at Tulane.

The committee is composed of students, faculty members and administrative officers of the university. Student members conceived the idea of a Soul Bowl project.

The committee has been locating sponsors willing to guarantee $100,000 against any financial loss, and most of that amount has already been underwritten.

A Soul Bowl Advisory Committee, comprised of community leaders and businessmen, including Tulane alumni, has been working with student leaders who are carrying out the program.

Crowd control plans include the use of specially trained student marshals to supplement uniformed policemen.

Funds realized through the program will be administered by the Committee on Expanding Educational Opportunity, whose chairman is Dr. David R. Deener, provost of the university and dean of its Graduate School.

THE HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITEE

ANNUAL REPORT 69-70

Something important is happening in Russell County, Virginia.....Something which trains men for jobs and builds houses for people.....

The resulting houses

(616 to 864 sq. ft.) are tailored to the needs of the individual family. They have two and three bedrooms, complete kitchen, bath, and utility room and may include a carport and a basement. The buyer may choose between brick face or drop siding exteriors and various dining room and kitchen arrangements. Interior walls may be drywall plasterboard or wood paneling. Floors may be hardwood or vinyl tile.

The cost to the family depends upon how large a loan that family obtains from the Farmers Home Administration. And there are several model homes to choose from: The least expensive home is about $3,000; the largest costs approximately $6,000.

Average time from "sale" (FmHA loan approval) to moving-in day is four months—two months for loan processing and two months total construction time, including delays, site preparation, and scheduling.

RADC provides 2 additional services

Out-reach workers from RADC assist low income families in need of new homes to apply for FmHA loans covering building materials and land, wells, and septic tanks if necessary. The FmHA 502 rural housing loans are for 33 years and from 7¼% interest down to as low as 1% interest depending upon family size and income. Monthly payments range from $20 to $45 including land, water, and septic system. These workers also counsel the future home owners in such matters as taxes, insurance, home maintenance, landscaping, etc.

RADC also runs a basic education program for the trainees. Classes provide instruction in reading, and mathematics skills necessary for success as a carpenter.

During its first 10 months, the LISH Corporation chalked up the following record:

- 10 new houses and one fire hall completed
- 4 foundations, footers or basements constructed
- 6 houses repaired—four of these had rooms and baths added
- 8 office and community buildings renovated

The combination of LISH elements produces:

FULL TIME JOBS for men employed by the self-supporting LISH Corporation in the factory

TRAINING AND PLACEMENT of RADC trainees in full time construction jobs

NEW HOUSES for families now living in unlivable shacks.

The LISH model is adaptable because

- it takes little capital investment for plant or equipment
- it can be used in conjunction with many job training programs or a self-help housing program
- it can expand into the production of panels, cabinets, furniture for the general market, and become totally self-supporting.

lting in place.

1.

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS, besides meeting Green Amendment requirements if OEO funds are involved, must consist of community people with technical skill who can and will assist the program with legal advice and assistance, planning, engineering, and architectural help, real estate and management experience.

2.

THE MARKET must be large enough to support a reasonable rate of production in the factory. There must be a sufficient number of families in the area served able to qualify for loans, in this case Farmers Home Administration Section 502 (home ownership) and Section 504 (home repair) loans. There must be enough out-reach workers to contact these families and assist them in obtaining loans.

3.

A good WORKING RELATIONSHIP WITH THE CREDIT SOURCE is essential. If loans are held up for long periods of time or on the other hand come in large groups all at once, the production in the factory cannot be even, and on-site erection crews will not be steadily employed.

4.

CAREFUL SCHEDULING AND MANAGEMENT is necessary to keep all workers (on-site erection crews and factory carpenters) working at a steady rate.

5.

HOMES built with factory built panels MUST HAVE APPROVAL FROM THE CREDIT SOURCE (FmHA) as well as meet local building codes.

6.

There must be INDUSTRY WITHIN REASONABLE COMMUTING DISTANCE able to absorb graduates of the job training program.

LISH Inc. is a combination of two complex programs, housing and job training. If the combination is to be successful, the programs must be considered separately and carefully. In the long run the LISH-type enterprise can be a strong factor in the economic development of a community.

It is LISH Corp.

(Low Income Sectional Housing Corp.)

Set up as an independent nonprofit organization with the assistance and encouragement of the Russell Area Development Corporation (RADC), the local community action program, LISH operates a "factory" producing sectional panels for houses put up by men in an RADC job training program for low income home buyers in Russell County.

Here's how it works.

The LISH factory, located in the basement of a local business, is operated by five carpenters on a full time basis. Panel sections, primarily 8′ x 12′, used for walls and 4′ x 12′ for ceilings and floors, are built on an assembly line. They are framed on a table, fitted with window and door frames, insulated, wired, and finished on the inside. Kitchen cabinets are also produced in the shop. The panels and cabinets are sold to families buying or repairing homes with Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) loans. The price of the items includes the labor. The production rate is panels enough for five houses per month in accordance with the current demand and crews available for on site construction. Production could go up if demand required. The equipment used in the production of the panels and cabinets was turned over to LISH with the dissolution of a job training program for welfare fathers. It is valued at approximately $2,000. Surplus government vehicles are used to transport panels to the construction site.

Panels are laid out on a table.

The RADC training program is funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity. The program employs 15-20 hard core unemployed men to work in crews of five per supervisor. The trainees are in the program for up to a year until basic carpenter's training has been completed and they are placed in jobs in the construction industry. The crews prepare the home site, dig the basements, pour the foundation, erect the panels, and finish the houses. Panels are numbered in the factory and put up on site according to a chart also prepared in the factory. It takes about two days to raise the panels for a LISH Corp. house and another day or two to roof it. Finishing the interior and floors takes one to three weeks. The home buyer does not pay for this labor.

LOW-COST HOMES... through group action

How church and fraternal groups, unions and community organizations can sponsor homes for low-income families.

HUD Consumer Guide

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING
AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
Washington, D.C. 20410

LOW COST HOMES . . .
through group action

Churches, fraternal and community groups, and labor unions have a successful history of providing homes for their elderly, the handicapped and orphans. Because of this experience, and a commitment to the welfare of their communities, they are uniquely qualified to respond to one of the Nation's most pressing problems—providing homes for low-income families at rents they can afford.

Over the past few years the direction of Federal housing policies has shifted to a greater reliance on the private sector, and emphasizes preserving and rehabilitating the existing supply of housing. Recognizing this shift, Congress has shaped housing programs that require direct involvement of private individuals in the community who plan and build housing for low-income people. The Federal Government provides financial and technical assistance that helps insure the success of such ventures.

Some of the programs are new, and perhaps not well understood by the groups that could make the best use of them.

This guide describes the ways that churches, fraternal and community groups, and labor unions (nonprofit organizations) can, with help from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, become the catalytic force that gets decent housing for the low-income families of their communities.

Low Cost Housing

Who Are the People Who Need Low-Cost Homes?

Seven million American families are living today in substandard dwellings, most of them in slum neighborhoods. They desperately need decent homes they can afford. Many of these families live in your town.

—or your club,

—Some of them belong to your church,

—or your union.

you can help them.

By combining your efforts with those of the members of your church, club or union, you can, with the assistance of HUD, get suitable housing built or rehabilitated for the low-income families of your community.

why should you get involved?

Slums and blight are like a cancer that lives and grows in your town. It saps the spirit of the people, breeds crime, disease, illegitimacy, and poverty. It drains your city's revenues into high welfare expenses and police costs. It places an unmanageable burden on your public school system. It drives many families into better neighborhoods. It is a constant threat to every part of the community and all of the families who live and work there.

There may be more immediate reasons why your organization should sponsor low-cost housing.

- Your church may be in a neighborhood undergoing substantial changes in ethnic or racial or economic composition. If your members can't find decent homes they can afford in the area, they will move away. It's good business to preserve your neighborhood as a place for your church members to live.

- Your club will become a positive force in community affairs by helping to build housing. In the process of sponsoring a housing project, your members will be directly involved in local activities, bringing new faces and ideas into community organizations, local financial groups, and to City Hall.

- Your community has a responsibility, shared by all of its organizations and people, to provide homes for its elderly residents that fit their limited retirement incomes. Making homes available to them benefits those senior citizens and their families.

SLUMS

the nonprofit way

The steady inflation of land, labor and material costs has driven decent housing beyond the reach of the Nation's lower-income families. Housing built by private profitmaking methods simply cannot be rented at rates that these families—many with incomes below $3,500 a year—can pay.

Congress has enacted a number of programs to help build housing for low-income families.

what can be done?

The first step toward ridding your community of slums is to provide decent housing for the people who live there. . . .

Often this can be done by rehabilitating existing houses and neighborhoods.

Sometimes hopelessly decayed blocks must be cleared and replaced with new housing.

And the total supply of housing can be increased by building new developments on vacant land.

But in any case, the housing provided must be priced within the means of the people in the neighborhood.

what must be done?

People who need homes can't build apartment buildings or housing developments by themselves. Before they get homes to live in, someone must:

buy property

arrange financing

design buildings

see about building permits, and zoning, and housing codes, get homes built and manage property after it is occupied.

267-320 O - 67 - 2

who will do the job?

THIS IS WHERE YOU AND OTHER MEMBERS OF LOCAL NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS ENTER THE PICTURE

All of these things can be done best by people who live nearby, who will see that new housing and the people who live in it become part of the whole fabric of the community.

Not isolated like this:

or isolated like this:

but woven into the community like this:

what are your resources?

Most of you already know how to get things done. Most of you already participate in the activities of your community. And the stability of your organization can guarantee a long-term interest by a responsible group in a housing project.

Although your group is not in the building business, you may have valuable experience in:

raising money

mobilizing the community for action working with people working with City Hall working together

managing property and money building churches, or lodge halls, you will need lots of help

The Department of Housing and Urban Development will give significant financial and technical help to local private, nonprofit groups who wish to provide homes for the elderly, the handicapped, and the disadvantaged people of their community. These are not programs of the future. They are available now, if you and your organization put them to work.

Community Leadership (nonprofit sponsors) + HUD Programs = New Homes for Your Neighbors Who Need Them.

sponsorship works—here's how

Three case histories show how some private groups use HUD programs to sponsor housing projects. The methods used may be adaptable to your community.

CWA Plaza, Nashville, Tenn.

SPONSOR:	Communications Workers of America, Nashville, Tenn., local.
NONPROFIT CORPORATION:	CWA Apartments, Inc., organized among union members in May 1962
FINANCING:	Working Capital—borrowed from the union's national organization. Mortgage—$2,051,800 borrowed from the Guaranty Mortgage Co. of Nashville (total project cost) at 3⅛ percent interest. Mortgage insured by HUD.

PROJECT DEVELOPMENT TIME: Construction began March 1964; first tenants moved into project in December the same year.

RENTS: Apartments average $75 per month.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT: The corporation hires a Nashville real estate management firm to operate the housing.

The union decided to sponsor new housing when many of its members were displaced from their homes by the East Nashville Urban Renewal Project. The 166 garden-type apartments are available to any qualified tenant, whether or not they are members of the union.

Wheat Street Gardens, Atlanta, Ga.

SPONSOR: Wheat Street Baptist Church.

NONPROFIT CORPORATION: Wheat Street Gardens, Inc., formed by 20 members of the church on Dec. 21, 1961.

FINANCING: Working Capital—$450,000 borrowed from the Atlanta Life Insurance Co.

Mortgage—$2,975,000 (total project cost) borrowed from Citizens Trust Co. of Georgia at 3 percent interest. Mortgage insured by HUD.

PROJECT DEVELOPMENT TIME: Construction began May 26, 1963; project was completed in August 1964.

RENTS: Two-bedroom apartments rent for $69.50 and $72.50 a month.

PROJECT MANAGEMENT: A management staff is hired by the corporation and works under the direct supervision of Rev. William Holmes Borders of the Wheat Street Baptist Church. The membership takes an active interest in maintaining the project as an asset to the community.

When a slum clearance project depleted the already scarce supply of housing for Negroes in Atlanta, the Urban League persuaded the Wheat Street Baptist Church to sponsor a housing development. The project is on a 22-acre tract in the Butler Street Renewal Area. The construction contract to Jett, Banks, & Russell was the largest ever held by a Negro firm in Georgia. The church is now planning an additional 144 units for the project.

Belvidere Project, Cleveland, Ohio

SPONSOR: Council of Churches of Christ of Greater Cleveland and Hope, Inc. ("Housing Our People Economically")

NONPROFIT CORPORATION: Belvidere Project, Inc.

FINANCING: Working Capital—donated by individuals, groups and corporations.

Mortgage—$176,000 borrowed from the Women's Federal Savings and Loan Association of Cleveland at 5½ percent interest (100 percent of cost of rehabilitating 2 buildings). Mortgage insured by HUD.

	Rent Supplement Contract—HUD reserved funds to supplement tenant's rent: tenant pays ¼ of his income toward the rent: HUD pays the balance to the corporation.
PROJECT DEVELOPMENT TIME:	Construction loan received in September 1966, project completed June 1967.
RENTS:	Efficiency and one- and two-bedroom apartments rent for $80 to $107.25 a month.
PROJECT MANAGEMENT:	A local real estate firm manages the property for the corporation.

Two dilapidated buildings in Cleveland's Hough area—a slum neighborhood—were completely rehabilitated. Twenty-two dwelling units have been reclaimed that can be rented at rates considerably lower than comparable apartments in the city. With the help of OEO, the sponsor is carrying out a program of human renewal to accompany the physical renewal of the buildings. The basement has been converted into a community room for tenants' use, and occupants are being instructed in home maintenance and minor repairs.

HUD programs for nonprofit sponsored housing

HUD has a number of programs to help foundations, unions, churches, corporations, private nonprofit organizations, associations, and universities provide housing for low-income families. They are called "221(d)(3)" programs, because they are contained in Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act.

The key feature of all of these programs is insurance of long-term mortgages so that sponsors can borrow money to build or rehabilitate housing. This mortgage insurance, usually for the total cost of the project, makes it easier to obtain financing for large projects that may be located in areas which private lenders do not consider prime investment locations, such as urban renewal areas and slums and ghettos.

In most cases, interest charged on these loans is very low—3 percent—so that rents can be reduced well below normal levels. Under some programs, sponsors may sell homes to low-income families at very low cost and with little down payment.

who may build housing under these programs?

Organizations which have been established for purposes other than gain or profit for themselves, or persons identified with them, can participate in these programs. They must have a history of stability, and demonstrate the capacity to maintain a long-term responsibility for a major project.

what type of housing may be built?

Projects may be garden-type apartments, duplexes, small and high-rise apartment buildings, individual homes, rehabilitated existing houses and buildings, or any suitable combination. It must meet FHA standards and conform to local housing and zoning requirements.

who can live there?

Under the "below market interest rate program" (3 percent), tenants' income can't exceed a maximum established by FHA.

Under the "market interest rate program" (currently around 6 percent), there are no financial income limitations for tenants. Experience has shown that such developments are particularly attractive to moderate-income tenants, because rents must be higher than those for homes built with below-market interest rate loans.

To qualify for rent supplements a tenant's income must be within the limits set for eligibility for admittance to Federal public housing in the area.

how are rents set?

Rents must produce enough income to pay all operating expenses, taxes and mortgage payments, and establish a reserve fund to replace worn-out equipment and other items that must be purchased periodically. They must be low enough that low- and moderate-income families can pay them.

Many low-cost housing projects have been sponsored by nonprofit groups around the country and are operating successfully. Some examples are:

Kate Maremont Foundation, Chicago, Ill.
National Council of Negro Women, Inc., Washington, D.C.
Philander Smith College, Little Rock, Ark.
Cumberland Courts, North Carolina.

Publications that explain HUD programs for nonprofit sponsored homes may be obtained by writing to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Office of Consumer Relations, Washington, D.C. 20410.

U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1967 O—267-320

This report by Jack McDonald, Office of Evaluation, is a summary of an investigation of student attitudes by two Peace Corps interviewers who visited nine college campuses. It is not a systematic, unbiased sampling but simply an in-depth informal survey of a cross-section of colleges. The report adds anecdotal substance to the structure provided by the more formal polls of Louis Harris and Associates Inc., College Seniors and the Peace Corps (January 1968), and A Study of Seniors in Predominantly Negro Colleges and Their Attitudes Toward Peace Corps (April 1968).

Purpose and Method

In December, 1967, two Peace Corps/Washington interviewers visited nine U.S. college campuses to conduct an informal investigation of current student attitudes, particularly as they relate to the Peace Corps. The sample of campuses (Knox College, Yale University, University of Mississippi, University of California at Riverside, University of Wisconsin, Stanford University, University of Chicago, Iona College and Indiana University) included both large and small schools, public and private, "progressive" and "traditional," high Volunteer producers and low, and schools in each of the major geographical sections of the country.

One interviewer visited three campuses, the other interviewer, six. Both spent two to three days on each campus seeking out and interviewing students and faculty who were identified either as influential and articulate or as "having their fingers on the pulse of campus thinking." In addition, the interviewers participated in numerous group "bull sessions" in student unions, lounges, commons, coffee hangouts, living groups, in which the participants often changed continually as students drifted into the group and then away.* Thus a fairly sizeable cross-section of students was seen. The interviewers also attended a number of formal and informal campus events that coincided with the visits--a peace vigil, a question and answer session with a Dow Chemical Corporation recruiter, a student debate on the draft, etc.

(It should be noted that the interviews took place before the occurence of a number of significant historical events that could be expected to affect student attitudes, such as President Johnson's announcement of non-candidacy, the partial bombing halt in Vietnam and beginning steps toward negotiations and the assassination of Martin Luther King.)

*As students came and went, they were not always aware that the interviewers were Peace Corps Representatives. The dialog did not appear to be materially different whether the Peace Corps identification was made or not.

Conclusions

These are the general conclusions from the interviewers' reports:

1. Many student "activists" tend to view the Peace Corps either with hostility because they feel it is "part of a corrupt U.S. foreign policy," or with indifference because they feel it is "irrelevant alongside more crucial issues" such as war and peace, race relations and poverty. The influence of the activists is seen as growing on the campuses.

2. "Non-activist" students may agree with some of the activists' views but feel less hostility toward the Peace Corps and less compunction to demonstrate their beliefs. They are generally more receptive to the Peace Corps as a personal option.

3. There is a good deal of indifference toward the Peace Corps among students and faculty members and little specific knowledge of the agency or its objectives.

4. Few students have substantive criticisms of the Peace Corps. When they view it negatively, it is almost always in the context of total U.S. foreign policy or because it is associated with the Federal Government and "the establishment."

5. When questioned about options after graduation, students mentioned most frequently graduate school, starting a career, marriage, the draft, and, rarely, the Peace Corps and VISTA. Some students saw the Peace Corps as an option to delay or avoid the draft, but more felt the draft to be an inevitability and were reluctant to delay personal plans for four or more years--two in the Peace Corps followed by two or more years in military service.

6. Along with a trend toward activism among students, some interviewees also see a growing sense of fatalism in the face of uncontrollable events. To the more fatalistic, the Peace Corps may appeal as a way of "opting out."

7. Many students and faculty members believe the "activists" are often the brightest students and the best potential Volunteers, but that they are not being attracted to the Peace Corps.

8. Faculty members on a number of campuses are seen as important influencers of student opinion, but most faculty are uninterested in the Peace Corps.

9. RPCVs on all but one campus are unorganized, have a preference for anonymity, and have little positive influence on student attitudes toward the Peace Corps.

10. Students and faculty have few concrete suggestions as to how the Peace Corps should change or be made more appealing to students.

Campus Groups and Moods

On all but one of the campuses,* the interviewers were able to identify the existence of a small, but vocal, articulate and apparently growing minority of student activists or radicals who are believed to have an increasing influence on student thinking. The size of this group is variously estimated between 2 and 10 percent of the student body. It should be distinguished from a much smaller group of students on most campuses who might be called nihilists or anarchists, and who are dedicated to the destruction of the present order of things and oppose all restraints. The difference is that the activists are influential; the nihilists are not.

* The exception is the University of Mississippi where protest and dissent are decidedly unfashionable and where most students have a strong career orientation.

The activists are seen as rebelling against the standards and values of the present generation. They seek a restructuring of society, occasionally by violent means but most often peacefully. They are strongly opposed to the war. They are distrustful or hostile toward the Federal Government, President Johnson, the "establishment," the status quo. They tend to view the Peace Corps either with hostility because it "is the icing on the rotten cake of American imperialism," as a Knox student said, or with indifference because they believe it is irrelevant alongside more crucial concerns--war and peace, poverty and affluence, race relations. (Said one dean of students, "If students are going to work for peace, as the Peace Corps implies, the relevant way is to stop the war in Vietnam, not help some underdeveloped country.")

Many of the activists see the Peace Corps very much in the context of the federal establishment and U.S. foreign policy. "The idea of the Peace Corps is noble as hell, but it's still a part of U.S. foreign policy, and U.S. foreign policy stinks," said a University of California/Riverside student (who wore a sweatshirt on which was lettered "Johnson's war makes America puke").

A number of students in this group said they felt any constructive contribution a Peace Corps Volunteer might make overseas is dwarfed by the magnitude of the destruction in Vietnam. "After all," said one Yale student, "I know and the Thais know that American planes are bombing Vietnam in order to secure our sphere of interest in Asia. What significance does the Peace Corps have alongside of that hard reality? How does teaching English to children or working with villagers stack up against our defense budget and our bombs?"

Several students said the mere fact that the Peace Corps is a federal agency was enough to rule it out as an option for them. (One student said he turned down a job in the post office during the Christmas vacation, although he needed the money, for the sole reason that it is operated by the Federal Government.)

The activists usually enjoy status on campus. At Yale, for example, many of the 350 signers of a published statement of refusal to serve in the Army "as long as the U.S. is engaged in a war in Vietnam," were considered activists and also were seen as the standout members of the junior and senior classes and as campus leaders in terms of grades, participation in student activities, respect of their peers, and prestige.

Most students and faculty believe the activists are growing in campus influence for these reasons: they are the most vocal; they command the headlines; as their numbers grow, dissent is seen more and more as an "in" campus activity; the activists often control the organs of student expression--campus newspaper, literary magazine, etc.; the activists have shown on a number of campuses that they can get results, particularly in changing campus policies and regulations, that they can "buck the administration and win." As many as 25 percent of the student bodies were described as "sympathizers" with the views and objectives of the activists or as "sometimes activists."

The "non-activists," who are the majority on each campus, were variously described as "apathetic," "apolitical," "confused or ambivalent about such issues as the war," or "more concerned with their personal world on the campus"--grades, athletics, social affairs, fraternities and sororities. Many of these students when questioned appear to share some of the views of the activists toward Vietnam, LBJ, the draft, the Peace Corps, etc., but are less hostile toward the Peace Corps and feel less compelled than the activists to do something personally: demonstrate, organize, picket, refuse draft induction. (Many, of course, are pro-U.S. foreign policy and pro-Peace Corps). Members of this quieter, more conforming majority were more likely than the activists to consider the Peace Corps as a personal option.

Specific Attitudes Toward the Peace Corps

Most students--activists, non-activists, radicals, conservatives, moderates, nihilists--appeared to the interviewers to have only a scanty knowledge of the Peace Corps and its objectives. When the words are mentioned many apparently think vaguely of President Kennedy, humanitarianism, mud huts, without being very clear on the specifics. Even members of the University of Wisconsin Association of Student Affairs who help set up Peace Corps booths for recruiting knew little about the Peace Corps and their interest in it was tepid. The subject of the Peace Corps apparently arises spontaneously in campus conversations very rarely except in the context of an option to avoid or delay the draft.

The interviewers heard little substantive criticism of the Peace Corps itself either from activists or non-activists. When the agency was viewed negatively it was almost always in the context of total U.S. foreign policy or because students associated it with the Federal Government, the President, "the establishment." Interestingly, when the idea was posed of an international Peace Corps operated by students of many nations and disassociated from any government, it almost always met with favorable comment, even from critics of the Peace Corps.

Positive and negative comments about the Peace Corps were about evenly balanced in frequency among activists. Positive responses were more frequent than negative ones among non-activists and campus moderates. Some of the most common favorable statements were variations of the following:

"The Peace Corps is helping countries on a meaningful level--the local or village level. It is people-to-people instead of government-to-government."

"The Peace Corps is challenging to the individual."

"The Peace Corps offers a great opportunity to learn a language, live abroad and travel."

"The Peace Corps is teaching--and education and understanding are the keys to brotherhood and peace."

"The Peace Corps offers the individual a good deal of working freedom. There isn't much regimentation overseas." (By the same token, one of the most frequently heard negative responses was that Volunteers have no freedom to speak out and dissent.)

"The Peace Corps is sharing American knowledge and skills with other people."

"The Peace Corps has kept itself 'clean' politically. It has not been perverted by the CIA."

Some of the most frequent criticisms, expressed usually by the activists, were these:

"Dissent is not possible in the Peace Corps, on Vietnam or any other issue."

"The Peace Corps is guilty of cultural imperialism."

"Peace Corps Volunteers are being used--they're the nice, clean-cut Americans who show that all Americans are not engaged in dropping napalm on Vietnam."

"The Peace Corps has gotten too bureaucratic."

"The Peace Corps helps perpetuate the host government in power no matter how corrupt or unresponsive to the people the government may be."

"Peace Corps assignments are haphazard and often there is a great waste of manpower."

"The Peace Corps is trying to sell America."

More frequent than either positive or negative responses, however, was indifference or "neutrality" toward the Peace Corps. "I think the Peace Corps has a neutral image on our campus," said the University of California/Riverside dean of students. There was a strong positive image with Kennedy and Shriver, but they're both gone. Students dislike Johnson and they don't know much about Jack Vaughn. "It seems to me you people really have to do a selling job. You've got a good product, but you're not putting it across." The interviewer's report from Indiana University said: "Where does the Peace Corps stand on a list of the things that are on students' minds? Nowhere."

Options After Graduation

When questioned about options after graduation, students mentioned most frequently graduate school, starting a career, marriage, the Peace Corps or VISTA (rarely), and the draft, which is regarded by most men as an inevitability. While some students talked about the Peace Corps as an option to avoid or delay the draft, more felt it would be two years on top of an additional two or three years in the military, which taken together would constitute a major delay of personal plans. Although students generally put a higher priority on solving American problems, particularly in the cities, than on helping underdeveloped countries, VISTA was mentioned as an option less frequently than the Peace Corps. Many students interviewed tended to doubt the new Selective Service policy as it applies to graduate students; they felt graduate students would not be drafted because it would not be in the long-term national interest.

When discussing options, students and faculty on several campuses spoke of conflicting cross currents in student attitudes. On the one hand they saw a trend toward activism and attempts to change everything from campus regulations to U.S. foreign policy. On the other hand, some interviewees saw a growing feeling of helplessness among students. "The war has demoralized students," said an English professor at Knox. "It has encouraged a feeling fatalism. I find that students are withdrawing from all sorts of service activities and are less interested in service-oriented careers like teaching or social work." The dean of students on the same campus said: "The inevitability of the draft is contributing to a new hedonism among young people.

Youth is increasingly turning inward and coming to believe that the highest good is self-fulfillment and that the individual must fulfill himself against the wishes of the older generation and the status quo." At Yale (where the subject of drugs was brought up by students more often than any other subject except Vietnam) the interviewer's report had this to say: "Many students are concerned because they are unsure about the war, have no sense of a remedy at hand; they're left instead with a feeling of impotence. Demonstrating either makes no dent in policy, or they're against the demonstrations and the demonstrators, but not necessarily for the President's policy. What to do? Join the Peace Corps? Their reply, often with a friendly smile: 'Aw come on, you're not serious.' That is, they may join the Peace Corps, but almost as a way of opting out--out of the draft, out of engagement with the issues. . ."

Who Does the Peace Corps Appeal To?

Many students and faculty members interviewed felt that the student "activists" and "activist sympathizers" would make the best Volunteers because they are aware, innovative, idealistic, often good organizers and skilled in human relations. Almost invariably, however, these same people felt such students were not being attracted to the Peace Corps. Some representative excerpts from the reports:

University of Chicago: "It was the impression of the faculty (and they thought of their students as well) that the brightest, most political students (as well as their leaders) were not interested in the Peace Corps. That was for the apolitical students from religious schools and from the large state universities."

At student leader at University of California/ Riverside: "The people I know on campus who are really serious about going into the Peace Corps are the conformists who pretty well accept the values of the establishment. They are the kinds of people who are basically out for themselves."

University of Mississippi: "The consistent answer to the question what kind of Ole Miss students are attracted to the Peace Corps went something like this: They are kind of lost. They certainly are not the 15 or 20 percent of the students who are most respected and admired by their fellow students."

Yale University: "Students took it for granted that the Peace Corps would have no trouble getting Volunteers this year. First, there is the draft, one boy explained. . . The other source [of Peace Corps recruits] consists of those who are apoliticised: do-gooders and idealists and adverturers who really have little political commitment. They probably will seek out the Peace Corps," says a faculty member.

Who Influences Student Attitudes?

The activists, as we have mentioned, are generally seen to be influential and persuasive on a wide range of subjects. The Peace Corps would be included in this range, but the interviewers saw no evidence that the activists have actively taken up the Peace Corps as a target for either brickbats or bouquets.

The interviewers' impressions were that nearly all students and faculty got whatever knowledge they had of the Peace Corps--usually vague--during the great wave of publicity that accompanied the agency's founding and earliest efforts. Insofar as interviewees were aware, their knowledge has not been greatly increased since then by the mass media or by letters or conversations with PCVs or RPCVs. Several students at Yale and the University of Wisconsin mentioned seeing the letter to the editor in the New York Times from Volunteers in Latin America and dimly recalled newspaper stories of Volunteers being thrown out of Peru or Venezuela or Chile for speaking out against the war. From these sources they concluded that the Peace Corps does not tolerate dissent. A few students on other campuses said they were favorably impressed by an article about the Peace Corps in the Readers' Digest, but none remembered the author or much about the article. Several University of Mississippi students said they had read editorials in Mississippi newspapers attacking the Peace Corps as a "wild-eyed foreign aid scheme." But most students were unable to recall or cite examples from the mass media that might have influenced their views toward the Peace Corps.

Except for isolated individuals, (notably Stanford's Robert Textor, a professor of anthropology who edited the book Cultural Frontiers of the Peace Corps) faculty members on the campuses were generally uninterested in the Peace Corps. The faculty at Yale was decribed as "uninterested or somewhat disapproving." At Wisconsin the interviewer "encountered chiefly disinterest in the subject." At Stanford also, "disinterest was present among faculty members (excluding Textor)." Even faculty or college administration staffers who are designated as "Peace Corps Liaison Officers" had little knowledge or interest in the Peace Corps. They are usually the contact with whom arrangements are made for recruiting, and they routinely handle such arrangements not only for the Peace Corps, but for VISTA, Dow Chemical, General Motors, the U.S. Marine Corps and many other organizations.

There was some division of opinion among students and faculty members on the question of faculty influence on student opinion generally. At University of California/ Riverside the influence was felt to be very strong. A student leader there said: "Faculty people are the ones who are actively questioning, speaking and writing about the things that matter. They have an enormous influence on us, in and out of the classroom, but particularly outside. When they dismiss class early so that we can attend a peace vigil or when they sign anti-draft petitions they have a powerful effect on us because they are men of ideas. They are saying in effect: 'We may live and work in the established structure, but we're not really part of it, and we're willing to risk our standing in it to speak and act on the things we believe are important.'"

At several of the campuses, student activists and faculty members have often been allies in disputes with the college administration. But at some schools, notably the University of Chicago and Wisconsin, there appeared to be a growing mutual disenchantment between student and faculty activists. At Chicago, for example, "faculty members have discovered that their interests and the interests of the radical students do not always coincide . . . professors who are opposed to the war in Vietnam have become alarmed at the threat to free speech that they see in student demonstrations against Dow Chemical recruitment; a few of them see the radical students as being prototype fascists . . . In the face of this, the faculty see the Peace Corps as some sort of child's play that does not concern them or the political leaders on campus, and as just another activity that is outside their province."

RPCVs were seen as having little influence on student attitudes toward the Peace Corps. Except at Stanford, where RPCVs helped plan a Peace Corps training program, returned Volunteers are unorganized and have a preference for anonymity. On no campus (nor in Peace Corps/Washington) did a complete list of RPCVs at the college exist. A married couple at Indiana who had tried and failed to organize the estimated 125 RPCVs there said: "The RPCV is reluctant to let it be known that he was a Peace Corps Volunteer." The RPCVs at Wisconsin were seen as "reluctant to come on strong as returned Volunteers." (No one, incidentally, either on the campus or in Peace Corps/Washington, seemed to know that the dean of students at Wisconsin had been a Volunteer). On all of the campuses, many students said they don't know any RPCVs. No one was able to explain this penchant for anonymity by RPCVs except in terms of the fact that they are graduate students and don't spend much time with undergraduates, and, as an Indiana student said, "the Peace Corps doesn't concern them any more. They're concerned with their studies, with becoming competent in their professions. The Peace Corps is a thing of the past."

Most RPCVs talk of their Peace Corps experience to other students only when asked. Then they try to tell them frankly about the good and the bad of the Peace Corps, usually accenting the good. Students at Indiana don't think the majority of RPCVs "badmouth" the Peace Corps, nor do they "push" it. Among the positive things RPCVs talk about when asked are the personal rewards of Peace Corps service and the experience of being tested. Among the negative points are "lousy assignments overseas," "you were always under the thumb of the Peace Corps bureaucracy," complaints about training, and a feeling that Volunteers weren't free to dissent.

Some of the same points were mentioned by students who have corresponded with Volunteer friends overseas. The message they get from PCVs was a mixed one, but generally favorable. Interestingly, however, as the Wisconsin report noted, "the negative comments come across much more sharply than the affirmation. The negatives are specific, are real, are concrete, while the affirmation is general and diffuse."

Stanford was the one campus where RPCVs appeared to be a strong positive force. Nearly all of them spoke enthusiastically about their Peace Corps experience. During the training program they helped plan, members of Students for a Democratic Society picketed Peace Corps recruiters, and returned Volunteers invited the pickets to talk the situation over. "After all," one of the RPCVs explained, "we think of ourselves as part of SDS. We're for the same things they are. So we told them to come in and tell us what we were doing wrong, why the Peace Corps was out. We wound up convincing the SDS people that they were the imperialists, for they were trying to foist participant democracy on everyone, including people and countries that might not necessarily want it."

How Should the Peace Corps Change?

There were very few responses to questions like how should the Peace Corps change or how could it be made to have a more positive appeal to college students--aside from the suggested changes that were implicit in some of the critical comments, i.e., the Peace Corps does not tolerate dissent; it is too bureaucratic, etc. At Knox, "the feeling of the majority of students was: 'The Peace Corps is great just as it is. It's one of the great ideas of our time. But it just won't sell in the present atmosphere. I think it's magnificent. But I won't join it.'"

On nearly every campus, some students were critical of Peace Corps recruiting spots on television, although very few were able to articulate what they disliked about them. A coed at University of California/Riverside, who was a VISTA Volunteer last summer, thought the Peace Corps appeal should be more realistic. "The image I have of the Peace Corps," she said, "is from pictures I have seen in Peace Corps literature. The picture usually shows a blonde girl with a clean white blouse surrounded by small Negro children who are smiling. It seems to me that the picture is designed to appeal more to parents than to students and potential Volunteers. It's very clean and nice, and probably unrealistic. Students see it as phoney. They know there is a lot of anti-Americanism around the world. They don't picture Peace Corps life as idyllic. The Peace Corps should project an image that is more realistic and more personally challenging. You'd probably get a much better response from the people you most want to reach."

One University of Mississippi student leader, when asked if the Peace Corps should change in any way, said: "Yes, it should pay more money." Several men students suggested that Peace Corps service be made a substitute for military service. Said a senior at Indiana: "If it were ever possible to make the Peace Corps draft exempt, people would go for it like mad. People want something like the Peace Corps. After all, who wouldn't rather help people than kill them?"

Peace Corps recruiters generally made favorable impressions on students, except at Yale where recruiters were regarded as "moral rearmament types, or they weren't as sharp as the students and grads who were respected on campus." Several students on several campuses said there should be more continuous exposure on campus to the Peace Corps instead of the sporadic recruiting forays.

RPCVs also had few suggestions for changing the Peace Corps. A number of them, however, complained about the size of today's Peace Corps--they think it is getting too big--and about "hard sell recruiting." The RPCVs' attitude at Indiana, the report said, seems to be: "Let people know that there is a Peace Corps. Then if people want to join they will. If they don't, they won't." An RPCV coed there said she was irritated by a letter she got from Recruiting asking for the names of potential Volunteers. "That may be the way to sell encyclopedias," she said, "but its not the way to get Peace Corps Volunteers."

HIGHLIGHTS OF LOW-RENT HOUSING PROGRAM OF HOUSING ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION

Purpose of Program

The primary purpose of the low-rent public housing program is to assist communities through Local Housing Authorities to provide decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings at low rents for families of low income. The Local Authority operates each project for this purpose and is further expected to operate the project efficiently and economically to maintain its serviceability.

Who Owns Public Housing?

A Board of Commissioners of each Local Housing Authority has title to the project the day it is completed. Local Housing Authorities are agencies created under State laws. Each Authority is governed by local Commissioners, usually five in number, who are appointed by the Mayor or Local Governing Body and who usually serve without pay. These Commissioners serve as trustees or directors for the people living within the jurisdiction of the Local Governing Body.

Who Manages and Operates Public Housing?

The Board of Commissioners of each Local Housing Authority. The Board of Commissioners hires a paid Executive Director who is responsible to them for carrying out various policies established by the Board.

Who Selects the Tenants for Public Housing?

The Executive Director and appropriate members of his staff in accordance with policies established by the Local Housing Authority Board within the framework of the Federal and State legislation governing low-rent housing.

What Other Actions are Taken by the Local Housing Authority?

It selects the architect, selects the site, acquires the land, establishes personnel policies, establishes purchasing policies, fixes the rent schedule, devises collection policies, recommends maximum income limits for admission and for continued occupancy, and sees that the public and local officials are fully informed about the program.

Some actions by the Local Housing Authority must be approved by HAA. To illustrate: The HAA does not approve the architect selected, but HAA must approve the plans he prepares. The project must be sound to last all of the 40 years of its bonded debt, and it must not be extravagant in design.

The Congress requires the HAA to approve the limits for admission and for continued occupancy, to approve the rental schedule to insure the solvency of the project, and to make sure that low-rent public housing does not compete with rentals for standard private housing in the community. To insure against such competition, the Congress has provided that the upper rental limits for admission to low-rent public housing must be at least 20 percent lower than rentals charged for a substantial supply of standard private housing in the locality. This gap requirement is not applicable in the case of a family displaced by urban renewal or other governmental action or an elderly family. For other families the requirement gap remains at 20 percent. The HAA must examine the LHA records periodically.

There Must be a Need for Low-Rent Housing

When a Local Housing Authority finds there is a need for low-rent housing for low-income families that is not being met by private standard housing, the Authority may apply to the HAA for a "Program Reservation" to set aside a certain number of units for the community.

Next, a Preliminary Loan

The Local Housing Authority may obtain from the HAA a preliminary loan to pay for preliminary surveys to establish the need and for the planning of the project. These preliminary funds will carry the project to the site approval stage. Sites cannot be purchased with preliminary loan funds.

Finally, the Development Program

The Local Housing Authority, after it has selected a site and decided upon the general plan of the project, incorporates its determinations into a Development Program. This Development Program forms the basis on which the HAA enters into an Annual Contributions Contract with the Local Housing Authority. The Local Housing Authority then proceeds with the completion of plans, purchase of the site, and construction of the project. Construction is by private contractors on the basis of open competitive bids.

The Annual Contributions Contract

This contract between the Local Housing Authority and the HAA translates the provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, into specific contractual obligations and mutual responsibilities with respect to the development, operation, and fiscal aspects of the program, as well as with respect to defaults, breaches, remedies, and general provisions.

Under the terms of this contract, ownership of the project is vested in the Local Housing Authority along with the responsibility of selection of tenants and management and operation of the project.

How Projects are Financed

The HAA makes loans to the Authority for planning and for construction of the project. As the project nears completion, the Local Housing Authority issues bonds to cover the debt. The bonds are sold to private investors, such as banks and insurance companies, upon competitive bids. When the bonds have been sold, the HAA loans are repaid with interest. The bonds are for a period of 40 years and are tax exempt. They are secured by the United States Government through the Annual Contributions Contract executed between the HAA and the Local Housing Authority. This contract, among other things, says in effect that each year, to the extent that the income of the project is not sufficient to meet interest and principal payment on capital debt, the Federal Government will pay an annual contribution to cover the deficit. Such contributions may be paid for not more than 40 years and are limited to an amount necessary to provide for the payment over such a period of principal and interest on the capital cost of the project.

Eligibility for Occupancy

Admission requirements relate to income and admission policies established by the Local Housing Authority.

The Federal law now requires that Local Housing Authorities agree to establish admission policies which will give full recognition to their responsibility for providing housing for low-income families of servicemen, veterans, the elderly, and those displaced by new low-rent housing, redevelopment or urban renewal projects, or by action of a public body or court.

Rents Based on Income

The general practice assumes that a family should pay at least one-fifth of the family income for rent which includes all utilities. Rental charges have no relation to the size of the dwelling.

A Family Must Move

When the family income exceeds the continued occupancy limit, the family must move unless the Authority determines that, due to special circumstances, it is unable to find decent, safe, and sanitary housing within its financial reach although making every reasonable effort to do so, under such circumstances the family may be permitted to remain in the project if it pays an increased rent consistent with increased income.

Projects are Tax Exempt, But Payments in lieu of taxes are authorized by law and the Cooperation Agreement between the Local Governing Body and the Local Housing Authority. These payments may not exceed 10 percent of the shelter rent. The shelter rent is the rent less the cost of utilities. The payments are made to the local government for services provided. These services are the same services provided to all other property owners in the community. The Cooperation Agreement also provides for necessary street vacatings or dedications, necessary changes in zoning, and similar forms of assistance.

How Commissioners Get Things Done

Formal actions of the Local Housing Authority are through written resolutions passed by the Commissioners which are placed in the official records of the Authority.

Duties of Executive Directors

The Executive Director usually acts as Secretary of the Board. The Executive Director administers the program of the Local Housing Authority. The Executive Director makes recommendations on policies and executes those policies that are approved. The authority to execute contracts and other types of agreements is usually delegated to the Executive Director by the Commissioners.

In a small public housing program, the Executive Director may also be the Housing Manager. In this capacity, he is responsible for rent collection, tenant selection, tenant relations, bookkeeping, accounting, repairs, maintenance and replacements to all buildings. In the larger Local Housing Authorities the Executive Director will have varying size staffs with specialists, such as a Housing Manager for one or more of the projects, a maintenance crew, and a Community Service Coordinator who serves as a liaison between community agencies and the Local Housing Authority to assure the availability of social services for residents.

The Low-Rent Housing Look

Each living area for a family in low-rent housing is referred to as a unit. The unit may be located within a multi-story apartment-type building, in a two-story apartment-type building, in a single-story duplex or triplex. The unit may be in an area along with a large number of other units in what is generally referred to as a project area. It may be on scattered sites throughout a community and consequently undistinguishable from privately developed housing. Just as the size of each Local Housing Authority's development may vary, so will the architecture.

New Provisions

In addition to what HAA terms the traditional new construction of low-rent housing units, new provisions permit the purchase and rehabilitation of existing housing and the leasing of existing housing for low-rent housing purposes. Both of these provisions offer housing to low-income tenants on an "instant" basis compared to the new construction and both are particularly suited to provide low-rent housing for large families.

HAA as a Government Agency

The Housing Assistance Administration is a Government agency within the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The Housing Assistance Administration maintains a Central Office in Washington, D. C. There are Regional Offices throughout the United States and Puerto Rico. One of these Regional Offices is in Atlanta, Georgia with jurisdiction for low-rent housing in the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee.

These are Just a Few Pointers

The preceding material is not a complete outline of the HAA program and procedure. This effort has only touched upon what is regarded as some of the important highlights. We hope they will prove helpful. For any additional information, please write to:

LOW INCOME HOUSING DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

THE BOARD

The Board of Directors of the Low Income Housing Development Corporation will be responsible for formulating the policies to achieve the goals of the Low Income Housing Program as outlined in the proposal and as further refined and modified in subsequent discussions with the Office of Economic Opportunity and with the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Further, in the light of changing community needs, developing local and statewide resources to meet these needs, and availability of pertinent federal funds in programs designated for use in meeting low and moderate income housing needs, the Board will determine what directions the program might best take to meet these housing needs.

Primary Goal

A. Increase the supply and improve the quality of housing for low and moderate income families.

The Low Income Housing Development Corporation will seek to implement this goal by the following means:

1. Stimulate the construction of new housing and the rehabilitation of existing housing for low and moderate income families, under a variety of public and private programs, but primarily through the use of the Federal Housing Administration 221 (d)(3) below market rate interest financing program and of rent supplements.

2. Encourage socially motivated housing sponsorship through stimulation of nonprofit sponsors (such as churches, educational institutions, hospitals, civic groups, labor unions) to utilize the FHA 221 (d)(3) and other pertinent programs to create new housing or rehabilitate old housing in their communities.

3. Lend development funds to selected nonprofit sponsors in specifically designated "project cities" to enable these sponsors to undertake the construction or rehabilitation of low and moderate income housing, primarily under the FHA 221 (d)(3) program, but also under other programs aimed at the same groups which may have similar initial financing needs and no alternate resources available to them.

4. Encourage the sponsorship of cooperative ownership by low income families of rehabilitated housing.

5. Stimulate the housing industry as a whole to utilize on a large scale the 221 (d)(3) program, rent supplements, innovative public housing programs, and other housing programs which might be aimed at the low-moderate income groups.

Secondary Goals

A. Achievement of nondiscriminatory housing, through:

1. Open occupancy within housing projects, and judicious placement of projects in the community.

2. Support of and coordination with "Model Cities" concept and program, where implemented.

B. Active participation of low and moderate income groups in the determination of their housing and allied needs, and in planning and possibly operating of housing programs and projects, through:

1. Involvement of low and moderate income persons on boards, advisory committees and advisory councils.

2. Involvement of low and moderate income persons on boards and committees of nonprofit sponsors of housing projects.

3. Involvement of low and moderate income persons in policy-making, planning, and housing management of cooperatives where these are created to build new or rehabilitate old housing.

C. Widespread use of existing and new and experimental low and moderate income housing programs (new and rehabilitation), of either a public or private nature, through:

1. Professional help and advice to pertinent groups on the use of these programs, and loan of development funds where these loans fall within the province and scope of the program.

D. Diversification of nonprofit sponsors, through:

1. Technical assistance to as many different sponsors as the corporation's manpower resources permit it to reach; and financial assistance to selected nonprofit sponsors who might represent a variety of interests and groups.

E. The improvement of community human and economic resources, through:

1. Coordination of the housing program with social and human resource development components of other programs, such as neighborhood centers, their services and programs, community organization and other community action agency activities, housing improvement demonstration centers, recreation and open space programs, school building and activity programs, and others.

2. Coordination of the housing program with relevant manpower training and employment development programs.

F. Careful, systematic research and evaluation of an experimental program, through:

1. A complete documentation of the entire course of the program--its critical events, its problems, the key decisions which are made (how, why, when and by whom), the nature of the program's relationship with other agencies and institutions (local, state, and federal), and with private industry, the experiences with each of the local sponsor groups of new and rehabilitated housing and related matters.

2. Analysis of the impact on program success as a result of such factors as:

   differential mixes of rehabilitation and new construction; type of housing and size of units; location of project with relation to employment centers, transportation, shopping areas, community facilities, etc; mixed or uniform racial occupancy; different degrees of community cooperation, support of community leaders, community service agencies, etc.; different degrees of interest, support and participation of the poor, of local builders, realtors and others in the housing industry; characteristics of the sponsors and of owner-manager groups; and others.

3. Follow-up study of the first residents of the new and rehabilitated housing to compare their family characteristics, previous and current expenditures on housing, degree of satisfaction, changes in living patterns (if any), etc., with persons or families in public housing or privately financed low-income housing.

4. An in-depth analysis of the major features and problems of the program.

WHAT IS THE TRUTH ABOUT LOW-RENT HOUSING?

WHERE WILL THE MONEY COME FROM? It will come from PRIVATE ENTERPRISE. NO additional taxes are involved. Bonds will be sold on the open market to acquire the land and construct the units. The Federal Housing Administration insures the bonds just as FHA insures home mortgages.

WHERE WILL THE UNITS BE LOCATED? 128 units will be built on the PRESENT LOCATIONS--50 units at Conark Courts and 78 high-rise apartments for the elderly on Victory Courts. The remaining units will be located on a suitable site which will be a credit to the community.

WHO WILL RUN IT? The Conway Housing Authority: Guy A Camp, Chairman; James J. Kane, Vice Chairman; Alph Hamberg, Dr. James H. Flanagin Sr., and Frank Robins III. Robert F. Rabb is Executive Director. These men are long-time CONWAY people who understand the needs and interests of CONWAY people.

WHO NEEDS IT? 150 local people now are on the waiting list to get into the present 50 units. They are working citizens or retired elderly people now living in poor housing, who earn less that $4,000 a year.

WHO ELSE HAS LOW-RENT HOUSING? There are close to 100 towns and cities in Arkansas who have such facilities, including Searcy, Morrilton, Russellville, Little Rock, North Little Rock, Helena, Nashville, Blytheville, Osceola, Dierks, Marked Tree, Hope, Star City and Amity.

WHAT WILL THE UNITS BE LIKE? Seventy-eight units will be high-rise apartments for the elderly. The other 100 units will be brick duplexes, handsomely landscaped and maintained by full-time employees of the Housing Authority.

WHO WILL IT HURT? NO ONE! Private owners of rental property will not likely be injured because their property is usually too costly for these people anyway.

IF YOU VOTE YES JULY 9, WHAT DOES CONWAY GET OUT OF IT?

1. Approximately $2.5 million in construction.
2. Over $250,000 from the 10 per cent sheltered rent turned back to the city in lieu of taxes over the life of the bonds.
3. When the bonds are paid off, the city will own the entire project.
4. Jobs for the people who will build the units.
5. A safer, more attractive community.
6. Educational services for the elderly and the children who will live in the units.
7. The satisfaction of being a part of a growing, progressive and thriving community which cares.

Public Housing Proponents Name Rev. Settle Chairman

Advocates of a proposed federally financed low-rent housing project for Conway organized last night and elected the Rev. Carl Settle chairman.

The Rev. Mr. Settle, director of the Wesley Foundation at State College of Arkansas, will spearhead the efforts of the Citizens Committee on Behalf of Public Housing.

Conway voters July 9 will decide on a "yes" or "no" basis whether they want 178 units of public housing. The referendum was called after petitioners asked the City Council's action May 28 approving the plan of the Conway Housing Authority be reffered to a popular vote.

About 45 persons attended last night's meeting in the Community Room of First State Bank & Trust Co.

Named to the group's Steering Committee were the Rev. Mr. Settle, Joe C. Shaw, Dr. Pat Murray, Dr. James B. Finagin, Dr. Wally W. Moore, Mrs. Owen Moore and Mrs. Hubert L. Ferguson.

Robert Hickey, Conway city attorney who examined the petitions which resulted in setting the July 9 election, said the question to be faced by voters does not exempt or include specific locations for the proposed housing units.

The Conway Housing Authority had proposed to the City Council erection of a high-rise apartment for the elderly on its Victory Cts. property on Sixth street, construction of other rental units on its Cesark Cts. property on Highway 65-65 and 10 additional units on property south of Sebastian road and east of Tilghman street in the Brown subdivision.

Most of the petitioners who objected to the construction of the low-rent housing units were residents of the Brown subdivision.

Hickey said the question of location for construction of the housing units "neither excludes nor includes" the Brown property or any other property or proposed location in Conway. The location of the housing units will be selected, he pointed out, by the housing authority.

"Asked if a defeat in the election would prevent the construction of new units on the property of the housing authority (Cesark and Victory cts.) Hickey said he didn't think so.

The city attorney said he had received several inquiries concerning absentee election ballots and confirmed they would be available to voters.

A forum was held on the housing proposal Sunday night to a near-capacity audience at First Methodist Church. Glen Rose of Little Rock, a member of the Stanley Brown architectural firm, presented slides and discussed public housing projects throughout the state.

The Brown firm has been employed by various housing authorities in Arkansas to prepare plans for the federally financed projects.

By 2-1 Margin—

Voters Approve Housing Issue

Public housing supporters in Conway scored a surprising two-to-one victory Tuesday in a special referendum election.

The vote was 936 for and 455 against.

Approved by voters in three of four citywide polling places was the proposition of constructing 178 new, low-rent housing units including 78 units for the elderly and 100 units for other low-income families.

The proposal carried by better than two-to-one in the First and Third wards, which gave public housing advocates their biggest margins.

The vote by precincts:

	For	Against
First Ward	347	123
Second Ward	118	65
Third Ward	278	174
Fourth Ward	79	88
Absentee	14	6
TOTAL	936	455

The Fourth Ward box at the Municipal Building was the first to deliver its count to the Faulkner County courthouse office of County Clerk L. J. (Leaster) Merritt. The ballots, stubs and totals were delivered at 8:20 p.m., less than an hour after the polls closed. (Under a new Arkansas law, polls stayed open an hour longer—until 7:30 p.m.)

The last box—Third Ward—was delivered to Merritt by election officials at 9:55 o'clock.

Election officials at most polling precincts reported some confusion among voters in recently annexed areas. These voters still are listed in the precinct prior to the recent annexations and were not transferred to new wards within the city.

Merritt said to avoid confusion in the July 30 and Aug. 13 primaries, voters in recently annexed areas to the city should cast their ballots in their old political subdivisions.

half of Public Housing put together a concerted effort and was given much credit by housing advocates for spearheading the successful campaign. The Rev. Carl Settle, director of the Wesley Foundation at State College of Arkansas, served as chairman.

The Conway Housing Authority earlier this year proposed—and gained City Council approval—for construction of 178 low-rent units. But opposition quickly developed by residents of the Brown subdivision one of three proposed sites for the units, and the council later removed the Brown property from consideration.

The opponents of the housing proposal, however, petitioned for a citywide referendum and successfully obtained the required number of signatures for a special election of the council's action.

The housing authority, in its original proposal to the council, recommended construction of a seven-story high-rise apartment building for the elderly on its Victory Cts. site at Harkrider and Sixth streets, containing 78 units, 50 units at the Conark Cts. site on Cemetery and Harkrider streets and 50 additional units in the Brown subdivision.

No specific locations, however, faced voters in yesterday's referendum.

Log Cabin Democrat 7-9-68

Mild Interest Shown In Housing Proposal

Balloting in today's special referendum election on low-rent public housing was running at an expected light-to-moderate pace.

Noon totals from four polling precincts showed 394 votes cast. The noon tabulation normally represents about 35 to 45 per cent of the total vote in any election.

This year, however, the polls, under a new law, are to remain open until 7:30 p.m. and this could provide a larger than normal tabulation compared with the noon figures.

A turnout of slightly more than 1,000 votes had been anticipated.

The 12 o'clock figures:

First Ward	131
Second Ward	44
Third Ward	157
Fourth Ward	52

Voters in the First Ward are casting ballots at the gymnasium at State College of Arkansas; Second Ward at the treasurer's office at the Faulkner County Courthouse; Third Ward at Conway Junior High School and Fourth Ward at the Municipal Building. Balloting was heaviest in the Third and First wards.

An early tabulation of the vote is expected in County Clerk L. J. (Leaster) Merritt's office following the closing of the polls.

The only issue on the ballot is a "yes" or "no" regarding the housing issue and no sites are specified on the ballot.

The Conway Housing Authority, however, has proposed the erection of 175 units, including a seven-story high-rise apartment for the elderly on its Victory Cts. site on Harkrider and Sixth streets.

Sunday, many Conway ministers appealed from the pulpit for an affirmative vote in today's election.

Commission To Meet

The Arkansas Education Television Commission will meet here tomorrow. The meeting will be at 10 a.m. in the board room of the Administration Building at State College of Arkansas. Dr. Silas D. Snow, president of SCA, is chairman of the commission.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS AUGUST 1970

MEMBERSHIP-EXPANSION AND FUND-RAISING DRIVE ANNOUNCED

Finance Committee Chairman Dr. John Suich, and Membership Expansion Committee Chairman Willar Hightower announced that SCCHR will conduct a major membership-expansion and fund-raising drive during the month of September. Mailings and contact - activities will begin September 7, and will continue through the end of the month.

Suich and Hightower said goals for the effort are: (1) to pass the 2,000 mark in membership (present membership is 1321), and (2) to raise $20,000 in new and renewed membership dues, contributions and pledges for SCCHR programs for 1970.

SCCHR Executive Director Paul Matthias emphasized the importance of a successful campaign: "The degree to which SCCHR will be able to continue as a positive force for justice and reconciliation in South Carolina will be determined to a very large extent by the degree of success of this campaign. We simply must have greater membership participation, both in terms of money and time," said Matthias.

Activities will include direct mailings of newly-prepared brochures and form letters to current members for use in individual contacts. Earlier, each member of the SCCHR Board of Directors received eight copies of SCCHR's larger brochure, "To Live And Die In South Carolina," and other materials for use in approaching potential individual and corporate contributors. Response from that effort has been minimal.

STATE COUNCIL NEWS

STAFF ADDITIONS ANNOUNCED: Executive Director Paul Matthias announced the addition of two distinguished figures in the social action movement in South Carolina to the SCCHR staff.

Rodney Albert, noted Black educator and community leader, has accepted the position of SCCHR Associate Director, effective August 24. Albert was chairman of the Division of Natural Sciences at Voorhees College for nine years, and has been a central figure in efforts for reform at that strife-ridden institution. He presently serves as the President of the Bamberg County NAACP, Chairman of the Voter Registration Committee for Bamberg County, and Chairman of the Bamberg County Democratic Party. His educational background includes work at several colleges and universities, among them S. C. State College, and New York University.

Included in Albert's duties at SCCHR will be the supervision and development of programs in Black Economic Development, the second of SCCHR's three programmatic priorities.

Also, the Rev. Edward Francis of Moncks Corner has joined the SCCHR staff to head the newly announced Retention, Utilization, Reclamation and Acquisition of Land (RURAL) Program. Rev. Francis, who is pastor of the Intercession Reform Episcopal Church in Moncks Corner, has long been active in community action affairs in Berkeley County and throughout the state. He presently serves as President of the Moncks Corner NAACP, is Chairman of NAACP's Southeastern Regional and S. C. State Membership Committees, and was recently elected Chairman of the United Citizens' Party of South Carolina.

Rev. Francis was educated at the Cummons Theological Seminary in Summerville, and has served on the personnel relations staff at Avco-Lycoming Co. in Charleston since 1966.

WHERE DO WE STAND? A common tendency in social action work is to follow fickle public attention from issue to issue, as if one were dealing in clothing fashions rather than social problems. The result, of course, is a "wheel-spinning" effect, with no real impact in effecting change in society.

To avoid this, SCCHR engaged in a strenuous agenda-building exercise last year, resulting in the setting of program priorities for 1970: Public Education, Black Economic Development, and Fair Housing, in that order.

The degree of accomplishment in these areas depends ultimately on the extent of membership involvement, both in terms of money and time, and on additional funding sources such as foundations.

In order to maintain our momentum in these efforts, to determine just what we have done, and hence, where we go from here, constant re-evaluation and re-assessment is necessary. Henceforth, we shall be giving a portion of the CURRENTS to a regular discussion of "where we're at" in relation to our three programmatic priorities. This month's offering follows.

PUBLIC EDUCATION: A key part of the effort to make our public education system relevant to the needs of poor children is the structuring and implementation of programs for free or reduced-price lunches and breakfasts.

On August 11, Executive Director Paul Matthias, along with SCCHR members Mordecai Johnson and Pat Mizell, met with Kathleen Gaston, State Department of Education School Lunch Supervisor. Their aim was to discuss the implementation of school lunch and breakfast programs with Miss Gaston, and to convey to her SCCHR's concern that the highest priority be given to assuring that the state's poor children have free or reduced-price lunches and breakfasts made available to them.

Matthias said that the meeting was "interesting, and somewhat encouraging," and that he is planning to call a press conference in the near future to discuss implementation of food programs in the state's schools and day-care centers.

Additionally, a field representative of The Children's Foundation, Robin Read, visited South Carolina the week of August 10-14. He was here to discuss provisions of newly enacted federal legislation which significantly expands federal participation in free and reduced-price lunch and breakfast programs for schools and day-care centers. With the assistance of SCCHR staff, SCCHR members Gladyce Cole of Cheraw, Bertha Barfield of Barnwell, and others, Read held meetings in Greenville, Cheraw, Kingstree and Barnwell.

SCCHR now has copies of the policy of every school district in the state for food programs, as well as additional information on how citizens can help assure that each district's program will provide free or reduced-price lunches and breakfasts for all eligible children. Such information may be obtained by writing to the SCCHR office at 1420 Lady Street, Columbia, S. C., 29201.

BLACK ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT: Executive Director Paul Matthias announced the addition to the SCCHR staff of an Associate Director, among whose duties will be supervision and development of programs for Black Economic Development, and a Director for the RURAL Program (see above).

FAIR HOUSING: COLUMBIANS FOR FAIR HOUSING (CFH), the organization serving as a "pilot" effort in community organization for fair housing, released a progress report July 17. In addition to announcing the next meeting for early September, CFH summarized its activities to date. They included:

1) Assistance to two Black USC students who were initially denied rental of an apartment because of their race. The students, with the assistance of CFH, prepared to file suit after efforts at persuasion failed, at which point the owner of the apartment building acquiesced. The two students recently moved into the apartment, and have had no further trouble.

2) Radio spots, prepared by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and distributed to radio and TV stations in Columbia. They publicize the existance of CFH, and give a telephone number (252-3651) that can be called by anyone who thinks he or she has been a victim of discrimination in attempting to buy or rent housing.
3) An ad in the real estate section of the classified ads of each Sunday edition of the State-Record newspaper. The ad conveys basically the same message as contained in the radio spots.
4) Circulation of "Good Neighbor Pledge Cards" which articulate personal subscription ot the philosophy of fair and open housing for all people. Over one hundred of these have been completed and returned to the CFH office.

Over half of the members of CFH are Columbia CHR members. Additionally, the state SCCHR office furnishes office space and staff for CFH. (If interested in more detailed information on CFH, write c/o SCCHR office, 1420 Lady St., Columbia, S. C., 29201.)

CREDENTIALS AND AWARDS COMMITTEE: Executive Director Paul Matthias distributed a memorandum on July 13 to all Local Council officers, discussing the recent report submitted by the Credentials and Awards Committee. The report, accepted favorably by the State Executive Committee in its June meeting, establishes criteria by which actions of Local Councils can be evaluated in the context of their general performance and their relations with the State Council.

In the memorandum, Matthias stated, "It should be emphasized that this is an attempt to help Local Councils and the State Council assess our organization's effectiveness, and should not be construed as an effort to coerce conformity of any kind. In fact, we welcome your suggestions as to how these criteria might be expanded or revised."

Matthias also noted that the established criteria would be used by the Credentials and Awards Committee in choosing the outstanding Local Council for the year. This award is presented each year at the SCCHR Annual Meeting. Matthias urged the Local Council officers to, "Begin now to see that your's is doing all that it can to be in the running for this honor."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING: THE SCCHR Board of Directors will hold an important meeting September 26, at the Holiday Inn Northwest (at the intersection of Interstate 26 and US 1), in Columbia. The meeting will begin promptly at 10:00 A.M., and last to 3:00 P.M. Lunch will be served. Paul Anthony, Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council, will be the featured speaker.

LOCAL COUNCIL NEWS

AIKEN: For the fifth year running, the Aiken County CHR sponsored the SUMMER TUTORIAL PROGRAM, a project designed to enhance the level of educational achievement of local Black high school students.

This summer's program was staffed by three students from the University of California at Berkeley, Maureen Kenny, Bradford Madson, and Jeffrey Warren, and one student from Harvard University, Judy Halpern. All had prior teaching experience.

The program was conducted at the Schofield campus of the Aiken public school system, and courses were offered in math, literature, and history, with an emphasis on Black studies. Math tests were furnished by the public schools, but all other books and materials were furnished by Program funds.

Students were charged only $5 tuition for the six-week session, contingent on their ability to pay. The bulk of Program funds came from two foundation grants of $700 each, and contributions amounting to almost $800. Reimbursement received by the four instructors covered costs of travel and room and board, only.

Aiken Council member Dr. David G. Karraker, who serves as chairman of the Summer Tutorial Committee, said he felt the Program was achieving some real success. He noted that three graduates of the Program had last year received scholarships on the basis of their scores on the National Merit Test.

President of the Aiken County Council is Willar Hightower.

CHERAW: SCCHR Board member Gladyce Cole has been especially active this summer in her capacity as consultant to the United Presbyterian Church's PROJECT BRIDGE. The experimental Project is being fostered by the Church in an attempt, "to help us to be willing to change and to see the interrelatedness of change in knowledge, values, skills and relationships with people," according to Mrs. Cole. There are some sixteen pilot efforts under PROJECT BRIDGE in communities across the country.

One of the pilot efforts is in Cheraw, where Mrs. Cole's husband, SCCHR member John S. Cole, is Project Director. Indications are that it was one of the most successful in the nation. With the cooperation of several churches in the community, the Chesterfield-Marlboro OEO agency, and some assistance from the City Government, the Project provided a wide range of community activities for a six-week period beginning June 22 and concluding August 3.

Activities included child care centers, classes in arts, crafts and sewing, and in math, music, english, drama, Black studies, and physical education. Courses were also offered in the evenings on such subjects as business law, insurance, drug abuse, land ownership, and government.

Although Mrs. Cole was disappointed in the amount of White participation in the activities, she said the Project had been "very successful" over-all, and she expressed the hope that more communities could be involved in similar efforts next summer.

GREENVILLE: Executive Director Paul Matthias was on hand Friday, August 21, for a reception given by Greenville CHR members in honor of former SCCHR and Greenville CHR President Fred Reese. Reese is leaving for a year's study at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass. The reception was held at the Birnie Street YMCA in Greenville.

TIM ROGERS

UNIONISM IN SOUTH CAROLINA

On Tuesday, August 25th, I had the opportunity to view personally the manifestations of the growing union movement in South Carolina. On that evening, I attended the first open meeting of workers at the Crafts-Farrow State Hospital, who are organizing under the auspices of Local 1199, Hospital and Drug Workers Union, AFL-CIO.

Underground organization had been going on for some time, totally unknown to the administration at Crafts-Farrow, or any agencies of state government. Out of some 400 eligible workers, over 260 had signed union cards by the close of the meeting on the 25th.

The degree of initial response, coupled with the fact that the movement was kept underground so successfully, are testimony both to the courage and determination of the workers, and to the seriousness of their grievances.

Franchot Brown, the Columbia attorney who has served to catalyze the unionization effort, will quickly reel off a long list of workers grievances to any skeptic; low wages (many workers are receiving only $1.30 per hour, which is $.30 below the national minimum wage level), a vague and inequitable grievance system, blatant discrimination against Black workers in ratings, promotions, and hence wages, blatant discrimination against Black patients. According to Brown, the situation at Crafts-Farrow now is worse than the situation was at Medical College and County hospitals in Charleston before the strikes there.

In this context, organization was not difficult. It took less than two months to get almost 3/4 of the workers signed up. Tuesday night, one could not help but see workers' anger and frustration changing to elation at their newly-found unity, and resolute determination to see through their fight for justice and dignity.

At the same meeting, representatives of the Orangeburg Chapter of Local P-61, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen's Union, came to express their support for the new Columbia 1199, and to publicize their own strike against the Azalea Meat Company. The Orangeburg strike has been on for some fifteen weeks, and the union has recently organized a consumer boycott against the company's products. Although the union members are suffering heavy financial burdens because of the strike, union president and strike committee chairman Woodrow Morgan said that not one striking worker has gone back to work. That's solidarity.

As in the case of the workers at Crafts-FArrow, a review of the list of grievance at the Azelea Plant sheds considerable light as to why such solidarity exists: Ventilation at the plant is so bad that the management has had substantial difficulty finding "scabs", or strike-breakers, willing to work in the oppressive heat; fringe benefits such as insurance programs, etc., are all but non-existant; the company has been unwilling to employ a check-off system--even though the union long ago was certified as having been designated by a majority of the workers to represent them; and wages at the plant are so low that, under the wage scale the union is now challenging, some workers actually qualified to receive food stamps.

One guage of the curious morality of our state has been the willingness of its power structure to force our working brothers and sisters to bear the burden of our "progress." State officials have made no secret of the fact that a key argument used in luring industries is the generally low level of wages paid industrial workers in the state. An unholy alliance of politicians and management keeps wages low by demagogic exploitation of fears and prejudices of backlash-prone working-class Whites, and in some cases, Blacks, with tyrades against "communistic" unions, and by harsh recrimination against participants in organizational efforts. Managers and investers continue to get rich from expanding industrialization in the state, and the lot of the workers, who often are only too grateful for any improvement in their former conditions - when there were no jobs available at all - remains the same; low wages, poor working conditions, minimal benefits, state laws extremely unfavorable to workers - in short, second-class citizenship.

State government thus has a stake in keeping unions out of South Carolina. And with their being so committed to keeping unions out of private industry, the power structure's adamant position against public employee unions is not difficult to understand.

So the odds and the obstacles are great. But they are not so great that they can stop the union movement in South Carolina, which, after an erratic history, appears to be strongly on the upswing.

The Charleston strike was great victory, and was marked by an encouraging amount of participation by other unions in the state. The Crafts-Farrow and Orangeburg efforts will hopefully have similar outcomes, and become chapters in the story of a new emergence of unionism in the state and region.

Perhaps even the sluggish Textile Workers Union of America (TWUA) could be prodded into newer, more realistic organizational drives.

And perhaps the dream of southern progressives -- a coalition of Blacks and working class Whites -- may prove in the end not to be completely pollyana.

WE CAN HELP

Columbia 1199 and the Orangeburg Chapter of Local P-61, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers Workmen's Union, need the help of South Carolinians who subscribe to their courageous efforts for justice and dignity. These proud people are fighting to help themselves, and in a larger sense, all working people in South Carolina Shall we let them bear the burden of that fight alone?

Columbia 1199 needs money to continue its organizational work. Contributions should be sent to: Columbia 1199, P. O. Box 1056, Columbia, S. C., 29202.

In Orangeburg, Local P-61 workers have been living on $30 per week allotments from their union since their strike began fifteen weeks ago. With school starting, these men are under trememdous financial pressure. They are standing firm, but they are in real need of assistance. Contributions should be sent to: Strike Commitee, Local P-61, Orangeburg Chapter, c/o Mr. Woodrow Morgan, P.O. Box 929, Orangeburg, S.C. 29115.

An essential part of the Orangeburg union's effort to win a settlement is the boycott of all Azalea Meats, Inc., products. The boycott has already cut Azalea's sales in half. But more is needed. We can help by not buying any products processed by Azalea Meats, Inc. of Orangeburg.

What services are offered by FHF?

1. A referral service provides information to persons who want to buy, sell, or rent, especially in racially-integrated neighborhoods. Information may be obtained by calling 256-7456 on weekdays between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. There is no charge for use of the service.

2. Volunteers are available as guides to assist potential buyers or renters. The guides may drive interested parties to residences in which they are interested. They may also make inquiries of owners to determine if property is being offered on a non-discriminatory basis.

3. Friends of fair housing are alerted when new residents move in so that the newcomers can make friends, learn about available schools, and become acquainted with local commercial services.

4. A speakers' bureau provides the names of active members of FHF who can discuss fair housing with religious, civic, real estate, and other organizations.

5. A legal referral service (available also at 256-7456) informs persons of fair housing laws and how legal service can be obtained to insure enforcement.

6. FHF works with real estate brokers and agents in solving difficult problems that arise in serving all buyers and sellers on a non-discriminatory basis.

What would be accomplished if fair housing became a reality?

The first and most important result would be another step in reaching our national ideal of equality for all.

Another result would almost certainly be increased understanding between people of different races. Fear, distrust, and prejudice are hard to maintain when people get to know each other personally. As long as blacks and whites live in separate residential areas, they have few opportunities to understand the feelings of the other group. Yet when blacks and whites become neighbors, understanding and good will are given a chance to grow.

A third result of fair housing is that it would help to solve the problem of public school integration. School zones could be drawn to include a fair sampling of the population. The "neighborhood school" could focus on education per se, instead of being distracted by political and legal problems.

Fourth, the danger of "blockbusting" would be decreased. Many whites still maintain the illusion that by moving they can escape their moral and legal obligation to the total community. This frame of mind makes it possible for unscrupulous real estate dealers to use scare tactics, panic whites into selling, and then profit off the inflated prices that blacks must pay. Whites often fear their property values will decrease if blacks move into the neighborhood. Where fair housing is practiced, this fear is proved to be groundless, "blockbusters" are frustrated, and blacks and whites keep their dollars, their senses, and their self-respect.

Finally, fair housing would make it possible for blacks and whites to enrich each others' lives. Each person and family can be themselves, but they can also be friends to others. Black and white are both beautiful.

What do the fair housing laws say?

The 1968 Fair Housing Act made it illegal to:

- refuse to sell, rent, or deal with any qualified person on any basis that is discriminatory according to race, creed, or national origin.
- make different terms and conditions for buying or renting housing
- advertise that housing is available only to certain persons
- deny that housing is available for inspection, sale, or rental when it actually is
- "blockbust," that is, to persuade someone to sell housing by saying that minority groups are moving into the vicinity
- threaten or intimidate persons who intend to rent or sell property to minority group persons
- deny or make different terms for home loans
- deny the use of real estate services, such as broker or multiple listing service

The 1968 law does not cover one-family houses sold by the owner, or owner-occupied apartments of four or less units. However, in June, 1968, in Jones vs. Mayer, the United States Supreme Court ruled that an 1866 law prohibits all racial discrimination in the sale or rental of property. This ruling means that it is illegal for anyone—homeowner, tenant, or real estate agent—to discriminate.

To report violations of these laws, call:

If you are identified with a majority group:

1. Obey the law in your own transactions.
2. Make known to real estate agents and brokers who handle your property for sale or rent that you expect them to make the property available to persons of all races, nationalities, and religions.
3. Welcome into your neighborhood any new neighbor and let your neighbors know you intend to remain in the neighborhood.
4. Should you decide to move, consider moving into a racially-integrated area.

If you are identified with a minority group:

1. Obey the law and register complaints with the United States Attorney General when you know of violations.
2. Be willing to look at property in all areas when you are considering a move.
3. Try to avoid moves into neighborhoods that are more than thirty per cent black.
4. Show good will to residents of majority groups who live in your neighborhood.

Everyone can support fair housing by:

1. Signing the FHF pledge.
2. Contributing money to FHF.
3. Calling FHF (256-7456) when you know of property for sale or rent, especially in the $10,000 to $25,000 price range.
4. Calling FHF (256-7456) when you know of buyers or renters who are looking for housing and are willing to live in an integrated neighborhood.
5. Volunteering to work for FHF as a housing guide, office worker, speaker, or in some other capacity.
6. Organizing a neighborhood group in your block that would encourage enforcement of the law, promote stabilization, and build a dialogue between blacks and whites.

Dear Mr. Baker:

I am writing in reference to your letter some time ago concerning Houston or any other city in Texas that has statute or ordinance prohibiting discrimination in the sale or rental housing or including a prohibition against "blockbusting" tactics. We don't know of any such municipality in Texas. If we here of such we would be more than glad to inform you.

Dear Mr. Black:

I enjoyed meeting with you last Friday during the Urban League's visit to our Equal Opportunity Office.

To further explain our arrangements with the Dade County Fair Housing and Equal Employment Commission, let me say that no formal agreement exists between this Department and Mr. Frank Cannon's Commission regarding the handling of complaints. When I met with him earlier this year, I explained to him that, pending further notice from our Washington Office, we would handle any Dade County Fair Housing complaint which was forwarded to us. We did, however, agree to notify Mr. Cannon of the receipt of any such complaint, and he indicated he would give us any information he then had on any such complaint, or any past history he knew of the Respondent named.

Additionally, Mr. Cannon agreed to notify us and refer to us any complaint he had which was covered by our law and not by the local ordinance. The only type complaint likely to fall in this category would be one too old under the local statue of limitations, but not too old under our law.

Since I spoke last to Mr. Cannon (around March or April of this year) this office has not received any complaints from Miami-Dade. When we spoke to the Urban League around the same time period, we made an effort to bring that office up to date on our handling of a group of complaints referred to us earlier through Urban League's efforts. At that time we were told that Urban League was making an effort to cooperate with Mr. Cannon's office and would probably continue to refer complaints there initially.

I have no up-to-date analysis of how well Mr. Gannon's efforts are succeeding. In all honesty, however, I must tell you that our small staff and backlog of complaints make it difficult for us to handle complaints with the speed which is often necessary to get positive results. We are not jealous of our jurisdiction and are only too happy to get help from local enforcement agencies. It stands to reason that Mr. Gannon, unless he is overwhelmed with complaints, could perhaps give you better service than an office located hundreds of miles away. On the other hand, we feel that we have a good, professional staff and can achieve results. We welcome any Miami-Dade complaint alleging housing discrimination that you may wish to forward for handling by this office. I am enclosing a supply of complaint forms for your use, should you decide to forward complaints which come to your attention.

Other material which you might wish to pass on to complainants is also enclosed. Please contact us if we can be of further assistance.

Sincerely yours,

PROVISIONS OF EFFECTIVE OPEN HOUSING LEGISLATION

Following is a listing of the ~~general provisions~~ essential elements which an effective state or local open housing law should contain. The discussion is intended to provide a layman's guide to an effective law. ~~Local governments may write HUD~~ or the Department of Justice, Civil Rights Division for ~~legal and technical assistance in drafting an ordinance.~~

1. Prohibitions. - The law should enumerate a comprehensive list of forbidden discriminatory acts. This would include discrimination in the sale or rental of housing, the financing of housing, and in the provision of brokerage services. Title VIII of the Federal 1968 Fair Housing Act is a good model to follow in listing prohibitions.

2. Coverage. - The law's prohibitions should apply to all housing. No convincing rationale exists ~~(other than perhaps a lack of enforcement machinery)~~ for limiting coverage to certain categories of housing. If discrimination in housing is an evil, it is an evil in every case.

3. Enforcement.- (a) Responsibility for enforcement should be vested in a special ~~commission~~ enforcement agency with authority to receive, investigate, and conciliate complaints. The ~~commission~~ agency should have adequate professional staff to carry out its duties effectively and promptly. Time delays in correcting discriminatory housing practices can often prove very costly to the person discriminated against and discourage ~~the complainant~~ him from seeking

~~his~~ legal redress. ~~guarantee to fair housing.~~ (b) In cases where conciliation fails to provide redress, the law should authorize the ~~an~~ agency ~~enforcement agency~~ to hold hearings on the dispute and, where the evidence justifies it, to mete out appropriate penalties, and to order the accused discriminator to take appropriate remedial action.

The agency ~~Complainants~~ should have an opportunity to enforce complainants' ~~their~~ rights through the issuance of an administrative equivalent of temporary ~~and permanent~~ injunctions or ~~and~~ temporary restraining orders, it also ~~and~~ should be empowered to seek permanent injunctions in the court on complainant's behalf, at least in circumstances where it has become evident that conciliation agreements or agency orders after hearing are not being obeyed. The law ~~also~~ should explicitly provide for the awarding of compensatory and punitive damages, and payment of ~~court~~ costs and attorney's fees by the ~~guilty party~~ respondent where he has been adjudged liable. ~~The protection and enforcement of rights through the issuance of temporary and permanent injunctions, temporary restraining orders, conduct of hearings, award of compensatory and punitive damages, court costs and attorney's fees in appropriate cases.~~

~~Temporary injunctive powers to~~ Power to temporarily restrain a respondent to force the holding of property can prevent the accused party from disposing of the property ~~in question~~ until the facts have been established and, where appropriate, a settlement ~~is~~ has been reached. (c) The law should provide that the complainant may ~~file~~ seek relief through the courts if the above administrative proceedings fail, and (d) The law should provide that realtors or salesmen found to have engaged in discriminatory practices ~~guilty of discrimination~~ should be subject to revocation proceedings. ~~have their~~ license ~~revoked.~~

4. Intimidation of Complainant. - There should ~~not~~ be no provisions which impose any obligation ~~expenditures~~ on a complainant to post bond, or which ~~would~~ inhibit the filing of complaints ~~or the filing of a sup-~~

A. The agency should have powers, for example, to issue ~~issuance~~ to enforce the law through the issuance of an administrative equivalent of temporary injunctions or temporary restraining orders. This power to temporarily ~~restrain~~ restrain a respondent* ~~[illegible]~~ ~~him to hold~~ can prevent him from disposing of the property until the facts have been established and, where appropriate, a settlement has been reached.

Ft. *Term "The respondent" refers to the person accused of discriminating.

c) The enforcement agency also should be empowered to seek permanent injunctions against the respondent in situations where ~~case~~ the terms of conciliation agreements or agency orders after hearing are violated.

d) The law should provide explicitly for the awarding of compensatory and punitive damages and for the payment of costs and attorney's fees by the respondent where he has been judged liable.

(e) The law should provide that the complainant may seek relief through the courts if the administrative proceedings fail, and

(f) The law should provide that realtors or salesmen found to have engaged in discriminatory practices should be subject to license revocation proceedings.

4. Intimidation of Complaints - There should be no provision which imposes any obligation on a complainant to post bond or which cites a special penalty for the making of a false complaint.

~~plementary suit authorized by law.~~ In addition to setting up statewide enforcement machinery,

6. Metropolitan Jurisdiction. - State laws should authorize cities and counties to cooperate in forming ~~single~~ metropolitan enforcement agency to administer open housing laws throughout metropolitan areas.

5. Special Services. - Ideally, the law should impower the commission not only to investigate complaints of housing discrimination but to carry out an affirmative open housing program. This might include, for example, operation of reference services to help people find housing.

The complexity of the issues which arise from attempts to locate subsidized housing outside areas of existing racial concentrations is demonstrated by the story of one housing project in Atlanta.

/Following is outline of what the we could report here./

1. HUD approval of AHA's decision to build housing in Red Oak; Thompson's intervention.

2. Review the typical arguments made for and against public housing (property values, educational facilities, jobs, etc.)

3. Red Oak project now held up by court action; 2 other projects also held up.

4. Review broad policy issues reflected in the dispute.

   a. Need to build housing throughout metro area (cite recent policy statements of ARMPC), need for AHA to initiate a land bank program to meet housing needs on a rational basis.)

   b. Role of citizen participation; need for educational ~~activities.~~ activities.

   c. Examples of more progressive political leadership:

      (1) ARMPC
      (2) Mayor Massell's support; Andrew Young's proposal for "New Towns," racially and economically integrated, within existing cities.

The city of New Orleans is just beginning to make significant political and social changes after years of lethargy.

1. Has ~~the~~ new mayor elected on basis of new coalition.

2. City has adapted a scattered site housing program, but finds it difficult to implement.

   a. Only 600 of proposed 3000 units have been built.

   b. New Orleans Housing Authority is described by N.O. Human Relations Committee staff and N. O. religious leaders as "archaic," accused of generating opposition to scattered housing rather than support.

3. One public housing project - Desire - is extreme example of the negative results of isolating minority groups.

   a. Social facts about income, educational levels; crime; flooding.

   b. Surrounded on three sides by tracks, industrial canal.

   c. Location of the violence which recently errupted in New Orleans.

Nashville:

In February, 1967, the Tennessee State Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights made 16 recommendations as to how housing ought to be improved in Nashville. Among those recommendations were the following:

1. The metro government should abandon a policy of concentrating "a large group of decent people in barrack-type projects in monotonous repetition of identical structures and adapt a policy of dispersal throughout the county.

2. Federal funds should be withdrawn from the Nashville Housing Authority until plans are made to disperse new public housing. At a minimum ". . . the proposed construction of 500 more public housing units adjacent to 380 existing units in the Edgehill area must be rejected."

3. Metro government should adapt a open housing ordinance [this information should go above in section on local housing laws.]

/Suggest we talk with appropriate persons in Nashville to see if any of the recommendations were approved. Action or inaction in Nashville should provide another example of the progress or lack thereof toward building scattered housing./

MISSISSIPPI NEGRO OFFICIALS MEET, CONQUER BOND PROBLEM

Negro elected officials in Mississippi, brought together Dec. 14-15 in Jackson by the Voter Education Project, met and overcame a common problem facing them.

The newly elected officials, noting that practically all of them were having difficulty getting bonded to take office, adopted a resolution at the end of the two-day meeting calling on the U. S. Department of Justice for assistance.

Eighteen of the newly elected officials were present at the history-making Jackson meeting. At the time of the meeting, only three of the 18 had been able to obtain bond.

A few days later, however, the Negro officials were receiving their bonds. The Wall Street Journal of Dec. 21 credited it to "the glare of publicity."

In a telegram sent to the U. S. attorney general, the newly elected officials pointed out that "immediate action" was necessary, since they could not take the oath of office until they had obtained bond.

The bonding matter was but one of a long list of subjects discussed at the two-day meeting. Other discussions covered the duties and responsibilities of office, Mississippi government, the Negro and economic issues, relationship to the federal government, the Negro in the political process, serving the public, and dealing with the press.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project, opened the Institute for Mississippi Negro Elected Officials by telling those attending that their performance in office "will blaze the trail for others who will follow."

The Voter Education Project brought specialists from within and without Mississippi to Jackson to lead the discussions. Several themes came up repeatedly during the morning, afternoon and evening sessions of the two-day

5 NEGROES WIN LOUISIANA RUNOFFS

Five Negroes scored victories in runoff elections in Louisiana on Dec. 16, bringing to 34 the number of Negro winners in that state in 1967 primaries.

There were 29 Negro winners in the first primary Nov. 4.

The five Dec. 16 winners consisted of four police jurors and one parish Democratic committee member.

Elected to the Orleans Parish Democratic Committee was the Rev. Avery C. Alexander. Winning nomination as police jurors were Joseph M. Davis and Anderson Yancy, St. Mary Parish; Raymond Julien, Ascension Parish; and the Rev. O. L. Virgil, East Carroll Parish.

The number of first primary winners was boosted to 29 (instead of 28, as reported in the last issue of V. E. P. News) when Richard Turnley was declared winner of a seat on the East Baton Rouge Parish Democratic Committee. Turnley ran slightly behind another Negro candidate,

THREE FLORIDA CITIES ELECT NEGRO CANDIDATES

Three Florida cities elected Negroes to their governing bodies in recent elections. In two cities, the new officeholders are the first of their race to be elected to such positions.

Mrs. Athalie Range swept to an impressive victory to Miami's City Commission on Nov. 21. She polled 26,430 votes—more even than a candidate for mayor who captured 81 per cent of the vote.

Delray Beach's first Negro city councilman is O. F. Youngblood, who won a runoff election by defeating three whites, including the incumbent.

Earl Johnson and Oscar Taylor swept to victory over white Republican opponents in Jacksonville's Dec. 5 general election, thus winning posts on the City Council.

Three other Negroes previously had been elected in Jacksonville. Mrs. Sallye Mathis and Mrs. Mary Singleton were elected to the City Council, and Charles E. Simmons Jr. was elected to the Civil Service Board.

In Homestead, Fla., a Negro is in a runoff for City Commission. Jesse Robinson ran sixth in a 10-man primary race.

In Houston, Tex., meanwhile, Bill Wood lost his bid for a Texas House seat in a Dec. 5 runoff. He was defeated by a white Republican by a margin of almost two-to-one, although the district was considered Democratic.

In Virginia's Greensville County, Garland Faison was a successful write-in candidate for justice of the peace. His victory brought the total of Negro winners in Virginia's general elections to seven.

Frank Parker, U. S. Civil Rights Commission attorney, is shown delivering the luncheon address at a one-day training institute for Arkansas school directors. The Arkansas Voter Education Project sponsored the institute, which was held at Arkansas A. M. & N. College at Pine Bluff.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

Jackson Meeting Historic Moment In Mississippi

Much of the joy of working for the Voter Education Project is being able to watch history being made at close range. Still greater joy comes from being able to have a hand in a history-making event.

We of VEP were proud to have had a hand in a historic event that took place in Jackson, Miss., on Dec. 14-15. On those two days, at the Downtowner Motor Inn in Jackson, 18 of the 22 recently elected Negro officials in Mississippi met for two days of inspiring discussion.

During the Southern Regional Council's first Voter Education Project (1962-64), financial aid to registration projects in Mississippi had to be suspended because the hostile, threatening and intractable atmosphere prevailing in Mississippi made the cost of registration programs exorbitant.

When the 1965 Voting Rights Act went into effect, only 35,000 Negroes were registered in Mississippi. This was but 8.3 per cent of the Negro voting-age population. Today more than 200,000 Negroes are registered to vote in Mississippi, or over 47 per cent of the Negro voting-age population.

So while there is much, much more that the federal government could be doing to secure political rights for Mississippi Negroes, the Voting Rights Act has made a difference. The Act opened doors. Now, at any rate, it is feasible for VEP to make grants in Mississippi. So during 1967, VEP funded about 30 civil rights and community organizations in Mississippi for voter registration and citizenship education activities.

For generations, Negroes were excluded from political participation in Mississippi by law, custom, and bigotry. Many Americans—black and white alike—struggled, sacrificed, bled and died so that black people in Mississippi could have dignity and the ballot.

The result of all these efforts sat before us in the Downtowner motel in Jackson on Dec. 14-15.

Except for a school board member elected last year, the 22 Negroes elected this year are the first at the county level in Mississippi since Reconstruction days. Their elections do not mean, of course, that there has been a complete and overnight change in Mississippi. Far from it. It still takes real courage in much of Mississippi for a Negro to register, vote and run for office.

So these are bold people who are going forth into the still-hostile and dangerous atmosphere that hangs over Mississippi to serve as constables, justices of the peace, supervisors and legislators. Already they have learned that every obstacle and every technicality will be placed in their way. And as Clarence Mitchell said, the eyes of the world are upon them. They will be judged by standards far higher than any ever applied to white officeholders, high or low, in Mississippi.

As I remarked in Jackson, we in the Voter Education Project look forward to the day when the 22 officeholders will be 44, the 44 will be 88, and the 88 in the hundreds. How soon that day will come depends largely on how the 22 perform in office. They are blazing the trail.

As we observed how intently the newly elected officials listened to every discussion, we had every reason to believe that they will perform well. Our purpose in holding the two-day institute in Jackson was to do our part to see that they have every opportunity to do so. —VERNON E. JORDAN.

MISSISSIPPI OFFICIALS MEET IN JACKSON

institute. The more prominent themes were these:

1. Mississippi Negro officeholders will have their every move watched and will have to perform especially well. Frank Smith, a director of the Tennessee Valley Authority and a former Mississippi congressman, compared their position to that of Jackie Robinson breaking into major league baseball. Said Smith, who spoke at the opening session: "You're going to have to do better than average if you're going to do anything to better the Negro's position in politics."

Later on the first day, Jackson attorney Jack Young warned the elected officials that "the least little technicality may be used to try to get you out of office." Young added: "You had to fight to get your office, and you'll have to fight to keep it."

2. With more than 200,000 Negroes registered to vote (against only 35,000 when the 1965 Voting Rights Act went into effect), the time may come when Mississippi will outshine other states in the openness and fairness of its government.

"There's no reason for Negroes to go looking for a promised land in California or somewhere else," said Dr. Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College, in a luncheon address. "The promised land is right here, right under your feet."

"Twenty-five years from now," predicted Bayard Rustin, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, in a dinner address, "Mississippi will be among the most progressive states in the union."

3. The time is in sight when candidates will be elected in Mississippi on the basis of their stands, without regard to race.

"In a few years," asserted Smith, "there'll be no candidate elected who hasn't sought the Negro vote."

4. Despite what happened in the period following Reconstruction, there will be no turning back this time by the federal government in enforcing Negro political rights. Smith and State Sen. Horace Ward of Atlanta were among the speakers who took this position.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau, underscored several of the recurring themes in his luncheon address on the second day.

"Your election to public office is one of the finest developments in our country's history," Mitchell told the new officials. "You may well set examples that will make this state a model of good government and progress. The eyes of the nation and the world are upon you."

Sen. Ward and Georgia Rep. Julian Bond appeared on a panel called "Serving the People." Aaron Henry of Clarksdale was moderator. Atlanta Alderman Q. V. Williamson was delayed in arriving for the panel, but he spoke briefly at a later session.

Clarence Mitchell, Flanked by Atlanta Alderman Q. V. Williamson and Aaron Henry of Clarksdale.

A panel on the duties and responsibilities of various county offices featured Ruben Anderson and Paul Brest of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, and Young.

Participating in a panel on dealing with the press were William Raspberry of the The Washington Post; Dave Emmons, a former Chicago newsman; W. F. Minor, Jackson correspondent for The New Orleans Times-Picayune; and Marvin Wall, VEP research director. Claude Ramsay, president of the Mississippi AFL-CIO, was moderator.

Robert B. Fitzpatrick of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law joined Jordan, the lawyer panel, and several others in a closing discussion on special problems facing Mississippi Negro officials. It was at the end of this final session that the telegram to the attorney general was drafted.

Mrs. Martin L. Harvey, member of the Southern Regional Council's executive committee, presided over the dinner session at which Rustin spoke. Weldon Rougeau, VEP field director, handled introductions at the opening session.

The 22 Negroes who won this year were the first Negroes in Mississippi elected to county-level offices since Reconstruction, except for one elected last year to a school board. Those who attended the Jackson meeting were:

Kermit Stanton, supervisor, Bolivar County; Alexander Collins, justice of peace, Claiborne County; Geneva Collins, chancery clerk, Claiborne County; Leander Monroe, constable, Claiborne County; William Matt Ross, supervisor, Claiborne County; Dan Ferguson, justice of peace, Coahoma County; Charlie Jones, justice of peace, Coahoma County; Robert G. Clark, state representative, Holmes County; Griffin McLaurin, constable, Holmes County; Melvin Smith, constable, Issaquena County; Matthew Walker, justice of peace, Issaquena County; Sylvester Gaines, supervisor, Jefferson County; Earlie Lott, constable, Jefferson County; Martha Lee, justice of peace, Jefferson County; Willie Thompson, justice of peace, Jefferson County; U. S. Rimmer, justice of peace, Madison County; McEwen Walker, constable, Marshall County; and James Jolliff Jr., supervisor, Wilkinson County.

REVIEWERS HAIL 'JACOB'S LADDER'

"Climbing Jacob's Ladder," a recent book about the Southern Regional Council's two Voter Education Projects, continues to win acclaim. Friends and associates of VEP who have not yet read this book will want to do so as soon as possible. Here are excerpts from some recent reviews of "Climbing Jacob's Ladder":

• Robert Coles in New Republic: " 'Climbing Jacob's Ladder'. . . . is a scholarly text, crammed full of facts, documents and statistics that will be indispensable to future historians and political scientists. Yet even more valuable is something else that comes across on every page: a 'feel' for what makes social change, for what can happen between individuals and their government, given the 'right' moment. In other words, Pat Watters and Reese Cleghorn not only want to record what happened, they want to tell how it all happened, and how it felt as it was happening. . . .

"They have written a beautiful book: beautiful in its blend of documentation and passion; beautiful in its clear direct language; beautiful in its persistent fairness to what really happened . . . and finally, beautiful in its stubborn refusal to make flashy, appealing generalizations about a region that has always been prey to the global and partisan conclusions of its observers."

• Ralph McGill in The Atlanta Constitution: " 'Climbing Jacob's Ladder' is a fine book—disturbing, yet not without hope. It is a necessary book for those who 'want to know.' "

• Kirkus Literary Service: "Coming after a series of polemical works by Negro writers and by Northern liberals, this carefully written history of the golden years of the civil rights movement provides the facts and the overview necessary to make judgments on the successes and failures of one of the great social revolutions in this nation's experience. . . . The authors go beyond history to give a superb profile of the many Negro organizations that worked the rights field and the sociological outlook that informed their labors."

• Atlanta Magazine: " 'Climbing Jacob's Ladder' is vital to an understanding of today—to Black Power, the new violence, and the rise of separatism. It is also as vital to an understanding of the region as Cash's 'The Mind of the South' and—critics are predicting—its impact will be as lasting."

• John Raymond in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution: "Negroes are arriving in Southern politics, but they haven't arrived. Jacob's ladder still has rounds going higher, higher. Cleghorn and Watters are optimistic in their book but their optimism is tempered considerably by a realistic appreciation of the facts of Southern life. . . . The book is charged with emotion. No passionate out-bursts, no harangues, no soap-boxing—but the quietly intense kind of emotion that accompanies deep conviction."

LOUISIANA WINNERS

Mrs. Anna F. Williams, in the first primary. However, Mrs. Williams bowed out of the race so that Turnley would be elected.

This left 49 Negro candidates in the runoffs, of whom five won victories. Negro candidates usually fare poorly in runoffs, since white votes often consolidate behind their opposition in second primaries.

Twenty-eight absentee ballots for Wally Oliver, a Negro candidate for the Police Jury in Iberville Parish, were invalidated, causing him to lose to his opponent, 436 to 411. If the absentee ballots had been counted, Oliver would have been a sixth runoff winner. A court suit is being filed.

The general election in Louisiana will be held Feb. 6. Table below shows Negro winners in the two primaries.

LOUISIANA INSTITUTE PLANNED MARCH 1-2

A two-day institute is being planned by the Voter Education Project for new Negro officeholders in Louisiana. The post-election institute will be similar to one held in December by VEP in Mississippi. Tentative dates for the Louisiana meeting are March 1-2.

GENERAL ELECTION NEXT IN LOUISIANA; 36 WINNERS COUNTED

Formal election is approaching for 27 Negroes who have won nominations to state and local offices in Louisiana. The state's general election will be held Feb. 6.

Most of the nominated candidates will be unopposed in the general election.

Nine Negroes won posts on parish Democratic committees in the first and second primaries, which were held in November and December. (The earlier listing by V.E.P. News of a Negro winner of a State Democratic Committee seat was in error. All nine winners were running for parish committees.)

There was a total of 36 Negro winners in Louisiana's first and second primaries. Two of these, both of Natchitoches Parish, are recent additions to VEP's list. They are Larry Barthazar, winner in the first primary for the position of constable, and Earl Roque, winner in the first primary for a seat on the Parish Democratic Committee.

Names, offices, and parishes of the 27 Negro candidates on the general election ballot are as follows:

Raymond Julien, police jury, Ascension
Watson Sanders, police jury, East Carroll
Rev. O. L. Virgil, police jury, East Carroll
Zelma Wyche, city marshal, Madison
Larry Barthazar, constable, Natchitoches
Ernest N. Morial, state representative, Orleans
Wesley Albert, justice of peace, Pointe Coupee
Charlie Harris, justice of peace, Pointe Coupee
Thomas Nelson, constable, Pointe Coupee
Sultan Cezar, justice of peace, St. James Oliver Cooper, police jury, St. James

VEP PROGRAMS TOTAL 122 IN '67; BUSY YEAR AHEAD

The Voter Education Project funded a total of 122 programs during 1967, over 100 of which involved some phase of voter registration. This was 16 more programs than were funded in 1966.

Programs were assisted in all 11 Old South states.

VEP supported 60 voter registration drives during 1967, and 42 combined voter registration-citizenship education programs.

There were four citizenship education programs, six research grants, and seven leadership training programs.

Despite the relatively small number of the latter programs, leadership training constituted a major VEP undertaking during 1967. Briefings for Negro candidates were conducted in Louisiana and Mississippi. As were the Alabama and South Carolina briefings the year before, these one-day institutes for candidates were jointly conducted by VEP and the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

Two new leadership programs for Negro officeholders in the South were held in July and December.

The former, at Clark College in Atlanta, was for Negro mayors, city councilmen and county commissioners. The latter, held in a downtown motel in Jackson, Miss., was for newly elected Negro officials in Mississippi. Thirty-four officials attended the July meeting and 18 were present at the Mississippi meeting.

These meetings were similar to the seminar conducted by VEP in late 1966 for Negro legislators in the South.

VEP continued its assistance during 1967 of statewide VEPs in Arkansas and South Carolina, and assisted in the formation of the North Carolina Voter Education Project.

With 1968 activities already underway, VEP anticipates an even busier period this year.

'KNOW YOUR RIGHTS'

An additional 10,000 copies of "Know Your Rights" have been printed by the Voter Education Project. VEP's original supply of the illustrated booklet had been exhausted last fall. The booklet was prepared jointly by the Georgia ACLU and the Georgia Council on Human Relations.

NEW YORK TIMES SALUTES SCVEP

(Editor's Note: A news article about the South Carolina Voter Education Project appeared in The New York Times on Jan. 7. The editorial reprinted below appeared in The Times two days later.)

The least dramatic — and still most effective — way of changing laws, officeholders and even fixed public attitudes is at the polls. The call for violence and the deliberate act of defying laws of person and property are, unfortunately, what capture the headlines. But wild talk and irrational behavior do not equal, in results, the unglamorous work of registration and voting.

The South Carolina Voter Education Project is a case in point. Groups of volunteers there, including a number of college students, are working to have 250,000 Negroes on the polling books in time for the next presidential election. The conservative estimate is that more than 80,000 Negroes have registered in all 46 counties since the drive began in September. In six counties registered Negroes outnumber whites.

South Carolina's own liberalized election law has enabled many more Negroes to register. The books are open during regular hours, registration by mail is permitted, and many counties have at least one Negro deputy registrar.

The Southern Regional Council reports that Negro voter registration in the South increased 30 per cent, to 2.8 million, from 1964 to 1967. Some small but significant county and board of education offices in rural areas are occupied by Negroes as a result of elections. It is possible that in South Carolina and elsewhere Negroes will be placed on the ballot for higher offices.

It has happened in the North. The mayoralty, congressional and senatorial seats won by Negroes the last two Novembers did not go unnoticed. The effects of quiet, grassroots registration by Southern Negroes could have national importance for both parties in 1968.

ELECTIONS SLATED FEB. 27, MARCH 2 IN MISSISSIPPI

School trustees will be elected for all consolidated districts and some municipal districts in Mississippi on March 2.

Polls will be open from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m. March 2 is a Saturday.

There are 29 consolidated districts in Mississippi. Certain municipal districts that have expanded territory also will be electing trustees.

In addition, a special election will be held Feb. 27 to fill a vacant congressional seat from Mississippi's Third District.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

'68 To Be Busy; Advance Planning Always Important

As the reader can see from the election calendar on the opposite page, 1968 will be a busy year. It is hard to imagine a year busier than "non-election" 1967, but the pace is bound to be faster this year.

Seven Southern states will be electing U. S. senators. Four will be electing governors. All, of course, will be electing congressmen. And there will be hundreds of other state and local races—not to mention the presidential race.

And on that last point, this may be a good time to mention the rapid approach of precinct, county, district and state meetings to select delegates to the national party conventions. Each state has its own procedures for choosing convention delegates. This is a highly important step in the selection every four years of presidential and vice presidential candidates by our major parties. So right now is not a moment too soon to begin finding out what procedure will be followed in your own precincts, counties, districts and states.

And it is hoped that every friend and associate of VEP will carefully study the election calendar on Page 3. You will notice that some of the dates fall quite early in the year. In Texas, for example, the registration deadline already has passed. Other registration deadlines are coming up as early as April in Florida, North Carolina and Alabama. Primaries are coming in May in Texas, North Carolina, Florida and Alabama.

Georgia and Louisiana have the latest primaries, their runoffs coming in late September. The general election falls, of course, on Nov. 5, and it is possible to register for the general election as late as Oct. 26 in Alabama and North Carolina.

With so much election activity taking place, we expect scores of requests this year for VEP assistance in conducting voter registration, citizenship education, and leadership training programs. We cannot stress strongly enough the importance of careful advance planning in these requests.

It pains us to lend assistance to a registration program, for example, and then learn through reports—as we have several times—that the program was held up because the registration office had not been scheduled to stay open during the period of the program. Usually, this sort of thing can be avoided by foresight, proper attention to homework, and careful planning.

These are subjects that get considerable attention in the VEP booklet, "How To Conduct a Registration Campaign." None of us is so generously blessed that he is able to waste any talent, time, or money on poorly planned campaigns.

To assist local groups in this and other matters, VEP now has a full-time field director who will try to visit most, if not all, local programs this year.

In both 1966 and 1967, Negroes made marked political advances in the South. We hope—and expect—to see even greater advances made during 1968.

LSCRRC REPORTS ON MISSISSIPPI ELECTION

Numerous irregularities and cases of intimidation were noted in Mississippi's November general election by observers sent to the state by the Law Students Civil Rights Research Council.

Fifty-five law students from 23 colleges and universities were sent to Mississippi at the invitation of a number of local leaders. The Voter Education Project paid about one-fourth of the cost of the undertaking. The students were placed in nine counties.

"As anticipated," said LSCRRC's post-election summary of the observers' work, "the instances of election irregularities and intimidation of voters were frequent and general. When not observing the voting or the polls, the students spent election day protesting (sometimes unsuccessfully) and documenting illegal practices. The illegal practices took a variety of forms, some subtle and some blatant."

Irregularities, according to the report, included these:

- Pollwatchers were told the authorizations which they had were invalid.
- Pollwatchers were not allowed to watch the clerks who were responsible for determining whether an individual was eligible to vote.
- Pollwatchers were ejected for using voting lists in deciding who should or should not be challenged.
- Voters were told they were not registered in a particular precinct.
- Election managers failed to initial ballots of voters who requested assistance.
- Some allegedly ineligible voters were not permitted to cast challenged ballots.
- Pollwatchers and voters were not allowed to observe the vote tallying.

"One of the most frequent arguments which students had with election officials was over the right to bring sample ballots into the voting booth," the LSCRRC report continued. "In some instances election officials were persuaded to allow their use. Others allowed them only for voters who did not require assistance."

The report was highly critical of federal election observers.

"It was the almost unanimous opinion of the participating students," said the report, "that the federal observers are almost useless, and in many cases a deterrent to the fair conduct of the elections. The observers are invariably white Southerners who are indistinguishable from the local white election officials. In almost every instance they make no attempt to identify themselves as federal as distinguished from local officials. They are often openly friendly to the local whites and hostile to the local Negroes. In many cases they refuse to note irregularities. When they do note irregularities, they generally refuse to attempt to remedy them."

The students were placed in Bolivar, Carroll, Hinds, Holmes, Issaquena, Madison, Sunflower, Yazoo and Wilkinson counties. They "loosely coordinated" their activities, the report explained, with those of 25 lawyers sent to Mississippi by the Law Center for Constitutional Rights.

In addition to documenting election-day intimidation and irregularities, the students were engaged in three other tasks: voter education, technical advice to candidates, and orientation of pollwatchers. The latter, said the report, "turned out to be a major activity." The report had this to say about pollwatchers:

"On election day many of the pollwatchers performed very well, often causing the white election officials to refrain from persisting in their illegal conduct. In other situations the pollwatchers were not sufficiently aggressive, and illegal practices became the rule."

The report concluded by saying:

"In many instances irregularities were checked or remedied. In some areas the election was conducted in an almost fair

STATE NAACP REQUESTS EXAMINERS IN VIRGINIA

A resolution calling upon U. S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark to send federal examiners into Virginia has been adopted by the Virginia State Conference of Branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Also sent to the Justice Department was a Virginia NAACP county-by-county survey of complaints about registration difficulties and charges of voting irregularities.

The resolution urged Clark "to dispatch immediately federal registrars into every jurisdiction in Virginia where complaints have been received in order to prevent the continued discrimination against Negroes seeking to register to vote and to exercise their right to vote."

Thus far, no federal registrars have been sent into Virginia. It is the only state covered by the 1965 Voting Rights Act that has been so spared.

The Virginia NAACP resolution cited "numerous practices and techniques which are designed to effectively limit the opportunity to Negro citizens to qualify to vote and to effectively exercise their right to vote." The resolution listed these:

- Inconvenient and/or irregular hours of registrars.
- Location of places of registration in private homes.
- Unavailability of registrars during scheduled hours.
- Failure to give adequate notice of periods of registration.
- Failure to make available lists of qualified voters.
- Untimely purging of Negroes from voting rolls.
- Untimely shifting of location or boundaries of voting precincts.

The students came from these schools: Boston College, Boston University, Chicago, Colorado, Columbia, Emory, Fordham, Georgetown, George Washington, Harvard, Hastings, Howard, Michigan, New York University, Northwestern, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rutgers, San Diego, Stanford, Vanderbilt, University of Washington, and Yale.

NEW STATEWIDE VEP FORMED IN LOUISIANA

Formation of a Louisiana Voter Education Project, with William H. Samuel Jr. of Plaquemine as director, was announced in late March.

The Louisiana VEP, which has been in the planning stages for several months, was formed officially at a meeting held March 14 in Baton Rouge.

Chairman of the Louisiana VEP is Nils Douglas, prominent New Orleans attorney. Acie J. Belton of Baton Rouge and Eric L. Armstrong of Lake Providence are vice chairmen. Alphonse Jackson of Shreveport is secretary, Dr. Jewel Prestage of Baton Rouge is treasurer, and Louis Berry of Alexandria is legal counsel.

These officers and 12 other prominent Louisiana Negro leaders are the new organization's steering committee. Permanent officers and a board of directors will be elected later.

The Louisiana VEP is the fourth such statewide organization formed with assistance from the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council. The first was formed several years ago in South Carolina, followed in 1966 and 1967 by others in Arkansas and North Carolina.

The statewide VEPs bring together various civil rights and community groups in a single non-partisan organization working on programs of voter registration, citizenship education, and leadership training. Local funds are raised to supplement grants from the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Samuel, director of the new Louisiana VEP, is 40 years old. Since last June, he has been president of the influential Iberville Industrial Voters League. Before resigning to run unsuccessfully for clerk of court last year, Samuel worked for a year as assistant director of LeMoyne Community Action Inc., which is Iberville Parish's anti-poverty agency. Last summer Samuel administered the Four-Parish Voter Education Project, which operated in Iberville, Pointe Coupee, West Baton Rouge, and West Feliciana parishes with assistance from the Voter Education Project of SRC.

Born in the town of Plaquemine, Iberville Parish, Samuel served 20 years in the Army. He retired in 1966 with the rank of staff sergeant, having spent tours of duty in Germany, Japan, and Korea. A high school graduate, Samuel

JULIAN BOND MAKING SPECIAL VEP STUDY

Julian Bond, 28-year-old Georgia legislator from Atlanta, has been employed by the Voter Education Project to handle a special VEP research undertaking.

Mr. Bond began work as a research associate for VEP on March 11 just after the Georgia Legislature adjourned its regular session for 1968. His assignment is the preparation of a "how-to-do-it" booklet for Negro candidates, based on successful and unsuccessful campaigns of several dozen selected Negro candidates in the South.

The project is expected to take about 10 weeks. Mr. Bond already has started contacting Negro candidates from a list balanced between rural and urban candidates, and successful and unsuccessful candidates.

Mr. Bond was elected to the Georgia Legislature three times before he could be sworn in. His fight to take the seat to which he had been elected got national attention.

He was first elected to the Georgia House in 1965, but he was barred from taking office by legislators who objected to Mr. Bond's statements about the Viet Nam war. He then won a special election to fill the seat in February of 1966, but a special House committee again barred him.

Later in 1966, Rep. Bond won a third election. In December of 1966, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that Rep. Bond had been improperly barred by the Georgia Legislature. Finally, in January of 1967, he was sworn in.

Born Jan. 14, 1940, in Nashville, Tenn., Mr. Bond entered Morehouse College in 1957. In early 1960 he was a founder of the Committee on Appeal for Human Rights, an Atlanta University Center student organization that co-

34TH BOARD MEMBER ELECTED IN ARKANSAS

Support from two white areas paved the way March 12 for the election of John Wesley Smith, a Negro, to the North Little Rock, Ark., School Board.

Smith, a contractor who ran unsuccessfully three years ago, received strong support from Negro voters, but votes from two white areas gave him his victory margin. He defeated an incumbent, 1,589 to 1,382.

The Arkansas Gazette reported that Smith had the backing of two organizations described as progressive. His election brought the number of Negroes elected to school boards in Arkansas to 34.

In the Dollarway District of Jefferson County, meanwhile, Elijah Coleman lost in a second bid for a School Board post, this time by 188 votes. Coleman, who is executive director of the Arkansas Council on Human Relations, lost by 147 votes in a race against a different opponent last September.

JUSTICE TAKES A STEP FORWARD IN MISSISSIPPI

(Editor's Note: Vernon Dahmer was a voter registration leader in Hattiesburg, Miss. The editorial below appeared March 19, 1968, in The Atlanta Constitution.)

The murder of Vernon Dahmer was a particularly brutal one.

A group of men tossed gasoline-filled plastic jugs into his home one night in 1966, and set the house aflame. "Let him die," one of the assailants was heard to yell.

Last week a Mississippi court convicted Cecil Victor Sessum of murdering Dahmer. Sessum was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Under other circumstances, Sessum might have been given the death sentence . . . particularly had he been a Negro and his victim white, instead of the other way around.

But it was the first time in modern Mississippi history a white man had been convicted of murdering a Negro civil rights worker, and that represents progress, however slow.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

Evers Campaign Can't Be Called A Wasted Effort

Charles Evers lost by nearly 45,000 votes March 12 in his race for Congress, but it would be entirely wrong to call the vigorous and imaginative campaign that he waged a wasted effort. Indeed, in many ways it can be said that the Mississippi civil rights leader won an important moral victory.

Evers ran in the 12-county Third Mississippi District, in which white registration outnumbers Negro registration 125,000 to 70,000. Moreover, most of the latter are newly registered and inexperienced voters. (Only 35,000 Negroes were registered in the whole state prior to the Voting Rights Act.)

Working against these odds, Evers nevertheless led the field of seven candidates in the first election Feb. 27. He received 34,000 votes, or 30 per cent of the total. But, as so often happens in runoff elections, the white vote consolidated against Evers in the second election March 12. In the runoff Evers got 43,000 votes, or 33 per cent of the total.

Although soundly defeated, Mr. Evers is not discouraged. There is no reason why he should be. There are a number of positive aspects to his candidacy:

1. His was the first serious bid by a Negro for a major office in Mississippi since Reconstruction, giving Mississippi Negroes — many of them for the first time — a chance to vote for a candidate instead of trying to decide which candidate presented the lesser of evils.
2. Mr. Evers was an articulate candidate who was able to air — for the district, the state, and the nation — issues that needed to be aired regarding conditions in southwest Mississippi.
3. The Evers candidacy brought about a greater degree of unity among Mississippi Negroes. Symbolic of this was the fact that his campaign manager was Lawrence Guyot, chairman of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, with whom Mr. Evers frequently has differed in the past.
4. Mr. Evers proved that Mississippi Negroes are capable of mounting an effective and attention-getting political campaign. The Evers campaign was sophisticated, well-organized and well-planned.
5. Mr. Evers and his strong support compelled his white opponents to moderate their campaigns. Both Mr. Evers and his runoff opponent agreed that the campaign had not been racist. For Mississippi, this is a distinct break with the past.

Finally, and most important, the Evers candidacy demonstrated that the Negro vote in Mississippi is a force to be reckoned with and respected. In the first election, only 48 per cent of the Negro registration voted. In the runoff, however, the figure went to 61 per cent, which came reasonably close to matching the white turnout. The white turnout was about 65 per cent in the first election and about 70 per cent in the second.

"The mere fact that we were able to get Negroes involved is a victory for us," Evers said after the runoff. "The mere fact that we stopped our opponent from running a racist campaign shows a victory for us."

No doubt, Mississippi has a long road to travel before it breaks completely from racist politics. But history will record that the Evers candidacy was an important step down that long road.

VERNON E. JORDAN

Twenty-eight of 36 Negroes elected in Louisiana's recent balloting attended the two-day Institute for Louisiana Negro Elected Officials, which was held at the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans. One of the several workshop panels is at left. At the microphone is City Councilman Henry Marsh of Richmond, Va. Standing is Thad Olive, VEP administrative assistant, and seated is State Sen. Horace Ward of Georgia. At right, some of the elected officials are shown listening to a workshop speaker.

28 ATTEND LOUISIANA INSTITUTE

"Politics ought to mean for us a chance—and a good chance—of having something to say about what is being done to us. It is no more than that and no less: a hand in the solution of the white problem in America."

So stated Georgia Rep. Julian Bond in a dinner address March 1 at the VEP-sponsored Institute for Louisiana Negro Elected Officials. Twenty-eight of Louisiana's 36 newly elected Negro officials attended the two-day institute. The meeting was similar to one sponsored by VEP for Negro elected officials in Mississippi last December.

Rep. Bond said he was not contending "that politics is pure or that politics is the only, or even that politics is the best, method of solving the white problem in America."

He was only saying, the Atlanta legislator added, that "properly practiced, politics can win rewards. Properly applied, political pressure can pave streets, get garbage picked up, make schools better, bring jobs to the jobless and homes to the homeless."

Mr. Bond was one of several well-known speakers brought to Louisiana for the institute for Negro elected officials. Luncheon speakers were Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, on March 1 and Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College, on March 2.

Workshops were held during the mornings and afternoons of both days. One of the liveliest workshops came on the first day. With Rep. Ernest Morial of New Orleans presiding, a group of Louisiana lawyers—I. M. Augustine, Nils Douglas, A. P. Tureaud, and Murphy Bell—spoke on the duties and responsibilities of police jurors, constables, and justices of the peace.

Participants in other workshops were Dr. Edward F. Renwick, assistant professor of government at Louisiana State University in New Orleans; Dr. Jewel Prestage, chairman of the political science department at Southern University; Camille Gravel, prominent lawyer from Alexandria; Ronnie Moore, of the Scholarship, Education and Defense Fund for Racial Equality; James Chubbeck, director of the Institute of Politics at Loyola University in New Orleans; John Lewis, director of community organization, Southern Regional Council; Reese Cleghorn, associate editor of The Atlanta Journal; Sam Adams of The St. Petersburg, Fla., Times; Marvin Wall, VEP research director; Henry Marsh, Richmond, Va., city councilman; Sen. Horace Ward of Atlanta; and Rep. Bond.

At the conclusion of the institute, the Louisiana elected officials adopted a resolution condemning the use of identification requirements as a means of discriminating against Negroes seeking to register to vote. The resolution was sent to Gov. John McKeithen.

As the institute began, it became known that Stanley G. Johnson had been elected justice of peace in St. Mary Parish. Mr. Johnson attended the meeting. He had not previously been included in VEP's listing of officials elected in Louisiana.

The two-day meeting was held at the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans. Elected officials attending were:

The Rev. Avery C. Alexander, Parish Democratic Committee, Orleans Parish; Morris Barnes, constable, St. Landry Parish; Ellerson Borland, Parish Democratic Committee, West Feliciana Parish; Anderson Broussard, justice of peace, St. Mary Parish; Oliver Cooper, police juror, St. James Parish; Wesley Albert, justice of peace, Pointe Coupee Parish; Larry Balthazar, constable, Natchitoches Parish; Louis Berry, Parish Democratic Committee, Rapides Parish; Felton Ceasar, justice of peace, St. James Parish; Eddie Davis, police juror, West Feliciana Parish; Joseph M. Davis, police juror, St. Mary Parish; Joseph Delphin, justice of peace, Natchitoches Parish; Mrs. Mary Lee Goings, Parish Democratic Committee, West Feliciana Parish; Charlie Harris Jr., justice of peace, Pointe Coupee Parish; Ernest Metz, constable, St. Mary Parish; Ernest Morial, state representative, Orleans Parish; the Rev. R. H. Davis, Parish Democratic Committee, West Feliciana Parish; Ledell Mackie, police juror, West Feliciana Parish; Anatole Monconduit, constable, St. James Parish; Earl Roque, Parish Democratic Committee, Natchitoches Parish; Watson Sanders, police juror, East Carroll Parish; Nathaniel Smith Sr., police juror, West Feliciana Parish; Leonard Tardy, constable, St. Mary Parish; Arthur Thompson, Parish Democratic Committee, East Carroll Parish; Richard Turnley, Parish Democratic Committee, East Baton Rouge Parish; the Rev. O. L. Virgil, police juror, East Carroll Parish; Anderson Yancy, police juror, St. Mary Parish; and Mr. Johnson.

Zelma Wyche of Madison Parish was invited to the institute, although he had been declared defeated in his race for city marshal of Tallulah. The Justice Department has filed suit asking a federal court to invalidate the election.

ordinated three years of student anti-segregation protests in Atlanta.

In April of 1960, Mr. Bond helped in the formation of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. That summer he worked for the newly formed Atlanta Inquirer, a weekly Negro newspaper, and later became managing editor.

In January of 1961, Mr. Bond left Morehouse to become communications director for SNCC, a position he held until September of 1966. His work with SNCC involved him in civil rights and voter registration activities in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas.

His poems and articles have appeared in Negro Digest, Rights and Reviews, Freedomways, Ramparts, Beyond the Blues, New Negro Poets, American Negro Poetry, The Book of Negro Poetry, and others.

He is an honorary trustee of the Institute of Applied Politics and a visiting fellow of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center of New York City. He was the first co-chairman of the National Conference for New Politics and now is a member of the executive board.

Mr. Bond attended primary school at Lincoln University, Pa., and was graduated from a preparatory school in Bucks County, Pa., in 1957. He is married and is the father of three children. His father is head of the department of education and research at Atlanta University.

BRADBY FOUND DEAD

James N. Bradby, one of the South's two Negro sheriffs, was found dead in his car March 25 in a sparsely populated area about 15 miles from Richmond, Va.

Mr. Bradby, who was 38 years old, had been elected sheriff of Charles City County, Va., only last November and took office early this year. A medical examiner called the death a suicide.

With the death of Sheriff Bradby, the only Negro sheriff in the South again is Lucius Amerson of Macon County, Ala., who was elected in 1966.

NCVEP JOINS IN CALL FOR FEDERAL REGISTRARS

The North Carolina Voter Education Project has joined two Fayetteville, N. C., organizations in urging President Johnson to send federal registrars into Cumberland County.

The two other organizations are the Afro-American Students Association of Fayetteville State Teachers College, and the Fayetteville Area Poor Peoples Organization.

The latter group has received a VEP grant to conduct a four-week registration drive in Fayetteville, which is the county seat of Cumberland County.

The request for federal examiners was sent to President Johnson and U. S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark after a local-level request for deputy registrars in poverty areas was turned down.

LOUISIANA VEP

recently was enrolled in freshman studies at Southern University.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, and Weldon Rougeau, VEP field director, met with Louisiana Negro leaders at the Baton Rouge organizational meeting. Office of the Louisiana VEP will be in Plaquemine.

In addition to the officers, steering committee members of the Louisiana VEP are:

The Rev. J. H. Scott, Lake Providence; Dr. Louis C. Pendleton, Shreveport; Jesse N. Stone, Shreveport; Murphy W. Bell, Baton Rouge; J. K. Haynes, Baton Rouge; Robert Thompson, Clinton; Alfred E. Mitchell, Plaquemine; Emmitt J. Douglas, New Roads; Marion Overton White, Opelousas; the Rev. Gilbert Harrison Sr., Alexandria; Rep. Ernest N. Morial, New Orleans; and William W. Harleaux, Plaquemine.

RE-REGISTRATION PROVIDES A BOOST IN SOUTH CAROLINA

A requirement that all voters in the state re-register appears to have backfired in South Carolina.

In the past South Carolina voters have had to re-register every 10 years. However, an effort was made in the South Carolina Legislature last summer to delay re-registration scheduled for 1968 and extend existing registration certificates beyond the 1968 elections. The effort failed after some members of the Legislature charged that Negro voters would "be herded to the polls in droves to vote for Lyndon Johnson."

But as it turns out, re-registration may be helping South Carolina's Negro voters. After a massive registration campaign spearheaded by the South Carolina Voter Education Project, it appears that Negro re-registration is running ahead of white re-registration.

Prior to re-registration, which began last September, Negroes had 20.6 per cent of the total registration in South Carolina. As of late March this year, Negroes had 22.1 per cent of the registration. At that point, Negro registration was 139,000 and white 489,000.

Moreover, Negro registration has been exceeding white registration in seven counties—Allendale, Beaufort, Berkeley, Jasper, Lee, Orangeburg and Williamsburg. Previously, there was no South Carolina county in which Negroes had a registration advantage.

CANDIDATES MAKE BIDS IN FOUR SOUTHERN STATES

As May began, several hundred Negro candidates were running in important primaries in four Southern states.

North Carolina and Texas were voting on May 4. Alabama and Florida were holding primaries on May 7.

An authoritative Florida source put the number of black candidates in that state at 27. Six were running for legislative posts, one was running for county prosecutor, and the other 20 were seeking various county offices, such as school board and county commission posts. In addition, a total of 20 Negroes are running May 28 for seats as delegates to the Democratic national convention on three Florida slates.

According to figures compiled by the secretary of state's office, Negro registration in Florida totaled nearly 293,000 as of the April 6 registration deadline for the primaries. This was a slight drop from the previous total of 304,000. White registration is 2,194,000.

An Alabama source counted 41 black candidates running in the May 7 primary in that state. The list consisted mainly, he said, of candidates for justice of the peace, school board, county board, and other local offices. He estimated Negro registration in Alabama at 271,000—an increase over the 255,000 total of last autumn. This would put white registration at 1,119,000.

The North Carolina Voter Education Project estimated the number of black candidates in that state at 80 to 100, "at least." The list included a candidate for governor and four for U. S. Congress. NCVEP had an actual count of 49 Negro candidates in 16 of North Carolina's 100 counties. These included candidates for school board, county commission, the Legislature, and district judge.

NCVEP estimated Negro registration at 340,000 to 350,000—up considerably over the previous total of 277,000. Official sources expect little change in the white registration of 1,603,000. April 20 was the final registration day for the primaries in North Carolina.

Knowledgeable Texas sources estimate Negro registration there at 500,000 to 540,000. The previous estimate was 400,000. Across the state, registration is up more than one million over the previous three-million total.

No reliable estimate was available on the number of Negro candidates running in Texas. It was known, however, that there were at least four candidates for the Legislature, three of them incumbents.

Meanwhile, the election of Negroes to the city council in Wichita Falls and the school board in Austin brought the total number of Negro elected officials in Texas to 17. Both were the first Negroes to be elected to such posts in their cities.

JOLLIFF REMOVED AFTER THREE MONTHS IN OFFICE

(Editor's Note: The article below appeared April 27, 1968, in The Southern Courier.)

BY KATY SIEPMANN

WOODVILLE, Miss.—Last January, James Jolliff Jr. took office as one of Mississippi's first Negro county supervisors since the 1870s. But after just three months as a Wilkinson County supervisor, Jolliff has been convicted of obstructing justice, and removed from office.

Jolliff's troubles began before he was elected. One day last September, he was put temporarily in charge of Gladys' Cafe in Woodville. Two agents of the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Division came in and began a search of the cafe.

Jolliff asked them if they had a seach warrant, and they said they didn't need one. When Jolliff insisted that they did need a warrant, he was arrested.

His trial did not come up until last month. After hearing testimony from Jolliff, the ABC agents, and other witnesses, the jury was instructed that the search was illegal if the agents did not have a warrant. The jurors—ten white and two black—were also told that since Jolliff was in charge, he was justified in stopping the search.

But after a few minutes, the jury returned with a verdict of guilty. Jolliff was sentenced to two years in jail—but the sentence was suspended, and he was put on probation for five years. He was also fined $500 and taken out of office. The conviction is now being appealed.

A Negro was appointed to fill Jolliff's place until a special election for supervisor is held on May 28. Jolliff filed as a candidate in that election, but the county election commission refused to put his name on the ballot.

In a hearing last week, a state court denied Jolliff's request that his name be put on the ballot. Now that decision, too, is being appealed, but the case probably won't be decided before the election.

"This had been a white, this wouldn't have happened," Jolliff said this week. "It's a simple act of racism." He charged that his treatment represents a "conspiracy of white racism in Mississippi that has pushed this whole thing to a goal of hate."

REGISTRATION DOUBLED

A report from the Grady County, Ga., Voter Education Project shows that the organization's drive last winter doubled Negro registration in that county.

DIRECTOR'S DIRECT LINE

Martin King's Crusade Will Be Carried On

Because he dedicated every fibre of his being to improving the lot of black Americans, Dr. Martin Luther King is dead. He lived a life of sacrifice to his cause and, finally, at the age of 39 he made the supreme sacrifice. In life, he was one of the greatest marchers in history, walking countless miles to dramatize the wrongs suffered by black Americans. In death, he rode the final four miles across downtown Atlanta in a rustic wagon drawn by two mules.

Thousands of words have been written paying tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King. There is little that can be added at this point. When another great American was assassinated in 1963, his successor rallied the nation with the words, "Let us continue." This also should be our theme in the aftermath of Dr. King's death. We must carry forward his work and continue to advance his cause.

From the time the Southern Christian Leadership Conference was founded in 1957, voter registration and political participation by Negroes have been among its chief concerns. In many instances, the Voter Education Project has been privileged to work with SCLC toward these objectives. It was registration work that sent Dr. King on the historic 58-mile march from Selma to Montgomery in 1965. It was this march that led to the Voting Rights Act, and it was this Act that permitted thousands of Southern Negroes to register to vote for the first time in their lives.

But the Voting Rights Act, as well as other civil rights legislation, has not magically and suddenly brought an end to discrimination in the South. The day-to-day task of encouraging Negroes in the South to vote and otherwise exercise their rights as Americans must go on. Much remains to be done.

The Voter Education Project is proud to be a part of the national determination to carry on the work of Dr. King and other civil rights leaders. The Field Foundation, long generous in its support of the Voter Education Project, this month included VEP in the list of organizations to which special grants were made in memory of Dr. King. The Field Foundation grants totaled $1 million, and VEP received nearly one-fourth of this amount. The foundation asked that the funds be put to use as rapidly as is practicable to further the work and objectives of Dr. King, and this VEP will endeavor to do.

Dr. King believed strongly that political change can be a lever for social and economic change in the South. On the day he was assassinated, he had planned to be in North Carolina to assist black candidates there. Tragically, however, he altered his plans to remain in Memphis to help that city's striking sanitation workers.

Two years ago, on May 4, 1966, Dr. King held a press conference at a downtown Birmingham hotel to hail the modest successes that newly registered Negro voters had secured in the Alabama primary the day before. About 175,000 Negroes voted in that primary, and Dr. King said it indicated "a new day."

Dr. King lived only to see the first breakings of dawn of this new day. To those of us left behind falls the task of advancing the new day to the full sunshine of morning.

SHERIFF BRADBY'S DIFFICULTIES

(Editor's Note: The article below appeared in The Norfolk Virginia-Pilot on March 28, 1968.)

By HANK BURCHARD
Times Post News Service

CHARLES CITY—When James Nemo Bradby, 38, became Virginia's first Negro sheriff, nearly everybody he dealt with in Charles City County pitched in to help him out.

In the shock of Sheriff Bradby's suicide Sunday, after only three months in office, some people here are wondering if it might have been better to let him stand on his own two feet.

What led the sheriff to his quiet and lonely death by carbon monoxide poisoning clearly was not racial fear—four out of five of his constituents are Negro—and there has been no hint so far of any type of scandal.

"To tell you the truth," a long-time Negro friend of Bradby said, "everybody was afraid he wouldn't be able to cut it. We all went out of our way to make it easier for him, and that includes the white people. He sure got a lot of advice, but I don't think anybody ever asked him for any."

This county is as rural and Southern as any part of Virginia, but there is virtually no open race-baiting here. No white man can be elected without Negro votes, and no white businessman can survive without Negro patrons.

Before Bradby took office, a special mock session of the Circuit Court was held so he could learn his courtroom duties. The judge arranged for him to spend time with other sheriffs' departments to gain experience.

M. D. Lampkin, the white man whom Bradby unseated after 43 years as sheriff, sat in amicably on long briefing sessions in the Commonwealth's attorney's office.

Everyone who worked with Bradby said he was quiet, courteous, conscientious, devoted to his duties, and learning fast. "He surprised us," a state trooper said.

When Bradby served a summons or took a man to jail, according to all reports, it affected him deeply. "You do tough things when you're sheriff," a county official said. "After awhile you learn to be tough." But Bradby was finding it hard to sleep, he told a relative Friday.

His one major case since taking office was a murder. In a month of investigation, he had turned up a suspect but too

Making modern Louisiana history are the newly elected Negro office-holders shown above. This group photograph was made at the Institute for Negro Elected Officials which was held in March at the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans. The Institute was sponsored by the Voter Education Project. Twenty-eight of the 36 Negroes recently elected in Louisiana attended the Institute, but several had departed when this group picture was made on the final afternoon.

TEXT OF PRAYER BY DEAN HARVEY

(Editor's Note: The prayer below was delivered by Martin L. Harvey, dean of student affairs at Southern University, at the Institute for Louisiana Negro Elected Officials held in early March at the Roosevelt Hotel in New Orleans.)

Eternal Spirit, so high above us we cannot comprehend Thee, and yet so deep within us that we cannot escape Thee, make Thyself real to us in this experience of breaking of bread and of fellowship with each other.

We love Thy world, this nation and this state, Our Father. Because we love this world, we pray now for grace to quarrel with it O Thou whose lovers quarrel with the world is the history of the world. Grant us the grace to quarrel with:

- The worship of power and success.
- The assumption that people are less important than the jobs they hold.
- To quarrel with those who pledge allegiance to one race rather than the human race.
- And with those who prefer to condemn godless philosophies, rather than to implement spiritual values.

Especially do we thank Thee for these courageous souls who have come up out of deep tribulation and have laid their bodies and their securities on the altar of democracy in the cities and towns of this state. May they be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.

We pray that they may put on the whole armour of God. For they wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. May they be able to withstand the evil days they will face and having done all, to stand, to the end that justice may run down as waters, and righteousness as a flowing stream.

Amen.

little evidence to bring a charge "He said to me last week that nobody would tell him the truth," a courthouse employe said. "I guess that's hard for an honest man to understand."

Last month two white businessmen asked the county supervisors to give former Sheriff Lampkin special countywide powers of arrest. The businessmen offered to pay his salary. "That's like electing Robert Kennedy and then appointing Lyndon Johnson to do his job," Bradby's cousin said.

The board took no action, but was to meet again last Monday.

Sunday, after bathing and dressing neatly, Bradby asked his wife Vernell for some masking tape and then drove away in his black Ford coupe without saying where he was going. He also took a green plastic garden hose which she later identified.

Monday he and the car were found in a piney wood. The tape was to attach the hose to the tailpipe and to seal the vent window through which the hose passed on the driver's side. All other windows and vents in the car had been neatly and methodically sealed with tape, rags and newspaper.

RACES

The Other Half of the Battle

When Mrs. Geneva Collins took office as Chancery Clerk in Mississippi's Claiborne County, the two-member white staff quit. Mrs. Collins is black. Dan Nixon, a Negro magistrate in Brownsville, Tenn., was never informed of the date for the swearing-in ceremony after his election and had to seek out a local judge to be formally installed in office. Griffin McLaurin, a black constable in Tchula, Miss., has a problem with the white justice of the peace in his district. Says McLaurin: "When I bring someone in on a traffic charge, if it's a white man, he'll let him go. But if it's a Negro, he'll fine him."

Slowly and painfully, most of the 382 Negroes who have been elected to public offices in the South—ranging from mayor and state representative to constable and justice of the peace—have discovered that getting elected is only half the battle. Now, to help solve some of the problems facing Southern black officeholders, the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council has set up five campus service centers to provide basic training.* These centers hold workshops for potential candidates on legal requirements for filing, costs and techniques of campaigning, and their official duties. They also provide advice to those already in office and help black officials to research and introduce legislation.

Establishing Authority. Valuable as this assistance is, it is still the black officials themselves who must solve the problems of establishing their authority in a largely hostile white society. White intransigence to political integration takes many forms, ranging from defiance to outright intimidation. Black justices and constables are told by white offenders that "no nigger is going to tell us what to do." Moses Riddick, a member of the Board of Supervisors in Suffolk, Va., had a cross burned on his lawn after winning a primary. James Jolliff, a black constable in Wilkinson County, Miss., was arrested on charges of impeding and intimidating officers and was temporarily suspended from his office when he stopped Alcoholic Beverage Commission agents from searching a Negro cafeteria without a warrant.

In several Southern states local officials are paid on the "fee" system, according to the number of cases they handle. In towns where there is more than one justice of the peace, white officers can choose which J.P. they will bring minor offenders to for hearings. If one J.P. is black and the other white, the Negro official is simply ignored. William Childs, a black justice of the peace in Tuskegee, Ala., is one victim of this system. Childs charges that the white J.P. in his district averages 300 to 400 traffic cases a month, while he gets no more than 20.

Crisis of Identity. Frustrating and vicious as white resistance can be, it is only part of the problem. Many black officials are split over the question of whom they represent, often finding themselves in a crossfire between militant and moderate members of the Negro community, including many who feel that they should not have run in the first place. When A. W. Willis campaigned unsuccessfully for mayor of Memphis in 1967, his "real fight" was with the city's black community. His effort, he said, was undermined by Negroes "who felt that a black man had a nerve trying to be mayor," and by black militants who wanted to boycott the entire election. In Richmond, Va., two Negro councilmen were defeated for reelection when the black leadership supported two white liberals to replace them. Both the Negroes had supported a measure to increase city transportation fares, and one had voted against an open-housing regulation, arguing that the council was not empowered to pass such a measure.

The number of Negro-elected officials in the South has been rising steadily since the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and the surge is expected to continue. With it will grow the crisis of identity that blacks and whites must face in the South, and the problems will doubtless multiply. So, in the longer run, may the opportunities to root out discrimination. Says Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook, Negro professor of political science at Duke University: "Today, while it is true that the Negro still is part subject, it is also true that he is much nearer the start of political equality than at any previous time. He now has a toehold in the Southern political process. Negroes can help redeem the past. They can be liberating and redemptive agents. Black men, working with white men of reason, good will and a sense of justice, can largely free the South from the chains and illusions of the past."

The Negro Politicians Assess Their Situation

By PAUL W. VALENTINE

ATLANTA — Lawrence T. Guyot Jr., a bullishly-energetic Mississippi man, pointed a finger at his fellow black politicians in the hotel meeting room.

"The political bitch that spawned southern politics," he warned, "is in heat again."

Guyot, a functionary of the Missi[illegible]ppi Fre[illegible]m Dem[illegible]

if-youthful Georgia legislator, warned them in a keynote speech that the incoming national administration is being formed by a man "against whom 90 per cent of you voted last November." President-elect Richard M. Nixon has no favors to repay the black man, he said.

New black officeholders to learn from veterans

By Robert P. Hey
Staff correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Atlanta

Suppose politicians never let you take part in politics, even shooed you away when you tried to vote.

Then one day you could run for office, and you won. Would you know how to do your job, or even what it was—especially if colleagues hindered you, instead of helping?

Sounds improbable, doesn't it?

But it's precisely the situation several score black politicians in the South face today. Last month 107 black candidates won political office throughout the South. Some are politically sophisticated; most aren't.

It's to help this unschooled majority understand their jobs, and learn how best to do them, that a first-ever conference is being held later this month in Atlanta. It's called the first Southwide conference of black elected officials and is being held by the Voter Education Project of the privately financed Southern Regional Council.

In the past two years the Voter Education Project has held several smaller conferences to instruct newly elected black officials in the precise duties of their jobs. Most have been statewide conferences.

The fascinating aspect of this Southwide conference is that, for the first time, newly elected black officials will be learning from black officials who have already been on the job a year or two.

This is another benchmark in the political progress of the black Southerner. Heretofore there were next to no experienced black officials—nobody able to help neophytes with the many problems black officials face that white one's don't. Today there are quite a few.

The Voter Education Project figures there are about 385 black elected officials in the 11 Southern states now. (In November, 1965, there were only 70.) Between 220 and 250 are expected at this conference.

Much of the "meat" of the four-day affair Dec. 11-14 will be in the workshops. They'll be divided by general job category —school-board members in one hall, city officials in another, and so forth.

No one will make speeches in the workshops. After the sessions are called to order, the new officeholders will quiz veterans. (How did you tackle this problem, and that one?) At each session there'll also be a special resource person.

Not all answers known

Surely new officials will bring up the many problems unique to black officials, such as: How do you stop white school-board members from conducting their real business in a private session at a club (without inviting you, naturally), then holding only a pro forma legal meeting? How can a black justice of the peace get white legal officials to cooperate, instead of ignore him?

For the first time, this year newly elected black officials will get answers from experienced black officials, men who have faced the same problems. If they haven't solved them, at least they have thoughts on dealing with them.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project, says the political sophistication of black Southern officeholders varies greatly. Most state representatives are quite sophisticated; he points out that "half of the 14 black members of the Georgia Legislature are lawyers."

But most black officials hold city or county office. And many of these are unsophisticated. Especially in rural areas, many are lamentably uneducated, the inevitable consequence of an inept educational system. It is with these officials that discussions will be most elementary — and essential.

A number of nationally prominent black Americans will appear on panels or deliver speeches during the conference: State Rep. Julian Bond of Georgia; Lawrence T. Guyot Jr., chairman of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party; Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, noted psychologist and president of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center, New York City; Richard G. Hatcher, Mayor of Gary, Ind.; Robert G. Clark, the only black member of the Mississippi House of Representatives; Charles Evers, most influential black political leader in Mississippi; Mrs. Shirley Chisholm of New York City, the nation's first black congresswoman-elect.

Ramsay Clark, Attorney General of the United States, will address the conference banquet.

The Voter Education Project is footing the bill for transporting, housing, and feeding the conference participants. It would like to make the conference an annual event. For the foreseeable future, at least, it would seem greatly needed. But whether the Voter Education Project can do so depends on whether it can raise enough money to pay such a big bill every year.

Growing numbers

More blacks are in government today in the South than ever before. Since it is the first real venture into politics for many of them, experienced black politicians will meet with them shortly in Atlanta to offer advice on their new jobs.

black elected officials in the South are expected to attend.

Rep. Bond will deliver the opening address at a dinner Dec. 11.

Last summer Rep. Bond gathered case histories for a soon-to-be-published VEP booklet on how black candidates in the South conduct their campaigns.

Clark will speak at a banquet Friday. John Wheeler of Durham, president of the Southern Regional Council, will preside and VEP Director Vernon E. Jordan Jr. will introduce the speaker.

Mayor Hatcher will speak at a public forum Thursday at Clark College. Students from the Atlanta University complex and the public will be invited to attend and pose questions for Mayor Hatcher and a panel of four other black officeholders.

Dr. Clark, noted New York psychologist and president of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center, will speak at a luncheon Thursday.

Dr. Samuel D. Cook of Duke University, chairman of the VEP advisory committee, will trace the history of Negro political participation in the South.

Mrs. Chisholm, who won election Nov. 5 in New York's Bedford-Stuyvesant area, is the first Negro woman to be sent to Congress. She will address the conference's concluding luncheon Saturday.

With the exception of the forum at Clark College and the Friday banquet at which Clark will speak, all sessions will be held at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel, which will be conference headquarters. The Friday banquet will be held at the American Motor Hotel.

A luncheon panel Friday will feature five Negro candidates who recently mounted major campaigns in the South and lost. The five and the offices they sought are Maynard Jackson, U. S. Senate in Georgia; Reginald A. Hawkins, governor in North Carolina; Charles Evers, U. S. House in Mississippi; George A. Payton, U. S. House in South Carolina; and A. W. Willis, mayor in Memphis.

Three black experts on finance and taxation will appear on a panel on Friday morning. They are Gerald Lamb Connecticut state treasurer; Theodore Jones, Illinois director of revenue; and Alfred Pelham, chairman of Great Lakes Mutual Life Insurance Company, Detroit.

Appearing on the panel with Mayor Hatcher will be State Rep. Robert Clark of Holmes County, Miss.; City Council[illegible] Henry Marsh of Richmond; [illegible] State Rep. J. C. Daugherty of [illegible]lanta; and John McCown, ne[illegible] elected commissioner from Han[illegible]cock County, Ga.

A panel discussion will follow Dr. Cook's address. Members of the panel will be State Sen. Barbara Jordan of Houston; Lawrence T. Guyot Jr., chairman of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party; Dr. C. G. Gomillion, school board member from Tuskegee, Ala.; and Joseph A. Jordan Jr., city councilman from Norfolk.

Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen will greet the officeholders at the Thursday morning session.

The officials will divide into five groups for workshops.

Purpose of the four-day meeting, which is wholly sponsored by VEP, is to bring the elected officials together to discuss mutual problems, to share experiences, and to receive information designed to help them serve more effectively.

Only those officials holding elected public offices are being invited. The list includes 151 city officials, 78 law enforcement and judicial officials, 72 school board members, 55 county officials, and 30 state legislators, all from the 11 states of the Old South.

Rev. John Morris, former executive director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, will handle planning and arrangements for the conference. VEP has held somewhat similar conferences for newly elected Negro officials in Mississippi and Louisiana during the past year.

The Voter Education Project, a program of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., supports projects of voter registration, citizenship education and leadership training in the 11 Southern states.

The Southern Regional Council is a non-profit nonpartisan organization of white and Negro Southerners formed in 1944 to advance "equal opportunity for all the South's people."

ELECTED NEGROES STUDY PROBLEMS

Louisiana Official Depicts Trouble With U.S. Agency

By WALTER RUGABER

ATLANTA, Dec. 14—Grand Coteau is a little town in south-central Louisiana with no sewers few paved streets and a rickety water system that breaks down every once in a while and leaves the pipes dry for two or three days.

Peter Smith, who was born in Grand Coteau 39 years ago, remembers some of the former Councilmen there as nice enough men. But, he explains earnestly, "they just met and paid the bills and went home."

Now Mr. Smith and two other negroes control the five-member governing body, and they have worked out a plan to improve conditions in Grand Coteau. But its implementation has proved frustrating.

Mr. Smith, who also serves as Mayor pro tem, spent four days in Atlanta this week with about 200 of the 385 Negroes who hold elected public offices in the 11 states of the former Confederacy.

The gathering, sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, was tangible evidence of Negro political advance in the region. But the difficulties, such as Mr. Smith's, are widespread.

Three years ago, after Mr. Smith's election to the Council, Grand Coteau hired a consulting engineer to draw plans for sewers, paved streets, a reliable water system and a natural gas network to permit town growth.

The engineering plan was sent to the Department of Housing and Urban Development with an aplication for 80 per cent Federal financing and 20 per cent local matching funds.

"I wouldn't know of anybody in Grand Coteau that would try to block that program," Mr. Smith said. "We're all for it. We all need it."

Grand Coteau could not get a clear response from the Federal agency, Mr. Smith said. There was talk of a shortage of funds for "small towns," he went on, but aparently the department found nothing wrong with the plan itself.

For three years, the councilmen said, letters have gone back and forth to Austin, Tex., where the regional offices are situated, and to Washington. Different bureaus and sections have been involved.

"It's like a man's house is on fire and you call the fire department and they say the fire truck is out on somebody else's house, and you call someone else and it goes on to somebody else and your house is burned down by then," Mr. Smith said.

Exchange of Letters

Mr. Smith insists that despite an exchange of 25 to 50 letters, he still does not know the cause of the delay. Experts at the conference here were unfamiliar with the case and unable to suggest a reason.

Recently, Mr. Smith said, the city of Lafayette, 12 miles away, received a $55,000 Federal grant to air-condition its bus system. This development, he remarked, was hard to explain to the people of Grand Coteau.

"It was fun to be making these plans and spending the extra time getting them ready and all," Mr. Smith said. "But now it's getting to the stage where, you know, it's getting discouraging when you get no results out of it."

Several organizations are moving to reduce the uncertainty that often confronts inexperienced new officeholders. Whites in some communities have denied advice or misled Negro officials.

The voter project said "service centers" for black leaders would go into operation next month at predominantly Negro colleges in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Julian Bond, and Dr. Kenneth Clark of New York, a psychologist who heads the Metropolitan Applied Research Center, are among the Negro officeholders scheduled to address the conference.

Vernon E. Jordan contended that Negro and prejudice which often makes their task more difficult than similar posts are for white officials.

The project, which conducts voter registration and educational projects in 11 Southern states, expects 200 to 300 of the South's 380 Negro officeholders to attend the session.

According to the project's figures, there are 151 Negro city officials, 78 law enforcement and judicial officeholders, 72 school board members, 55 county officers, and 30 state legislators in the South.

Editorial Comment on the Conference

The Use of Black Power

"Black power" is a much used and often misused slogan in black Americans' drive for justice and equal opportuunity.

But what happens when black power is achieved—when Negroes are elected to office? Then the focus of interest must shift from power to responsible use of power.

Then black officials must become concerned with taxation, federal aid programs, law enforcement, administration . . . in short, the same concerns as white officials.

Just such practical matters will be the subjects of discussion at a four-day Southwide conference which opened at the Dinkler Plaza here last night under the sponsorship of the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project.

Racial matters, of course, will be much in the minds of the participants, for this is an historic gathering. Thanks largely to the Voting Rights Act of 1965, there are now nearly 400 black elected officials in the South. About half of them are here for the meeting.

Not only will they discuss problems among themselves, but they also will hear from fellow Afro-Americans from other regions who hold such offices as mayor, state treasurer and state director of revenue.

It is noteworthy that Atlanta not only is the site of the conference, but that it has many black persons in political office and other positions of importance to act as hosts and panelists. These range from the director of the Voter Education Project to federal officials, an alderman, businessmen, a college president and several state legislators.

We Commend Vernon Jordan And Black Elected Officials

Between 200 and 300 of the South's black elected officials are converging here this week for their first Southwide Conference. The Conference, sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, features some outstanding speakers including U. S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, Dr. Kenneth Clark of New York, Rep. Julian Bond of our fair city and the nation's first Negro Congresswoman, Mrs. Shirley Chisholm of New York.

It should be an interesting, productive conference. We hope the officials enjoy Atlanta hospitality and will return again for either business or pleasure.

More significantly, we hail the meeting because it represents the power of education. With some die-hards trying at every turn and utilizing every hook and crook to "hold us down," the officials meeting here are living examples of the fact that politics will be the great beneficiary of education.

Many of the elected officials are members of school boards and, consequently, even more significance is attached because they are in positions to rid this country of its unfair dual system of education. Its abolition would mean even greater advancement through education for all of our people.

We welcome the Conference and its members and gleefully urge, "Giddyap" for the job ahead.

The INQUIRER salutes Vernon E. Jordan, director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, for his wisdom and foresight in instituting this first Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials.

Mr. Jordan believes the "dramatic increase of black officials represents one of the more significant developments in Southern politics today. Not even the fact," he says, "that five Southern states gave George Wallace his only electoral votes can overshadow the deepening involvement of black Southerners in the region's political process."

We hope, as he and the officials hope, they will be able to establish at this conference some machinery for dealing with the problems on a continuing basis in the future as the number of black elected officials continues to grow.

We hope further that they will find it imperative to continue these conferences so that they might be able to grandly produce in behalf of their constituents.

We highly commend Mr. Jordan and the officials meeting here who seek the means to work toward that end.

Negro Politicians Watched, Voter Project Director Says

By HARMON PERRY

The letter to the Southern Regional Council from the Clarksdale, Miss., Negro who had taken office as justice of the peace was not in the best form and contained many misspelled words, but it told the story of many of the Negro men and women who have entered the political ring in the Deep South in recent years.

"I am grateful for the great service you gave the Negroes that were elected to office, you has (sic) helped many burdens roll away," the Negro wrote. "The things we are enduring are many but I am not discouraged at all, I am going to fight to finish whatever it may be."

Stories of harassment, intimidation, and lack of cooperation echoed throughout the first day of the Southwide conference of Negro elected officials meeting in Atlanta. The sessions are designed to help Negroes elected to a wide range of offices in 11 Southern states perform their responsibilities more effectively.

"THIS IS WHY we're here," said Vernon Jordon, SRC's Voter Education Project director, as he spoke at the banquet Wednesday night which got the four-day conference under way. The upsurge in tne number of Negroes elected to office since the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is one of the more significant developments in Southern politics, he said.

"The Negro officeholders, most of whom carry into office the extra burden of inexperience because they had been denied living in the political process, are being observed by both races and are measured more exactly than are white officials," Mr. Jordon explained. "The conference hopes to solve some of the problems these black officials face."

State Rep. Julian Bond had a bit of encouragement for the 200 officials attending the conference. "I want to bring a little culture to you, but it's difficult to address you because we come from so many different backgrounds."

Rep. Bond, who devoted much of his address to an attack on the Vietnam war and President-elect Nixon and his incoming administration, said there were three things he and his audience had in common, "We're politicians, we're black, and we were elected largely by black constituents."

The young Georgia legislator was cool to proposals for black capitalism in black communities, saying it only ends up as white capitalism that hires and trains Negro workers.

He called for Negroes to seek out allies among other colored minorities and poor whites who have been blinded by racism. "We ought not turn anybody down."

REP. BOND also said black people should control their communities, become aware of the things that turn them against their own interest and develop concern in community socialism.

"We need fast action, but we must look at it with care; we ought to consider an attack made on one of us as an attack on all of us," Rep. Bond advised.

AT THE FIRST general session Thursday morning, Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook told the conferees their presence was the result of black men having power, and the power to have more power.

The question is, "What are you going to do with it now that you are elected?" Dr. Cook asked.

Speaking on "From Subject and Victim to Citizen and Official," Dr. Cook said the liberation of black people is the key to Southern liberation.

"Racism has dominated and controlled the minds of the white South," he said, "so the South will be fully free only when the black man is fully free."

"Once freed from the yoke of racism, the South—and the nation—will take wings," Dr. Cook said.

Black Power Brings Only Limited Gains

Atlanta Daily World 12/14/68

By PORTIA SCOTT

"Black Power can only bring limited gains. It can not eliminate poverty, poor housing, poor education or give us a portion of economic control of nation," Mayor Richard Gordon Hatcher told a capacity audience at Clark College Thursday night.

Black Power, Student Power and violence as has occurred here, said Hatcher cannot be dismissed from achieving power, yet this type of power has not payed off very much. "It has just made whites talk better," he added.

The Mayor of Gary, Ind., explained that he supported all Black Power that helps to "capture its heritage and exert ability to meet its demands," but the type of power that was really needed was "a coming together in State Militancy or People's Power."

The occasion was a public forum at Davage Auditorium that climaxed the Thursday session of the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials, sponsored by the Southern Regional Council, which will continue through Saturday at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel.

The speaker continued that he could accept the possibility of "separate states, but what Blacktown wants Whitetown will not confer." Hatcher pointed out further that even in Blacktown there still would not be utopia because Blacks can be expected to exploit Blacks as whites have.

Also, he said that he could understand a return not only spiritually, but physicially to our African culture, but that he himself did not choose to leave. "A good portion of these United States we own not just physicially, but morally," he asserted.

The speaker, soft in his tone, yet firm in his speech, said that search for power isn't new, but today, "we have combined pride with being Black with the search."

There are many forms of Black Power that can meet the needs of Black people, he stated.

"Whites have assigned to us the role of being strangers within his village. But being ourselves will make us less a stranger.

"We cannot nor wish to reject our Blackness," he continued.

Hatcher explained that it was fortunate that our history and culture is rich enough to find pride to make us less a stranger in the white man's village.

He pointed out that the world is not white any longer and never will be again. He warned that "we must establish power of people in the world which none are strangers."

Without this, he continued, "dark nights and despair" are ahead. He added, Blacks have less to loose but most to gain."

Other speakers included Robert Clark, Representative from Mississippi; Henry Marsh, City Council, Richmond, Va.; and John McCown, County Comm., Hancock County, Ga., who were part of a panel discussion on the Mayor's address and the issues of the conference as a whole.

President Vivian Henderson (Clark), presided over the session.

Charlie Jones Talks About His Victory in Miss

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

Charlie Jones caught a plane for the first time Wednesday to come to Atlanta to the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials from his home in Coahoma, Miss.

Elected justice of the peace there over a white incumbent of over 20 years who had originally decided not to run, and then did after Jones announced, Charlie Jones observed that he had never been away from Coahoma for more than 20 days at a time, though his travels have taken him to Florida, Canada and many Northern cities.

"I've known the white man I beat for 50 years," the genial father of 12 said.

He explains the political realities of his area in Mississippi simply. There are roughly 1,300 Negroes and 300 whites (Charlie can tell you to the man in each precinct). "There wasn't hardly no way he could beat me, lessen I was a mighty bad fellow."

Jones is a sharp contrast to young Negro politicians at the conference such as Julian Bond in style, background and fame, but he is as typical of one segment of the men and women who have come into political office in the South as a result of civil and voting rights legislation, registration campaigns and the first true "black power" at the ballot box.

"When Moses needed to get across the Sea of Galilee God didn't dry up the earth or clear away the whole sea. He just cleared a path. That's all Moses needed, just a path," Charlie Jones told a reporter as he ate lunch in the ballroom of a hotel that a few years ago would have refused to serve him.

"A path always leads to the highway," he added, "not the other way around, just like a stream leads to the ocean of you follow it. If it wasn't for all the little creeks and ponds and bayous and rivers the ocean would dry up," Charlie Jones added.

"When I went to school, we didn't have school but three months. White folks would keep you out of work, but I sent my children through 12 grades and some two years of junior college. If they'll just do the same thing for their children—" he said, leaving the obvious conclusion unsaid. But he added, "You don't learn all you know from books, and you don't learn all you read in books. You've got to experience some things to understand it."

He used to drive people to Memphis, he said, and when he took them to a place to eat, they would go in and a waiter would bring him something outside.

Now he can go in those places, but he generally goes down the road instead, to places where he had been always welcome. "The way biscuits taste best is like your Mama made 'em," he explains.

He adds of his dealings with white people in his community, "I'll give anybody the time of day and say good morning. I owe him that as a human being. But I don't stand around and talk with him unless he's got something to say worth hearing. I don't owe him that.

"I saw a terrible thing in Chicago," he said. "People have to lock their car doors to ride on the streets or they're liable to have somebody in there with them. I wouldn't want to live there, having to lock doors. It would be as bad as being a millionaire's child and having to have guards everywhere you go and be afraid. My children run free. That's how it ought to be."—ACHSAH NESMITH

Federal Help Near Limit, Negroes Told

Officials Hear Dr. Henderson Stress Local Level Work

By ACHSAH NESMITH

Negroes have "just about got all we are going to get from the national level," Dr. Vivian Henderson told the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials Thursday.

"If the Nixon Cabinet appointments last night are any criteria, I know we have," the President of Clark College said. He added that he hoped "we're wrong about this," but stressed that Negro public officials must depend on their own political ability and backing from the community to achieve future gains.

Many of the gains of the past "have come in spite of ourselves," Dr. Henderson said, both because of national policies and "because of the power of the racial ghetto rather than political astuteness."

POLITICAL PERSONALITIES

"Politics among Negroes in Atlanta has been almost wholly oriented toward personalities. Atlanta desperately needs issue-oriented politics," he said.

The South's great strength in seeking to get into the economic, social and political mainstream of the nation is its lack of rigidly segregated housing patterns, allowing a "realistic opportunity to avoid the mistakes of the North and build a truly open society," as the South rapidly moves toward urbanization, he said. Atlanta and Houston, however, are plagued with segregated housing patterns, making them the two major exceptions in the South.

"We have yet to see in the South the kind of initiation of public policy measures at the local level" to bring about major improvements in the most serious social problems facing the nation, particularly urban areas, Dr. Henderson said.

CITES GHETTO SCHOOLS

"The issues are clear," he said, citing the poor quality of ghetto schools, delivery of services to the poor, inability to reach certain levels of government, the absence of minimum wage laws at the state and local level, and discrimination and gerrymandering in redistricting.

"We must re-examine the strategy of racial blocs," he declared. "I'm not too sure we can rely on racial solidarity to accomplish our goals," stressing again that President-elect Richard Nixon's Cabinet appointments indicate that this need is crucial.

"The only appeal of the incoming administration to the brothers and sisters is to call for black capitalism. I want all the Negro businessmen we can get, not just in Harlem but on Fifth Avenue, not just on Hunter Street and Auburn Avenue, but at Five Points; but it is an illusion to think this approach will transform the lives of the majority of brothers and sisters from poverty and destitution to minimum standards of living," he declared.

"This is the one carrot I've heard from Nixon." Henderson said. "Nixon didn't compete for the Negro vote," considering it a sure thing for his opponent, and "it suggests Negroes are left out and will be left out. We've had to depend on the national scene to get things done at the local scene. . . . We've got to rethink our strategy. It can't be done running in 40 different directions."

"I'm not a black nationalist or a black power advocate according to the rhetoric you hear," he said. "We're not at the point where we can abandon racial consciousness under the facade of color blindness. You have to represent all the people, but keep in mind that in 99 per cent of the cases those who elected you were black. Represent all the people, but give some special attention to the black brothers and sisters . . . the consequences of racial segregation can't be removed "with careful colorblindness," he added.

PART OF STRATEGY

"Color consciousness must be part of our political and urban strategy," he said, declaring there was nothing new about building black political power and self-respect, "but it does not mean building racism, hate, or a separate society. Negro life needs to be strengthened for intelligent integration into a pluralistic society, with respect for individuals and without the loss of identity of black institutions, not for establishing some mystique of black power or separatism but for achieving our rightful place in a multiracial society."

Henderson also said he was "deeply distressed as a college president over our failure" to help black officials to examine proposed legislaiton and formulate strategy and policy.

Earlier, Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook of Duke University's political science department told the conference of over 200 Negro elected officials from the South:

"You're here because the black man has the initiative for the first time except a brief period during Reconstruction. Because black men have power. The crucial question is what are you going to do with your power? History contains the tragic element of irreversibility."

Bond Says Negroes' Outlook Is Bleak

By BOB HURT

State Rep. Julian Bond dismissed the potential of Richard M. Nixon's new administration with a bitter prediction Wednesday night that Negroes "who still have faith in the democratic process" are facing four years of "severe disappointments."

In a speech that brought an audience of elected Southern Negro political leaders to a standing ovation, Bond said that white liberals and moderates "have deserted us" and Negroes in America must look for "new friends."

Bond, 28, who was swept into national prominence during the Democrtic National Convention in Chicago, was the keynote speaker of the first Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials which opened Wednesday at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel.

SEES 2 CRISES

He urged his audience to face what he termed the two greatest crises in America—"racism and militarism," and issued an icy-voiced condemnation of people who see "black capitalism" as the best tool for improving the lot of the Negro.

That plan is no more than "exchanging the race of the people who have been exploiting us," he said.

Instead, Bond said "we ought to become interested in—now here's a terrible, dirty word—community socialism. We should be interested in the kind of economic development in our community that will not only give us jobs but will give the community a profit as well."

CHARGES DESERTION

Bond said "Those on whom we used to depend have deserted us."

The support once given by organized labor vanished during the presidential campaign of George Wallace, who Bond described as a "hill-billy Hitler." The support of white liberals and moderates has wained because "the terrible war has attracted all of their attention."

In the speech, filmed by two national television networks, Bond said that liberals in Atlanta have failed Negroes when they were asked to "give us justice."

The Negro-moderate coalition in Atlanta "is wearing thin," he said, and is best illustrated by talk by whites who want to extend the city's boundaries to take in white suburbs.

MUST LOOK

The Negro must look to other minorities — Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans and American Indians — to form a new political coalition in the United States, Bond said.

Bond, who was once denied his seat in the General Assembly because he said he admired the courage of draft-card burners, said that the "American imperial war in Vietnam" is a major obstacle to racial harmony at home.

Negroes who go with whites and "burn down the huts of some Vietnam village" may return home and react to discrimination to the point that he "may be motivated to burn down the huts of some American village."

Bond's address came at the opening session of the three-day meeting of Negro elected officials, sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Clark Urges Extended Use Of U.S. Voting Examiners

(FULL TEXT of CLARK'S TALK ATEND of Folio 7.)

By The Associated Press

Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark says the use of federal voting examiners should be continued beyond 1970.

Clark told the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials Friday night that the Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 expires in August 1970.

He warned that the states will then have the opportunity to reinstate voter qualifications suspended by the act.

"State legislatures will be empowered to prescribe new standards, new procedures for voting throughout the land," Clark said.

The attorney general said the voting act has led to widespread increases in Negro voter registration and political gains for blacks.

FOUR YEARS ago, we could have held this meeting in a telephone booth in the lobby and not have interfered with anybody that wanted to make a telephone call," Clark commented.

He spoke to more than 200 Negro officeholders and told them that blacks and whites must prove they can live together because: "It's survival. It really is, you know."

Clark expressed disapproval of any type of racial separatism and called for pursuing efforts to end school segregation and "vast discrimination . . . in employment."

EARLIER, three Negro panelists discussed taxes and revenues. Gerald A. Lamb, Connecticut's treasurer, told the Negro officeholders, "We can excell in this field."

Others on the panel were Theodore A. Jones, director of the Illinois Department of Revenue, and Alfred M. Pelham, former Detroit comptroller who now is chairman of the board for Great Lakes Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Panel members agreed that taxation in this country has created inequitable burdens upon lower income groups, but warned higher taxes lie ahead.

FREEING THE WHITE SOUTH? ATLANTA JOURNAL 12-13-68

Some Black History-Makers Talk About It

By REESE CLEGHORN

"I WAS WHITE once," said the black man from Virginia. He was as white as anybody could be, he continued, deadpan, a Stars-and-Bars white Southerner. He had changed, he said, because of drinking a lot of bad, black coffee, with very little cream and sugar.

"When I was white we had many discussions about you people," he said, and the appreciative snickers in his largely Negro audience became a rush of laughter. "We had many fears about you people," he went on. "We feared one day you might decide there was some place to meet besides the church—that you might meet at the ballot box."

This was City Councilman Joseph A. Jordan Jr. of Norfolk, Va., speaking to some 225 fellow black office-holders from throughout the South.

They are a majority of the 380 Negroes who have been elected (107 of them last month) in this region. They have come to Atlanta for a four-day conference, under auspices of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, to discuss their common problems, the duties of their offices and current issues.

The fear that Councilman Jordan talked about having, before he drank all that black coffee, are very real among large numbers of white Southerners.

* * *

THAT IS ONE OF the obstacles the black office-holders have to overcome. They are, of course, a diverse lot with diverse ideas about how to play their history-making roles.

An open discussion of their concerns revealed the diversity.

Black office-holders should play broad roles of leadership, said Lawrence Guyot, leader of the Freedom Democratic Party in Mississippi. They should not just discharge the duties of local offices; they should speak for their once-voiceless communities in an aggressive and wide-ranging way. They should consider themselves the leading spokesmen of black people.

* * *

BUT, SAID A MAN from Arkansas, it is not as simple as that. He had been elected not mainly by Negroes but mainly by whites. "If this conference is to be relevant," he said, "it must include situations like that."

Nothing can be accomplished by Negroes, said a man from South Carolina, "until we realize we are all black." He seemed to suggest that aggressive representation of Negroes was the first duty.

* * *

A COUNTY COMMISSIONER from Virginia interjected. He is one of five commissioners, he said, and the other four are "rednecks if you want to call them that." His job, he said, is to make friends and win allies on that commission. "I couldn't get a second for a motion, much less a road or a teachers' raise, if I didn't do that," he said.

"I had been an extreme radical," he went on. "After I was elected, I learned I had to be effective. A lot of people brainwashed by the more radical elements call us Uncle Toms."

THERE WAS A STIRRING in the room. This is the kind of talk sometimes heard from timid men, and most Negroes do not fancy that they are electing people these days to be timid. But it also could be the talk of a determined but practical man, one who wants to be an effective politician. Which was it in this case? Probably nobody at this conference would ever know. It would depend upon that man who shortly would go back to do his job, against the odds, in rural Virginia.

That is the way it is for many of these new office-holders, who have won a place in the democracy at last because of voting laws opposed by almost all the Deep South's congressmen and senators. Many serve in lonely places. At this conference, they could get a feeling of common endeavor with others in similar situations across the South.

WHAT IS THE BROADER significance of their situation? Dr. Samuel DuBois Cook, former Atlantan who now teaches at Duke University, spoke to them as a political scientist and as a fellow black man.

". . . The black man, because of the tyranny of racism over the mind of the white South, has been able, without intention or knowledge, to dominate Southern political and governmental life . . .," he said. "Whites fell into the trap they had so cleverly and determinedly made for blacks: absolute dominion. . . . The Negro, like a fearsome ghost, has haunted and driven the white man."

Now, he said, Negroes have gained a toehold. What will it mean?

* * *

"NEGROES CAN HELP REDEEM the past of the Southern political process. They can be liberating and redemptive agents. Just as the Negro was the key to Southern political enslavement, he is the key to Southern political emancipation.

"The Southern genius has been exhausted in the 'race problem.' Black men, working with whites of reason, goodwill, and a sense of justice can largely free the South from the chains and illusions of the past. The chief problem is racism.

"Freed from the prison of racism, the South will be freed from the heavy yoke of deceit, hypocrisy, negativism, obstructionism and provincialism. . . . It will be freed of the exhausting and painful efforts to maintain a closed corporation. . . . Freed of the Atlas burden of racism, the Southern political process will be able to say, ironically, with Martin Luther King: 'Free at last!' "

Welcome To Southern Elected Officials

ATLANTA DAILY SRC WORLD 12-14-68

The meeting in Atlanta this week of nearly 400 Negro elected officials from various sections of the south is a good omen of a sincere effort to seek for a consensus of opinion to meet the problems confronting us today. Such a meeting is indeed appropriate and imely. 12-14-68

We congratulate these officials and the Southern Regional Council for its sponsorship. The session started Wednesday night and runs through part of Saturday.

We hope such a meeting is held at least once a year from now on. Atlanta Daily World

In the light of the role the Negro voters in this region and the nation as a whole, we believe it would be most timely for these officials, in a closed door session, give some time to discussing the merits of bi-partisan action in certain elections.

Through the years we have emphasized the importance of intelligent political action as an effective means of solving racial problems and opening new opportunities.

We also recognize the necessity for the preservation of a strong two-party system in our nation if the democratic process is to survive.

If this current meeting of Negro elected officials could have been held prior to the recent balloting for president, perhaps a consensus of opinion could have been reached which would have prevented candidate George Wallace from carrying a single state. The Negroes had the votes to do it.

Our officials should try to take a broad bi-partisan view of issues and problems, rather than the narrow partisan view, and they can strive to be statesmen, instead of mere politicians.

Again, we congratulate and commend the efforts of this conference.

Over 200 Black Elected Officials To The Southern States Are Gathering For Future Strategy

1800 G St. N.W. • Wash. D. C. 20506

ATLANTA, Georgia — The first Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials will be held Dec. 11-14 in Atlanta, it was announced today by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

Main speakers for the four-day conference will include U. S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., Dr. Kenneth Clark of New York, State Rep. Julian Bond of Atlanta, and newly elected Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm of New York.

In addition to the general sessions, the black elected officials will attend a number of workshops and panel discussions arranged by the Voter Education Project to enable them to fill their offices more effectively. Between 200 and 300 of the 380 black elected officials in the South are expected to attend.

Rep. Bond will deliver the opening address at an 8 p.m. dinner Dec. 11. During last summer Rep. Bond gathered case histories for a soon-to-be-published VEP booklet on how black candidates in the South conduct their campaigns.

Attorney General Clark will speak at a banquet Dec. 13. John Wheeler of Durham, president of the Southern Regional Council, will preside and VEP Director Vernon E. Jordan Jr. will introduce the speaker.

Mayor Hatcher will speak at a public forum Dec. 12 at Clark College. Students from the Atlanta University complex and the public will be invited to attend and pose questions for Mayor Hatcher and a panel of four other black officeholders.

Richard Hatcher

Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, will highlight The Southern Regional Council, for Southern Black Elected Officials in Atlanta, Georgia, December 11-14, 1968. Some 300 persons from across the South are expected to attend.

Dr. Clark, noted New York psychologist and president of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center, will speak at a luncheon Dec. 12. Speaker that morning will be Dr. Samuel D. Cook of Duke University, chairman of the VEP advisory committee, who will trace the history of Negro political participation in the South.

Mrs. Chisholm, who won election Nov. 5 in New York's Bedford-Stuyvesant area, is the first Negro woman to be sent to Congress. She will address the conference's concluding luncheon Dec. 14.

With the exception of the forum at Clark College and the Dec. 13 banquet, Attorney General Clark will speak, all sessions will be held at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel, which will be conference headquarters. The Dec. 13 banquet will be held at the American Motor Hotel.

A luncheon panel Dec. 13 will feature five Negro candidates who recently mounted major campaigns in the South and last. The five and the offices they sought are Maynard Jackson, U. S. Senate in Georgia; Reginald A. Hawkins, governor in North Carolina; Charles Evers, U. S. House in Mississippi; George A. Payton, U. S. House in South Carolina; and A. W. Willis, mayor in Memphis.

Three black experts on finance and taxation will appear on a panel on the morning of Dec. 13. They are Gerald Lamb, Connecticut state treasurer; Theodore Jones, Illinois director of revenue; and Alfred Pelham, chairman of Great Lakes Mutual Life Insurance Company, Detroit.

Appearing on the panel with Mayor Hatcher will be State Rep. Robert Clark of Holmes County, Miss.; City Councilman Henry Marsh of Richmond, Va.; State Rep. J. C. Daugherty of Atlanta; and John McCown, newly elected commissioner from Hancock County, Ga.

A panel discussion will follow Dr. Cook's Dec. 12 address. Members of the panel will be State Sen. Barbara Jordan of Houston, Texas; Lawrence T. Guyot Jr., chairman of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party; Dr. C. G. Gomillion, school board member from Tuskegee, Ala.; and Joseph A. Jordan Jr., city councilman from Norfolk, Va.

Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen will greet the officeholders at the first morning session on Dec. 12.

The officials will divide into five groups for workshops on the afternoon of Dec. 12 and of Dec. 13, and the morning of Dec. 14.

Purpose of the four-day meeting, which is wholly sponsored by VEP, is to bring the elected officials together to discuss mutual problems, to share experiences, and to receive information designed to help them serve more effectively.

Only those officials holding elected public offices are being invited. The list includes 151 city officials, 78 law enforcement and judicial officials, 72 school board members, 35 county officials, and 30 state legislators, all from the 11 states of the Old South.

VEP has employed the Rev. John Morris, former executive director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, to handle planning and arrangements for the conference. VEP has held somewhat similar conferences for newly elected Negro officials in Mississippi and Louisiana during the past year.

The Voter Education Project, a program of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., supports projects of voter registration, citizenship education and leadership training in the 11 Southern states.

The Southern Regional Council is a non-profit nonpartisan organization of white and Negro Southerners formed in 1944 to advance "equal opportunity for all the South's people."

Blacks in Office

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1968

'One of the Miracles of the Democratic Process'

ATLANTA—More than 200 of the South's 385 Negro elected officials gathered in Atlanta last week, and the most remarkable thing to many of those who saw it was that it had occurred at all.

"Four years ago," Attorney General Ramsey Clark said in a speech Friday, "we could have held this meeting in the telephone booth in the lobby—and not interfered with anybody who wanted to make a phone call."

The black officials, who included state legislators such as Julian Bond of Georgia and law enforcement officers such as Sheriff Lucius D. Amerson of Macon County, Ala., plus holders of many humbler posts, actually filled a fair-sized banquet hall. In this alone, Southerners with sharp memories found a monument.

Bi-Racial Communications

Ralph McGill, the columnist who is publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, recalled some of the first tentative and almost timid moves toward bi-racial communications in the region nearly 25 years ago.

"For me, as well as many others, the fact of the conference [last week] was an emotional experience," Mr. McGill wrote. "... what has happened has been, and is, one of the miracles of the democratic process."

The assembled officeholders did more than dramatize the impact of the Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 and the registration campaigns which together have increased Negro enrollment to more than 3.1 million.

Their first Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials, sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, also brought out some differences in outlook and approach. "These guys don't all think alike," said Vernon E. Jordan Jr., the project director. "They've all got their own ideas, their own approaches, and their own special political problems."

Black Underrepresentation

Negroes remain under-represented in the South and most of those who hold public office find themselves pressed to assume broader responsibilities for blacks outside their immediate area and jurisdiction. While some argued for a more activist role, involving devices such as "extra-legal hearings" to pressure white conservatives, others insisted that the Negro should take pains to do their own jobs well.

At the conference, most of the officials appeared to concentrate on more specific problems such as detailed legal matters and the bewildering complexities of obtaining money from Washington. As representatives of some of the most poverty-stricken areas of the country, they displayed an intimate sense of local shortcomings on everything from street lights to housing projects.

Many of the officials are inexperienced and some are poorly educated. To help out, the voter project disclosed plans to establish "service centers" for black leaders in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia.

Mr. Jordan, who indicated that centers would begin operating next month in connection with predominantly Negro colleges, said they will provide information and supply student interns to work in the more demanding offices.

Some participants complained that in emphasizing the more specific problems, the conference had failed to generate ideas for overall programs to help Negroes on a regional or even national basis. "They're so broken apart in so many little pieces it's terrible," one critic said. "Somebody ought to be filling out a national perspective. They've stopped up to be advocates, but I haven't met anybody who's mad yet."

Practically all the Negro officials lead lonely lives in their dealings with white colleagues. The lone Negro on a Louisiana city council observed sadly: "If I argue for it, everybody gets real quiet."

But they appear to be learning the ropes. A constable from Mississippi calmly explained to a law-enforcement seminar that he had the right to chase lawbreakers out of his district and even out of the county.

The stocky, slow-talking lawman explained that he receives fees for each task he performs, and he observed whimsically that "the farther I run him the more money I stand to make."

The South and the Law

ONE OF THE strong undertones at the Southwide Conference for Black Elected Officials, which ended over the weekend in Atlanta, was frustration approaching bitterness about what is expected of the Nixon administration.

Is it exaggerated? It may be. But it is significant that this view is prevalent among men and women who have fought great odds and often endured great hardship and intimidation to win a toehold in Southern political life. They know they had to do it against the toughest kind of state and local opposition. They know they had to rely upon the federal government's enforcement of the Constitution of the United States.

That enforcement often has faltered. Indeed, for a century even the federal government ignored the 14th Amendment (requiring "equal protection of the laws" and requiring that a state's representation in Congress be reduced if it disfranchised people because of race) and the 15th Amendment (further guaranteeing that states could not deny people the right to vote because of race).

WHY WAS THE law of the land ignored? This sad chapter in the nation's history began with the compromise of 1877, in which reactionary Southern power changed a presidential race's outcome in exchange for agreement that the law would not be enforced.

Most of the 225 Negro officials who gathered in Atlanta were elected for this reason only: The defenders of Southern wrongs, fighting under a false banner of states' rights, finally failed to prevent the federal courts from applying the Constitution and failed to prevent passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

In short, these officials were here because the federal government finally renounced the wicked compromise of 1877.

The rights that have been restored, after a century's neglect, are not firmly fixed. An administration has just been elected which has talked weak enforcement. Many white people may not know what that means. But the black officials who assembled here know what it means.

* * *

ATTY. GEN. RAMSEY Clark, in an extemporaneous speech obviously coming from deep conviction as an official and as a white Southerner, called attention to another ugly compromise required by the defenders of the worst in the South. To get the Voting Rights Act through Congress, it was necessary to accept a cutoff date in the effectiveness of some of its main provisions. Mr. Clark referred to "the expiration of some of the most important sanctions and controls in what seemed a long time then but now seems no time—Aug. 8, 1970." Will it be extended?

State and local governments at that time may return to the devices which many have used to keep Negroes outside working democracy, such as discriminatory use of literacy tests. The Department of Justice no longer will be able to rectify local abuses by sending in voting examiners (registrars).

Further, Mr. Clark noted, the most effective federal device for requiring enforcement of the Constitution on school segregation—guidelines and their enforcement—now may be gutted.

* * *

FEW SOUTHERN spokesmen in Congress stood up for the Voting Rights Act. (Two who did, Congressmen Charles Weltner and James Mackay from the two Atlanta districts, have been defeated, as have some others). Is it any wonder that Negroes who finally have gained a small place in Southern democracy are deeply disturbed about what will happen if the Nixon administration is in effect weak on the Constitution?

This was only a conference. The President-elect may not have taken note of it. But he must not ignore the sentiment it represented, or the fact that the South's best sons white and black (of whom Ramsey Clark is one) do not want any subtle slipping back to the ugliest part of its past.

RALPH McGILL ATLANTA CONSTITUTION 12-12-68

Southerners At Their Best

Pre-Christmas traffic was heavy along Atlanta's streets and darkness was coming on when I turned into a hotel entrance. It was with a feeling of expectancy and some excitement that I entered and went to the table where the first Southwide conference of black elected officials was being registered. More than 200 of some 385 such officials, all chosen in local, county and state elections, were in attendance.

This conference, surely unique, certainly a first, unquestionably historic, was sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the privately financed Southern Regional Council.

For me, as well as many others, the fact of the conference was an emotional experience. I stood there recalling the winter of 1944—almost a quarter century ago. In that time meetings were held discussing the merging of the old Commission on Interracial Cooperation, founded in 1919, with a new organization of broader scope and potential.

The Problems

The old commission had concerned itself, necessarily and realistically, with the immediate problems of the time—lynchings, which were many and brutal, justice in the courts — and with providing a bridge across which the separated races of the South might find a way to meet, talk and work together toward ends that would make for a better South and nation.

The new organization was called the Southern Regional Council. Its board included 80 Southerners from both races, representing major religious faiths and 13 states in the region. It set about to collect facts, to learn what the real conditions were, what the people wanted, thought, believed.

In 1951 the Council officially committed itself to the aim of an unsegregated society—not a society in which the Negro became "like" a white man, but one in which he had his own pride and identity as a black-skinned American.

It was not always easy. But the Council persisted. It demonstrated merit. It was fortunate in executive directors and staff.

Now, as I stood, remembering, it was December 1968.

In 1944 there was a comparative handful of Southern Negroes registered to vote—most of them in a few of the larger cities, Atlanta included. The number of Negroes holding public office could be counted on the fingers of one hand. The offices held were all minor ones.

Elected Officials

Now, in 1968, due in considerable measure to the Council's Voter Education Project, there are some 385 elected black officials. (In 1965 there were only 70.) The number of registered black voters in the 13 states today is 3¼ million. In 1944 it was approximately ¼ million.

The conference in Atlanta brought together the Negro officeholders-elect for political "schooling." What has happened has been, and is, one of the miracles of the democratic process. The black Southerner could not really everywhere freely register to vote until the congressionally enacted voter rights laws of 1964. These did not become truly effective until 1965.

In this historic conference the school board members meet in workshops, the city hall officials in another, county officers in still another, and so on.

These newly elected black men—most of them recall being denied the ballot—come from many segregated backgrounds. They lack political education and sophistication. Some, from rural areas, are products of segregated schools and, therefore, lack education. A few will be subjected to sabotage through noncooperation and opposition.

It gave one a feeling of pride in his region and country to see the Southerner and the South at its best.

After all, it is not so long from 1944 to 1968! And there is more to be done. Much more.

Yes, We Can Bring Equal Justice

ATLANTA JOURNAL 12-21-68

Voting Rights Act of 1965 Slowly Opens Many Doors

By ATTY. GEN. RAMSEY CLARK

We are here tonight because we are a democracy and a democracy that will ultimately extend equal justice to all of its people. We are here tonight because we are making progress toward that end. We are making progress because we care.

I well remember the long nights in the Department of Justice in the winter of 1964 when we were trying to find the legal techniques for a voting rights act. I well remember President Johnson's deep personal commitment to liberating the Negro, the minority in America; to bring the vote to all Americans.

As the principal federal officer in charge of the enforcement of the federal court order under which the march from Selma to Montgomery took place in the Spring of '65, I had the privilege to see great men—brave men, men who believed in America—march that we might be here tonight. Dr. Martin Luther King was in the front rank.

THEN THERE was that moment, August 6, 1965, when the rotunda of the nation's Capitol was filled with the nation's great and the President of the United States signed the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and it became the law of the land.

I know there are thousands and thousands of people in these United States who have come to doubt and some who do not believe, that this nation has either the purpose or the capability to bring equal justice to all of its citizens.

You demonstrate better than anything perhaps, that this is not so; that the system, however awkward, however slow, can work; that our purpose as a people and the purpose of our laws is equality and justice for all.

About the Forum Writer

U. S. ATTY. GEN. RAMSEY CLARK recently addressed some 225 of the South's 380 elected Negro officials attending the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials. The conference at Atlanta was under auspices of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council. This is part of that address.

Mr. Clark, who shortly will leave office, is a Texan, the son of retired Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark. He has served as attorney general since 1966.

- The Voting Rights Act is a bold experiment in democracy. It has made a difference. Four years ago we could have held this meeting in the telephone booth in the lobby and not interfere with anybody who wanted to make a phone call.

* * *

THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT of 1965, like every contested piece of legislation, has compromises. One compromise was the expiration in five years of many of the most important sanctions and controls in what then seemed a long time and now seems no time. On Aug. 8, 1970, there will be the opportunity for jurisdictions to reinstate qualifications to vote through subjective tests such as literacy.

Then, unless something is done, the power of the Department of Justice to place examiners and obervers in places where they are needed to protect the fundamental right of a demoratic people will expire. Then state legislatures may prescribe new standards, new procedures, for voting throughout this land.

* * *

IT SEEMS IMPERATIVE to me that we redouble our efforts today to enlist in the support of democracy, under the auspices of the Voting Rights Act and this great Voter Education Project, all of our people; that we provide for the future by extending the sanctions of the Voting Rights Act of '65 for years to come. Their necessity, to me, seems clear.

* * *

I WILL NOT be fair if I say that voting, the right to vote, the exercise of that right, is the entire solution. We must go forward, seriously, on many fronts and with rare courage: the rare courage that you black elected officials have shown us and of which I am grateful. We know the areas. We sometimes think that because the struggle is so difficult perhaps, the road isn't clear; but it is. Separate-but-equal was never so; could not be; will never be. There can be no equality with separation in any society, least of all in a highly urban and complex nation of 200 million such as ours. Separation must be ended, and all of its manifestations, to bring equality. The task is terribly difficult.

* * *

ONE AREA is education. Start with the children. Education is America's greatest industry. One in three in this country is engaged, full time, in education as student, teachers or administrator. In 1954, May 17, the Supreme Court said that as to public schooling there can be no separation. For nine years, through litigation in the courts of the South, the constitutional rights of our citizens were litigated.

* * *

IN SEPTEMBER, 1963, those who knew saw one per cent of the Negro children in the public schools of the 11 states of the Confederacy in schools that were desegregated. "All deliberate speed" meant nine centuries. People with vision saw this.

People of determination changed it, in large measure, because of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, because of Title VI, because of the much-maligned guidelines of the Office of Education promulgated in conformity with law thereunder.

One per cent in '63 became 16 per cent in '67 and when the returns are in, this will surely be over 20 per cent in '68. This law that has had barely three years to work its way has made a major difference and has shown that the constitutional rights of our citizens in the South can be fulfilled.

BUT BECAUSE of the immensity of this nation, while we concentrated here where the need was so great we barely noticed the new segregation building up steadily and swiftly in urban America.

In five short years, 1950-1955, the percentage of Negro children in the public schools of Baltimore increased from 50 to 61. In St. Louis, it was from 49 to 60. In Chicago from 42 to 50. A profound change reflecting patterns of living meant a new segregation in Central City America unless we awoke.

Slowly the resources of the law are brought to bear and now four suits, outside the South, are brought to desegregate our schools there. Soon we must recognize, among other things, that the litigations that take so long and the guideline techniques that can work so well must be brought to bear elsewhere. And soon we must recognize that segregation in schooling is incompatible with our principles and I believe with the Constitution, whatever the cause.

* * *

ON THE FOREFRONT today, we are moving in the area of employment; and only beginning. There is vast discrimination in employment: the opportunity to get a job, to keep a job, to improve in your job, to get a better job.

The '64 Act, Title VII promised to remedy this. It is essential that we enlist all of our energies, as a people, to do it. Today, we have brought finally 34 suits. When you think of the immense industry of the United States, you see how very slow the beginning is. Twenty-four this year, with so far to go.

* * *

ONE REASON you must understand. For all the might of the federal government, the resources that we, as a peo- have provided there are terribly inadequate.

- The Civil Rights Division as devoted a group a people to the principles of this country that has ever been collected in one place—with one mission, in my judgment—is fewer than a hundred lawyers. Their average age is under 30.
- Their burden is to enforce the Voting Rights Act to litigate school desegregation in perhaps 30,000 school districts over the U. S.; to bring Title II of the Act, promising open accommodation, to a reality; to enforce all of our civil rights laws.
- This small resource would be inadejquate for one state. It would be inadequate for one single law throughout the U.S.

* * *

THE REASONS that black and white in America must show the world that they can live together with respect, with stability and with love are many.

One is human dignity—my dignity, your dignity. Another is to remove this gross imperfection from our national character: to show that we can be what we say we are.

* * *

BUT THERE IS another. It is survival. It really is, you know. We will add on this planet, in the next decade, one billion souls and most will be blacks, and browns and yellows. Millions will starve. And millions will live in more than affluence; amidst surfeit, then will have more than they can use.

* * *

SCIENCE and technology—with 90 per cent of the scientists who ever lived working today—and population explosions compel now equality.

And if we do not demonstrate that it is possible, here in America, black and white together with love and strength, then this poor, tired world has more ahead than it can handle.

VEP NEWS

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT, INC. 5 FORSYTH ST., N.W. ATLANTA, GA. 30303

VOLUME 5 APRIL — JUNE, 1971 NUMBER 1

VEP VOTING RIGHTS TEAM TOURS MISSISSIPPI

A two-week Voting Rights Tour was conducted June 22 through June 30 as part of a massive Voter Education Project campaign in Mississippi to register black voters. Featured on the Tour were John Lewis, VEP Executive Director, and Georgia State Representative Julian Bond, a VEP Board Member.

Prior to the Tour, the VEP had funded registration campaigns, conducted by local community organizations, in twenty Mississippi counties. Several local projects, facing the problem of reregistration in addition to registering new voters, requested the assistance of the VEP in dramatizing the need for minority participation in the political process.

It was felt by VEP and local registration groups that the Mississippi reregistration process was intended to roll back the black voting rights progress which had been made in recent years. The VEP had protested to the Justice Department and testified before a House Judiciary Subcommittee that the reregistration was unnecessary and was being carried out in violation of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. These objections were ignored and the Justice Department allowed the reregistration process to continue.

Local registration project reports from Mississippi in the months of May and June indicated that, as black voter registration efforts became more effective, incidents of intimidation and reprisal increased accordingly. The reports of violence included four known racial slayings in the Mississippi Delta in a five-day period, the most publicized being the death of 18-year-old Jo Etha Collier of Drew, Mississippi. Registration workers were reportedly shot at, arrested on false traffic charges, had their car tires slashed, and, in one instance, a minister and a nun engaged in canvassing efforts were threatened with a gun. Reports of fear of economic reprisal were commonplace from throughout Mississippi, where whites control black housing, jobs, Social Security checks, welfare, mortgages, etc. The VEP also received numerous reports of harassment and delaying tactics by white registrars.

Traveling primarily by car, the Tour began in Greenville, where Lewis and Bond were given an official police escort, the first of many on the trip, to their speaking engagement. Altogether, they made more than 39 stops in 25 Mississippi counties as they encouraged blacks to register before the July 2 voter registration deadline.

In describing the tour, John Lewis stated, "Our trip is an attempt to conquer the fear that black citizens have and to bring attention to the registration deadline. We must demonstrate to the people of Mississippi that they are not alone in their struggle."

The Tour, designed to mobilize black voter potential through personal contact, included door-to-door and plantation-to-plantation canvassing during the days. In rural and urban areas, Lewis and Bond met with the people on the street, in their homes, in the cotton fields, in pool halls—wherever potential black voters might be found. In the evenings, the black masses crowded into hot churches, schools, clubs and public buildings throughout the state to hear speeches by Bond and Lewis.

Although many of the more-than-200 black candidates for public office in Mississippi came out to the mass rallys, the Tour was strictly nonpartisan. "We did not tell blacks who to vote for or what political party to join." Lewis explained. "We simply told black people that they can begin to control their own destiny and that one of the first steps is to register to vote."

In several Mississippi towns and counties where black registration constitutes a high percentage of the total voting power, the Tour members were surprised to meet white politicians who, perhaps for the first time, were coming out to black mass meetings to woo votes.

Such signs of black political progress brought inspiration and encouragement to the VEP, an organization which had

VEP SUPPORTS LOCAL PROJECTS

In the period from January 1 through June 30, 1971, the Voter Education Project provided funding in support of 34 local voter registration and education projects in six of the eleven southern states. The states and number of grants includes: Alabama, 2; Georgia, 2; Louisiana, 1; Mississippi, 16; North Carolina, 9; South Carolina, 4.

LEGISLATIVE INTERN PROGRAM

During 1971, VEP interns have worked with black legislators in every southern state except Arkansas, which has not yet elected any blacks to its state house. Twenty-seven interns served in the ten-state program, most of them working full-time for the duration of the legislative session. The intern group included undergraduate students, law or graduate students, and several college graduates who had recently received their degrees.

The interns assisted the legislators in a variety of ways, including research on problems of concern to the legislators, analysis of pending bills, attendance at committee meetings and public hearings on behalf of the legislators, liaison with other government agencies, preparation of news releases, answering mail, and filling requests from constituents.

The interns in the 1971 program were: Oscar Sykes, John Marks, Eroneous Earl McCloud, Gladys McMillan, Dorothy Young, Alvin Brown, Leroy Slade, Aretha Haley, Washington Marshall, Carolyn Stamps, John Wesley Jackson, Phyllis Harden, Mable Y. Jones, Luther Battiste, James Moreland, Boykin Parsons, Van Caldwell, Claudia Jean Inman, Etrula Trotter, Charles Jenkins, Brenda Shepherd, Henry L. Watson, Thomas Harris and Sandra Gaskins.

Also three students from Hamilton College spent their "January work-term" assisting some of the Georgia legislators, particularly Reps. Julian Bond and Ben Brown. These students, all seniors, were: Harry Long, Humphrey Polano, and Philip Duke.

In addition to the legislative interns, VEP provided interns to several municipal officials, including Mayor Howard Lee of Chapel Hill, Vice-Mayor Henry Marsh of Richmond, Vice-Mayor Maynard Jackson and Alderman Ira Jackson of Atlanta.

YOUTH INCREASE BLACK VOTE

The ratification of the 26th Amendment to the United States Constitution by Ohio, the last of the necessary 38 States, on June 30, 1971, has given 18-20 year-olds the right to the ballot in federal, state, and local elections.

In the eleven southern states where VEP has assisted and encouraged black political participation for the past 9 years, the new amendment means that nearly one million black youth will be able to participate in the political system. In the 18-20 year-old bracket, black youth constitute a higher percentage of the total black population as contrasted with the comparable white age grouping.

The Voter Education Project, which has already begun funding local registration projects with an emphasis on registering the new voting potential, plans to make a concerted effort to mobilize young black voters. The effort will include the development of voter education materials designed specifically to relate to the interests and needs of black youth.

Executive Director John Lewis has stated that youth registration will be one of the program priorities for VEP in the Seventies. He explains, "Black youth of today must continue their struggle for liberation and self-determination at the ballot boxes. The task of convincing black youth that they can effect meaningful changes through the political process is a complex problem, but we will not be satisfied until the energies of young blacks are committed toward that end."

BLACK LEGISLATORS DISCUSS REAPPORTIONMENT

At the request of several black state legislators, the VEP recently convened a conference to discuss congressional and state reapportionment and redistricting. Of the forty black legislators holding office in the South, approximately twenty-eight attended the meeting in Atlanta on June 11 and 12.

The legislators were addressed by three experts on reapportionment and redistricting: Charles Morgan, Jr., President of the Southern Regional Office of the American Civil Liberties Union, based in Atlanta, Georgia; George Taylor, Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, located in Jackson, Mississippi and Fraser Barron of David Hackett Associates, Washington, D. C.

Coincidentally, the conference was held shortly after two court decisions relating to the question of reapportionment were announced. The decisions generated considerable discussion among the officials concerning the question of multi-member and single-member legislative districts. It is not clear at this time whether the courts will require southern legislatures to draw only single-member districts, although this conclusion might be drawn from the court's decision in Hinds County, Mississippi.

A new approach to redistricting was presented by Fraser Barron. Computer Research On Nonpartisan Districting (CROND) has developed a method of redistricting by computer. By feeding population figures and other types of information into the computer, several plans can be developed within a few minutes. In addition to the time-saving element of this process, the political problems inherent in plans drawn by legislatures can be overcome.

Although wide use of the CROND plan for redistricting has not been accomplished, according to Mr. Barron, the method has found acceptance in the courts. (For further information on the CROND plan, please contact the Voter Education Project.)

Most southern state legislatures will meet in the fall to make final decisions regarding reapportionment and redistricting of their respective states.

LEWIS DELIVERS TESTIMONY TO HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE

On June 10, 1971, John Lewis, Executive Director of the Voter Education Project, Inc. (VEP), told a House Judiciary Subcommittee in Washington, D. C., that now is the time for a rededication of federal commitment and effort toward insuring free and unrestricted black participation in southern politics.

In citing examples of progress in the South, Mr. Lewis noted that more than one-and-one-half million blacks have become registered to vote and approximately 600 blacks have been elected to public office since the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

"These figures certainly give cause for hope," Mr. Lewis stated, "but there are other figures which indicate the enormity of the problems still facing us. There are still approximately two-and-one-half million unregistered blacks in the South, including a rough estimate of the 18-year-old voting age population."

Mr. Lewis' testimony was presented to the Civil Rights Oversight Subcommittee, chaired by California Representative Don Edwards. The Subcommittee was conducting hearings on the topic, "Enforcement of the Voting Rights Act." In his statement, Mr. Lewis cited example after example of problems which blacks have encountered in seeking to gain the right to vote.

In explaining reasons for the large number of unregistered black voters, Lewis cited white economic reprisal as a chief factor. "Whites who control jobs, housing, welfare checks, Social Security, food stamps, Medicare, and mortgages," he stated, "have a very real weapon with which to threaten blacks who would 'step out of line' and register to vote."

Lewis also indicated that blacks in the South have a sense of hopelessness because they feel they have nowhere to turn for justice. Recalling that blacks once viewed the federal government as an advocate of civil rights and equal opportunity, he charged. "The current Administration has earned an image of seeking to woo white political support and of seeking to tone down civil rights enforcement."

"To continue the passive enforcement level which now exists," Lewis continued, "is to seriously jeopardize the fundamental rights of two-and-a-half million unregistered blacks. To refuse to remove the remaining obstacles is to condemn these people to continuing second-class citizenship."

Among many positive responses to Mr. Lewis' testimony, the Atlanta Constitution, in an editorial statement, included the following comments under the headline, "Weapon of Change:"

> John Lewis, director of the Atlanta-based Voter Education Project, was in Washington this week, offering in testimony before a congressional subcommittee somewhat melancholy comment on the successes and failures of the effort to make black Americans part of the political processes in the South.
> Lewis' statement to the congressional subcommittee is a balanced one, taking into account both progress and continued difficulties in the battle for racial justice. We especially agree with one of his concluding comments, that the "power of the ballot can be a mighty weapon of change."

Lewis, a veteran of the southern civil rights movement and former Chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, was a leader of the 1965 March from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama. In that march, which was brutally attacked by local and state policemen, Lewis suffered head injuries and was hospitalized. It was the Selma march, in large part, which dramatized the necessity for and precipitated the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

ALABAMA OFFICIALS DISCUSS EDUCATION

Black school board members from Bullock, Greene, Jefferson, Macon and Sumter Counties met in Montgomery, Alabama on June 5 to participate in a conference sponsored by the Alabama Center for Elected Officials. The conference discussed school board members' roles in school desegregation problems, Federal assistance programs, and integrated textbook selection. Mr. Leon Hall, Field Coordinator of Southern Regional Council's School Desegregation Project, and Mr. Rufus Huffman, NAACP Education Specialist were resource persons for the conference.

Massive suspension of black students, segregated bussing, dropping extra-curricular activities, breakdown of communications between school boards, superintendents, principals, teachers and students, etc. were some of the school desegregation problems discussed during the conference. Mr. Hall stated after much discussion that equitable policy affecting these problems should be enacted by the local boards and closely watched as it is implemented to assure communications to all persons affected in the schools.

Copies of the National School Lunch Program's income guidelines and the Advisory Statement on Development of Policy on Parental Involvement in Title I, ESEA Projects were provided by Mr. Huffman. He appealed for the school board members to take an active part in assuring free and reduced-priced lunches to all students who needed them, and to follow closely the implementation of the recent guidelines for parental involvement in Title I projects.

Pulitzer Prize winning poet Gwendolyn Brooks appeared unexpectedly during the sessions. She made short comments about her book "Bronzeville Boys and Girls" and gave the names and addresses of two black publishing companies, Broadside and Third World, from which integrated textbooks could be secured. Mr. Huffman provided copies of a bibliography of integrated textbooks compiled by the NAACP.

The Alabama Center for Elected Officials, located at Miles College in Birmingham, is one of four such Service Centers operated by the Voter Education Project. Other centers are located in Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana. Further information on the work of the Alabama Center may be obtained from the Center's Director, Mr. Sherrill Marcus.

BLACK GAINS FORECAST IN LOUISIANA

The State of Louisiana, one of two southern states holding general elections this year, is expected to show a substantial increase in the number of black elected officials, according to the reports of William H. Samuel, Jr., VEP Field Representative.

Since the enactment of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, the number of blacks holding elected office in Louisiana has mushroomed from fewer than 10 to 77. These black elected officials hold offices ranging from Justice of the Peace and Constable to state legislator.

The predominantly black town of Grambling, in Lincoln Parish, has the most black elected officials with a mayor, chief of police, and five aldermen. In West Feliciana Parish, three police jurors (county commissioners) and three school board members are black.

The Voter Education Project, currently funding several local non-partisan voter registration efforts, expect an increasing number of financial requests from the State of Louisiana due to increased election-year activity.

A Louisiana Voting Rights Tour, similar to one held recently in the State of Mississippi, is currently being planned by the VEP. Although details are incomplete at this time, the Tour will probably be scheduled early in the month of August, 1971.

supported voter registration in Mississippi since its inception in 1962. In the early 1960's, both Lewis and Bond had been founders and officials of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), another organization which sent registration workers into Mississippi. Thus, the agenda for the Voting Rights Tour covered very little new territory for either major participant.

"We received police escorts in towns where we might once have been arrested or harassed as freedom riders, outside agitators, and troublemakers," stated Julian Bond. "In one town where several black men had been killed for first attempting to register and vote, we were welcomed by the white mayor. In another town, we addressed a black mass meeting in the county court house—traditionally a symbol of oppression for blacks."

The signs of an emerging new politics were welcome in Mississippi, a state with a long history of racial violence and exploitation. Since 1965, black voter registration has been increased from 28,000 to more than 280,000 in 1971. Mississippi, with 92 black elected officials, is second only to Alabama in having the largest number in the nation. With the probability that many of the black candidates now running for office will be elected in the fall, Mississippi might well emerge as the leader with the highest number of black elected officeholders.

A New South

During the 1960's black Americans in the South made remarkable gains in their struggle for full citizenship and the right to participate meaningfully in the political process. Registration of black voters more than doubled; the number of black elected officials increased over six-fold; and many white officials have begun to display greater sensitivity to black constituents.

These are extremely important accomplishments. It is crucial, however, to recognize just where they have brought us. The fetters of political acquiescence have been shattered. The march toward an equal share of political power has begun. Many barriers, particularly the most blatant ones, have been overcome. Yet, the goal of a truly representative system of government is still distant.

If we fail to realize how incomplete this movement now is and do not attend to the remaining needs, the accomplishments thus far may turn out to be an empty achievement, a cruel hoax leading to the final embitterment of those who have invested so much faith and work in trying to make democracy a reality.

Julian Bond, Ben Brown, Bobby Hill, and Bill Alexander, four of the fifteen black members of the Georgia legislature.

Fred Gray, one of two black members of Alabama legislature, addressing VEP-sponsored statewide meeting of black elected officials in Montgomery.

We must not allow this to happen. All of us who are concerned about the health and justice of this society must support those men, women, and children who are still struggling for some control over their destinies in urban ghettos, small towns, and rural areas all over the South. Their progress during the last decade was one of the most promising developments in this troubled land. This promise must be fulfilled. The Voter Education Project, Inc., is dedicated to this mission.

The Voter Education Project

The Voter Education Project (VEP) was created in 1962 as part of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., a bi-racial organization devoted to equal opportunities for all peoples of the South. In June 1970 VEP separated from the Council and became an independent corporation with its own tax-exempt status. This separation was prompted by certain provisions of the 1969 Tax Reform Law.

VEP was established to investigate the causes and remedies of low political participation by southern blacks. By using the method of direct grants for voter registration drives, VEP was able to promote greater participation and also document the problems and progress of these activities. Voter registration continues as a major concern of VEP, but recently attention has also been given to citizenship education and assistance to black elected officials.

VEP works primarily out of Atlanta, but there are state VEP offices in Arkansas, North Carolina, and South Carolina. VEP also sponsors college-related service centers for elected officials in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi.

Voter Registration

When VEP began its work in 1962, less than a million-and-a-half black voters were registered in the eleven states of the Old Confederacy. By 1971 the number had passed three million. During this period VEP made thousands of grants to communities throughout the region to support the voter registration drives which brought about this change.

Today there are still approximately two million voting-age blacks who are unregistered, not including those under twenty-one years of age. Clearly the work is not finished. Many areas of the South were relatively untouched by the movement of the last decade; other areas face the necessity of re-registering when redistricting takes place. While most of the blatant obstacles of an earlier day have been destroyed, there remain in many places subtle but effective hindrances to registration of black people. Financial and technical support of local groups is still needed, if the proportion of eligible blacks who are registered is to equal the registration percentages of other groups in the population.

VEP is also beginning to expand its registration activities into Mexican-American and poor white communities. And VEP will be sponsoring registration programs aimed at the newly enfranchised youth between eighteen and twenty years old.

Groups receiving grants from VEP differ widely in their make-up; some are temporary ad hoc organizations, while others are local branches of national organizations. Grant applicants must indicate the need for registration in their area, the methods they will use, and the nature of their organization. The typical grant ranges from one to two thousand dollars and helps defray the unavoidable costs of training workshops, publicity, canvassing, and transportation to registration offices.

Grant recipients are instructed that no funds can be used for partisan purposes, and they must submit weekly financial and program reports. VEP staff members monitor and assist these groups during the period of the registration drive.

Citizenship Education

Registration to vote is indispensable to political participation, but by itself it is not enough. Persons who have long been excluded from the political process need instruction in the ways this process works. They need to be informed of their rights and the procedures used in exercising and protecting these rights. They need information about the nature and operation of various government offices and programs. They need to be acquainted with how their participation may influence the manner in which government affects their lives.

VEP has promoted citizenship education of this kind through the sponsorship of workshops and conferences and the production of written and audio-visual materials. VEP believes there must be greatly increased attention to such educational services if the expanded suffrage is to yield meaningful returns.

Assistance To Elected Officials

One of the dramatic and rewarding results of the expanded black suffrage in the South is the increasing number of blacks elected to public office. This number climbed above 650 in the 1970 elections. Since blacks were excluded from political office in the past, most of these newly-elected men and women lack governmental experience. Also many of them must operate in still hostile environments. And the resources available to most of their white counterparts are not so accessible to them.

Thus there is a real need and justification for various kinds of assistance to these black officials. It is critical that they be given every opportunity to demonstrate that the election of blacks to public office can bring significant benefits to their constituents. Otherwise, it will be hard to maintain the belief that adherence to the rules of the political system is a fruitful activity for poor and aggrieved people.

As these needs have emerged in recent years, the Voter Education Project has tried to develop programs to meet them. Conferences and workshops have been held. Materials have been distributed. Legal and professional consultation has been supplied. Interns have been provided.

On four predominantly black college campuses, Centers for Elected Officials have been established. They are located at Clark College in Atlanta, Miles College in Birmingham, Southern University in Baton Rouge, and Tougaloo College in Jackson. They are designed not only to serve the needs of elected officials, but also to involve students and faculty in this undertaking. Assistance to officials in other states is conducted by the VEP office in Atlanta and the state VEP offices in Arkansas, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

The resources presently available to assist minority group officials are not adequate even for the current number, and this number is certain to grow each year. In addition to providing these officials with a proper orientation to their new positions, there is an urgent need to give them technical assistance in their efforts to tap the only source of large-scale aid for their communities—federal assistance programs.

Research

VEP maintains statistics on registration and voting, data on black elected officials, and other information concerning black political participation in the South. VEP also undertakes on occasion in-depth studies of elections or other events which promise to reveal more about the problems and progress of this participation. This research not only is useful to the other functions of VEP, but it has become the main source of such information for government agencies, the news media, scholars, and others.

Reports From Recent VEP-Sponsored Projects

"A 93 year old woman was registered for the first time. Said she was glad to be able to vote before she dies."

Ripley, Tennessee

"A 70 year old man said that he had gone to register a long time ago, but because of the inhuman treatment he received and the literacy test, he was just afraid to go back and try again."

Coahoma County, Mississippi
September 1970

"I went into the Register's office with 5 people Saturday morning. Four walked out, one got registered, they was afraid that the Plantation owner would make them move or maybe the Welfare would cut them off, someone must have said something to them."

Sharkey County, Mississippi
March 1969

"Some persons feared going out of there area to register. They feared taking a test, the publicity of being there, trouble they may cause, losing there jobs if they would get off to register, and the long ways over town."

Moore County, North Carolina
April 1969

"Our only registration day is the second Saturday in each month from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. We asked for two extra days but did not get them.

Amelia. Virginia
September 1970

"This project represented a new involvement of a segment of the poor community which has never been involved in political affairs and were never thought about by prior political leadership."

Laurinburg, North Carolina
April 1969

"We know there is only two things the white man know, and that is the ballot and dollar, he understand both very well. He has done a good job of selling them the idea that their ballot does not mean anything. I long to see the Negro wake up and take his rightful place in this America."

Baton Rouge, Louisiana
August 1969

"There is not a water or sewage system there, nor do they have a paved street in the Black vicinity. They invited the Mayor for the July 7 meeting, he failed to respond."

Lincoln County, Arkansas
July 1969

VEP's Future

Virtually all of VEP's funding in the past has come from foundations. In 1969 the Tax Reform Law greatly restricted the use of tax-exempt funds for voter registration activities. Among the new conditions are requirements that an organization must operate in five or more states and in more than one electoral period. VEP is one of the few organizations in the country which is able to comply with these requirements. Another new condition is that no more than twenty-five percent of an organization's budget can come from a single source. This means that VEP cannot rely on one or two large foundations for the bulk of its support.

Thus VEP must broaden its base of support if the continuation and expansion of its programs is to be assured. Efforts are being made to find new contributors not only among foundations and corporations, but also among private citizens throughout the country.

VEP is confident that progressive individuals and groups will support the efforts to achieve real democracy in the South. This nation cannot allow the 1970's to become a time of retreat from the needs and promises that face it.

RESOURCE MATERIALS FOR ELECTED OFFICIALS

The Voter Education Project has begun to survey the available materials which various elected officials might find helpful in their respective offices. In some instances, we have been able to include some specific document in a conference participant's packet. There is a wide difference among the states in the servicing of the state university, with appropriate publications for most categories of public office. Others have virtually nothing. In some instances, there are apparently effective municipal and school board associations which prepare pertinent materials for their members; but, across the eleven Southern states covered by the VEP, it is a spotty picture.

Following is a summary by states of some of the pertinent agencies which conference participants may want to be in touch with in their own local.

ALABAMA

The Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa (Telephone: 348-6010) provided us with a list of publications which are available, free of charge, on request. However, most are indicated as being 'Out of Print'.

Alabama League of Municipalities, John F. Watkins, Executive Director, P. O. Box 1270, Montgomery, Alabama 36102.

ARKANSAS

Arkansas Municipal League, Glenn G. Zimmerman, Executive Director, P. O. Box 38, North Little Rock, Ark. 72115. 501/FR5-6429. At a cost of $20.00 they will provide a large "Handbook for Arkansas Municipal Officials", with an annual supplement.

Arkansas School Boards Association, Dr. Robert C. Miles, Executive Secretary, University of Arkansas, Peabody 107, Fayetteville, Ark. 72701. 501/575-5109. They publish a handbook for school board members and indicate that all school board members should be receiving their monthly newsletter.

FCH Memo No. 58
November 1970

3.432 COOPERATIVE HOUSING FOR SMALLER TOWNS AND RURAL AREAS

A new way to finance good quality houses for moderate income families is now available. Arrangements under Section 236 of the National Housing Act, already used for thousands of well designed and successful cooperative housing units in urban areas can now be applied to finance cooperatives in smaller towns and rural areas.

The Secretaries of Agriculture and HUD have agreed: "Because of the complexity involved in processing applications for mortgage insurance under Section 236 for rental and cooperative housing, processing and commitment responsibility will be retained by HUD." (Joint memorandum of Agreement dated November 8, 1968.) As a result of this authorization, several pilot projects are already being built, including ones in South Dakota, Michigan, Arkansas, Puerto Rico and St. Croix in the Virgin Islands. Others are nearing the construction stage in Minnesota, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Florida and New York.

Cooperative housing under Section 236 usually involves joint ownership by their residents through a corporation of a fairly large number of houses. The group insurance and group buying advantages of a cooperative are greater if there are 200 or more member families working together.

Smaller communities in rural areas can support housing cooperatives of this desirable size. A single cooperative can be organized on a county or regional basis to own and operate several groups or clusters of housing located in nearby towns.

The special features of this kind of housing cooperative include:

local sponsorship by one or more established community groups, complete development of all plans, prices and other arrangements before members are solicited, presale of all dwelling units in each group or cluster of housing to approved applicants before closing the mortgage loan and starting construction, one mortgage for each cluster - each group or cluster of houses is financed by a single mortgage held by the cooperative corporation.

The management and operation of a housing cooperative follow the same established principles for all other cooperatives, including democratic control - one member = one vote, open occupancy, adequate reserves and regular audits, continuing education and elimination of speculative profits on resale.

The financing arrangements under Section 236 are specially designed to help families achieve home ownership on terms they can afford. Families earning more than about $4000 per year may qualify for interest subsidies that can reduce the interest payments on their share of the cooperative's mortgage to as low as one percent per year. Lower income families may qualify for rent supplements. But all member families must pay not less than one-fourth of their net cash income for all housing expenses including utilities and maintenance costs. There are no "free riders". This is private enterprise cooperative housing with special assistance to make available good homes for all families.

Cash downpayments are low. They must only cover "working capital" for the cooperative corporation usually no more than 200 to 300 dollars per family. The FHA insured mortgage covers all other costs of buying or building the housing.

Housing can be of any type. The cooperative can be set up to own detached or semi-detached houses, or townhouses, or apartments, or any combination of housing types.

Here is an example of the basic (minimum) monthly housing costs for a co-op dwelling unit assumed to cost $13,000, with financing under Section 236:

	Estimated Cost per Month
Interest and amortization on $13,000, figured at $25.30 per month per $1,000 (1% interest rate and a 40 year amortization period):	$33.00
Real estate taxes vary from one community to another, here we assume they will be $240 per year or:	$20.00
Individually metered utilities, including water, sewer, gas and electricity; and also interior decorating are usually paid by each member, estimated at:	25.00

	Estimated Cost Per Month
Maintenance and operation, including all repairs, insurance and required reserves for replacement and contingencies:	15.00
All other items including management, legal and audit, community and cooperative activities:	5.00
Basic housing costs per month:	$98.00

A family with a net cash income of $4,700 or less would pay $98.00 per month for housing expenses. They would pay $73.00 to the cooperative and an estimated $25.00 in individually billed utilities.

"Net Cash Income" excludes $300 for each minor dependent child plus a 5% general deduction to cover such items as Social Security payments, medical insurance, etc. Taking these deductions into account, a family with two dependent children and an annual gross income of $5600 or less would pay the minimum housing expenses indicated above.

A family with more than a net annual income of $4700 would pay 25% of its cash income for housing. There are maximum net income limits for families to join in this program but these are usually set high enough to take care of most families really needing decent housing. Once a family has joined a cooperative, it may remain in the cooperative even if its income goes up.

All members of housing cooperatives are entitled to the usual Homeowner Income Tax deductions for their share of interest on the cooperative's mortgage and real estate taxes. They are also entitled to receive back, when and if they decide to leave, their share of equity accumulation and the value of any improvements they may have made in their house after moving in. Resales are usually handled by the management agent for the cooperative for a nominal charge of perhaps $50. A family is selected from the waiting list to take the place of the outgoing member.

Local community organizations concerned about the housing condition in their area may be able to secure help in developing a rural area cooperative through the Foundation for Cooperative Housing. FCH Services, Inc., a nonprofit subsidiary of the Foundation, has helped organize more than 300 successful housing cooperatives throughout the country during the last 19 years. It receives compensation for its services only out of mortgage proceeds when a cooperative development actually goes under construction. There is no charge

1. trng. people to perform all 4 stages of putting project together
2. request no. of units initially you will take.

to a community sponsoring group for its services.

For further information please write the President for Development, FCH Services, Inc., 1012 14th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. Requests for assistance by a prospective community sponsoring group should include:

General Housing Need in the Area: This could be indicated by Census or other data on the number and percentage of dilapidated houses in the area; by evidence on the shortage of good housing (such as new industry with no housing available for employees) and by Census or other reliable data on the sizes of families and median family incomes of those needing housing.

What occupational groups are most in need of housing in your area -- teachers, service employees, industrial employees, farm employees? What would be their average incomes?

yes

Availability of Land: Has your organization tried to find one or more suitable sites? If yes, please tell what kinds of sites are available, whether public water and sewers are available, the approximate cost per acre or per dwelling unit, and how close they are to schools, public transportation, shopping, and employment. Please include a map of the county, city or town, and identify the location of available sites.

New Housing in the Area: Has there been any new housing built in your county during the last few years: (1) by your organization, (2) by others? How many units were built per year? How many had mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration?

Specific Interest of the Potential Sponsoring Group: Does your organization have members who are in need of decent housing? How many? How was this estimate arrived at? Can you tell us anything definite about the family incomes, family sizes and occupations?

Degree of Support: Is the potential sponsoring group willing to assist in organizing the membership of the cooperative and in processing of applications? Please attach a statement about your organization: its purposes, activities, membership, and accomplishments. (An annual report would be sufficient.)

FCH has other publications about cooperative housing available on request, including pamphlets on: "Owners not Tenants", "Housing the Disadvantaged", "Why We Need a Builder" and "Building for the Mass Market". FCH also issues manuals on the operation and maintenance of housing cooperatives. All publications are available at cost.

THIS AGREEMENT, entered into as of this _____ day of _____, 196__, by and between _____ a _____ organized and existing under the laws of the State of _____ (hereinafter called "Community Sponsor") and ~~FCH SERVICES,~~ TECHNICOOP INC., a corporate subsidiary of the nonprofit Foundation for Cooperative Housing, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York (hereinafter called "FCH").

WITNESSETH THAT:

WHEREAS, Community Sponsor recognizes that the provision of decent, safe and sanitary housing for persons and families of modest incomes at charges which are within their financial means is an effective method by which it may achieve a number of the purposes and goals for which it was organized or for which it now exists; and

WHEREAS, Community Sponsor desires to provide housing and related community facilities, on a cooperative basis, in the City of _____, _____, (which housing and facilities may be developed in one or more mortgage parcels and which are collectively hereinafter referred to as the "Project"); and

WHEREAS, Community Sponsor also desires that the Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing provide the sponsorship for the Project, such sponsorship to be in accordance with the requirements of the Federal Housing Administration (hereinafter referred to as "FHA"); and

WHEREAS, Community Sponsor owns or intends to acquire an option or contract to purchase a parcel or parcels of land upon which the Project will be constructed; and

WHEREAS, Community Sponsor further intends that applications be made to FHA for commitments for the insurance of mortgages, and for commitments from the Federal National Mortgage Association (hereinafter referred to as "FNMA") and from one or more lending institutions (hereinafter referred to as the "Mortgagee") to provide permanent and construction financing for the Project; and

WHEREAS, the Community Sponsor recognizes that the success of providing such housing and of obtaining such insured financing depends to a significant extent on the qualifications and performance of the professional personnel utilized in the planning and development stages of the Project and therefore desires to utilize the services of FCH in the planning and development of the Project; and

WHEREAS, FCH has determined and Community Sponsor has concurred in such determination, that the Project appears to be feasible and eligible for FHA mortgage insurance pursuant to the National Housing Act, as amended.

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the terms, conditions and covenants hereinafter set forth, the parties hereto do mutually agree as follows:

(1) Past Services. FCH has heretofore rendered services for or on behalf of Community Sponsor which include assistance in connection with the program for the Project and its development and implementation. The compensation to be paid in accordance with the provisions hereinafter set forth covers such work and the additional services described below.

(2) Scope of Services of FCH. FCH agrees to provide the following services, provided that a valid option for the purchase of the parcel or parcels of land on which the Project is to be constructed has first been granted by or on behalf of Community Sponsor to FCH, acting on behalf of a cooperative corporation to be organized:

(a) Organization. FCH shall organize a cooperative housing corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "Cooperative") which will act as the owner-mortgagor of the Project and which will have a Board of Directors of the character described in paragraph (3)(a) hereof.

(b) Approval of Site. FCH shall provide advice and assistance in obtaining FHA and FNMA approval of the proposed Project site, including such advice and assistance concerning compliance with Government requirements regarding: the proximity of community facilities, topography; availability of utility services; and other relevant factors in site approval.

(c) Planning Housing and Related Facilities. FCH shall provide advice and assistance in relation to the planning of the Project, including the availability of nearby community facilities and services to meet the needs of the residents of the Project, provided, however, that FCH shall not act as the Project architect or land planner, except that it may provide certain of these services in the implementation of the Project as provided in paragraph (5)(b) hereof.

(d) Preparation of Application for Mortgage Insurance. FCH shall prepare the application for the insurance by FHA of a loan to finance development of the Project, and shall assist in the assembling of the related supplements and exhibits, including the development of estimated Project cost, the preparation of income and operating expense estimates and other supporting data as required.

(e) Selection of Mortgagee. FCH shall provide advice and assistance in the selection of a mortgagee who will act as the construction lender and mortgagee of record for the Project; such Mortgagee shall be acceptable to both the Community Sponsor and FCH.

(f) Selection of Builder. FCH shall provide advice and assistance in selecting a suitable builder (hereinafter referred to as the "Contractor") who will construct the Project, and in negotiating with such Contractor in order to secure indemnities, comprehensive project development agreements and a construction contract; such Contractor shall be acceptable to both the Community Sponsor and FCH; provided, however, that the Contractor must be selected and provide the customary indemnities and undertakings prior to the filing of the Application for Mortgage Insurance. The Contractor shall also be responsible for the selection and compensation of an architect who will prepare the drawings and specifications for the Project in the stages required for FHA processing; such architect shall be acceptable to both the Community Sponsor and FCH.

(g) Fees. FCH shall provide advice and guidance in obtaining funds from loans, advances and other sources to pay FHA and FNMA fees and other expenditures necessary to achieve the initial endorsement of the Project mortgage, insofar as Community Sponsor's funds are not available therefor. FCH shall not be obligated to utilize, pledge, advance or otherwise commit its own funds for the aforelisted fees or expenditures.

(h) Time of Performance. FCH is to continue to perform the services described above until the initial endorsement by FHA of the mortgage note of the Cooperative or until this Agreement is terminated as hereinafter provided, whichever is the earlier.

(3) Cooperative Agency Agreement. After the issuance on the Project of an FHA commitment, FCH and Krooth & Altman, (hereinafter referred to as "Associated Counsel") will be prepared to enter into a Cooperative Agency Agreement with the Cooperative to perform the following services on the Project (hereinafter referred to as "Marketing, Legal and Organization Services") during the periods therein described:

(a) Organization of the Cooperative, initially having a Board of Directors made up of Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing and, subsequent to the final closing on the last of the mortgage parcels comprising the Project, having a Board of Directors made up of resident members of the Cooperative together with some non-residents nominated by Community Sponsor, if it so desires;

(b) Preparation of all necessary submissions to FHA which are the responsibility of the Cooperative, including preparation and securing of necessary approvals for sales documents;

(c) Advice and assistance in development of a cooperative program to help assure sales, feasibility, and consumer acceptance, including arrangements acceptable to Community Sponsor and FCH for stimulating suitable community participation;

(d) Assist in negotiations with FHA and FNMA or other financial institutions;

(e) Advice and assistance in selecting a suitable supervisory architect, who will review the plans and specifications for the Project, and inspect and supervise the construction of the Project in the stages and at the times required by FHA; such supervisory architect shall be acceptable to both the Community Sponsor and FCH;

(f) Act on behalf of the Cooperative in negotiations to secure an Agreement for Sale of Land;

(g) Provide such staff and assistance as are necessary for the cooperative sales program, including sales of memberships for dwelling units in the Project and processing of documents relating to such purchases for the purpose of securing FHA credit approvals;

(h) Act on behalf of the Cooperative pursuant to resolutions duly adopted by its Board of Directors in performing its obligations under the Agreement for Sale of Land and other contracts;

(i) Provide consultant services for a period of ninety (90) days after completion of Project and final FHA endorsement for insurance of the Cooperative's mortgage note pertaining to the last of the mortgage parcels; and

(j) Provide such services as FCH may find desirable for Cooperative training and education of the Board of Directors, committees and members of the Cooperative.

(4) Services of Associated Counsel. Associated Counsel will perform the following legal services, pursuant to the Cooperative Agency Agreement:

(a) Preparation of the legal documents involved in the organization and sales program, including, but not limited to the Articles of Incorporation, By-Laws, and the Form of Subscription Agreement, Occupancy Agreement, Regulatory Agreement with FHA, and certificate evidencing membership;

(b) Preparation of the legal documents involved in the program for the construction of the Project and for financing of the Project through an FHA-insured mortgage;

(c) Consultations, when requested, on legal problems or the aforesaid financing; and

(d) Participations, when requested, in negotiations with the FHA, FNMA, and the Mortgagee.

Associated Counsel will retain as their special counsel an attorney or legal firm practicing in the _____ area which is acceptable to Community Sponsor.

(5) Compensation.

(a) To compensate for the foregoing services and expenses (hereinafter collectively referred to as "Marketing, Legal and Organization Services and Expenses"), the Cooperative Agency Agreement will provide for the payment to FCH and Associated Counsel of the following fees which have been reflected in an FHA-insured mortgage and included in the FHA Estimated Replacement Cost of a Project in the following percentages thereof:

(i) Three percent (3%) of the total FHA Estimated Replacement Cost of the Project, for Marketing Services; and

(ii) A sliding scale, not to exceed three-quarters (3/4) of one percent of the Cooperative mortgage for Legal and Organization expenses; or if less, an amount which FCH and Associated Counsel approve in writing.

(b) In the event that FCH has performed architectural, engineering or land planning services which are utilized in the implementation of the Project, FCH may also obtain reimbursement for such services from the proceeds of the insured mortgage loan. Any such reimbursement shall be limited to amounts approved by FHA for services performed by FCH and shall be available only from funds allocated by FHA in the mortgage insurance commitment for architectural and engineering services.

(6) FHA Initial Closing. After the issuance on the Project of an FHA commitment, FNMA commitment and commitment from the Mortgagee for interim financing, Community Sponsor and FCH agree that they will cooperate in all necessary actions to secure an FHA Initial Closing on the Project as soon as practicable. As used herein, the term "FHA Initial Closing" shall refer to the time when there is an FHA initial endorsement for insurance of the mortgage on the Project, including:

(a) The reimbursement to Community Sponsor and FCH for monies, if any, previously expended by them for items on the Project which are included in the FHA Estimated Replacement Cost thereof and reflected in the mortgage thereon, except for those expenses included as part of Marketing, Legal and Organization Services and Expenses.

(b) The initial disbursement to FCH and Associated Counsel of the amount then payable to them under the Cooperative Agency Agreement on the Project, and the payment to the Mortgagee for deposit in the Cooperative Agency Fee Escrow of the balance thereafter payable under said Agreement.

(7) Termination of Agreement Relating to the Project.

(a) This Agreement shall terminate with respect to the Project:

(i) When there has been an FHA Initial Closing thereon and FCH and Associated Counsel have entered into a Cooperative Agency Agreement with the Cooperative which undertakes to complete the Project as contemplated by FCH and Community Sponsor; or

(ii) If an FHA determination of feasibility of the Project (and an allocation of below-market interest rate funds made, in the event the Project is to be insured under Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act) has not been made within nine (9) months from the date hereof, unless FCH has, at its sole option and by written notice to Community Sponsor, extended said nine (9) month period by an additional period, as specified in said written notice, of not to exceed three (3) months; or

(iii) On the expiration date of the option referred to in the first sentence of paragraph (2) hereof.

(b) In the event that this Agreement is terminated pursuant to subparagraphs (a)(ii) or (a)(iii) hereof, all finished or unfinished documents, data, studies and reports prepared by FCH under this Agreement shall, at the option of Community Sponsor, become its property, and FCH shall be entitled to reasonable compensation therefor from Community Sponsor. FCH and Associated Counsel shall also be entitled to reimbursement from Community Sponsor for their out-of-pocket expenses incurred with respect to the Project, provided, however, that as to any such expenses in excess of $500, prior approval of the Community Sponsor shall be required in order to obligate the Community Sponsor to reimburse FCH and Associated Counsel therefor.

(8) Liability and Release.

(a) Community Sponsor recognizes and agrees that, while FCH and Associated Counsel may consult with the Contractor, architects and others concerning the design and construction of the Project, FCH and Associated Counsel, so long as acting in good faith, do not accept, nor will Community Sponsor charge them with, any liability or responsibility whatsoever for the design or construction of the Project, the land or construction price or for the performance of the Contractor, architect, or others who contract directly with Community Sponsor or the Cooperative for services, work, facilities, or other matters.

(b) If this Agreement is terminated pursuant to paragraphs (7)(a)(ii) or (7)(a)(iii) hereof, Community Sponsor, FCH and Associated Counsel shall not make any claims or assert rights of action against one another for any losses, damages or liabilities sustained, and such termination shall constitute a full and complete mutual and reciprocal release and discharge of FCH, Associated Counsel and Community Sponsor, respectively, of all liabilities and obligations of one to another; Provided and except that,

(i) FCH shall, if requested to do so by Community Sponsor, deliver to Community Sponsor the materials described in subparagraph (7)(b); and

(ii) Community Sponsor shall make the payments to FCH and Associated Counsel which may be due them pursuant to such subparagraph (7)(b) at the time of the termination.

(9) Additional Projects. This Agreement may be supplemented for the purpose of adding additional projects which are acceptable to Community Sponsor and FCH. The date when an additional project is included in this Agreement shall be the date of the supplement to this Agreement which identifies an additional project.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have executed this Agreement on the day and year first above written.

THE FAIR HOUSING STATUTES AND ORDINANCES
(As of October 1, 1965)

The Record to Date

The first law in the United States to prohibit discrimination in the general housing market went into effect on April 1, 1958, in New York City. On May 1, 1959, Colorado became the first state in the nation to put such legislation into operation.

By October 1 of this year, 16 states, 30 cities, the District of Columbia, King County in the State of Washington, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands had adopted anti-discrimination laws affecting some part of the private housing market. (See note below.)

Four additional states have measures which prohibit discrimination in certain types of publicly-assisted housing, and at least 40 additional cities have adopted policy resolutions or regulations against the denial of shelter because of the homeseeker's race, religion or national origin.

Thus, by October 1, 1965, no less than 94 governmental jurisdictions had taken official action aimed at achieving equal opportunity in housing.

Activity in 1965

In 1965, campaigns for fair housing legislation - either for first laws to apply to the general market or for measures to strengthen existing statutes - were waged in 22 states (Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming). Only 12 states had such campaigns in 1963, the previous record year.

During 1965 fair housing measures have been enacted in nine of the 22 states: Indiana, Rhode Island, Maine and Ohio adopted their first laws barring discrimination in private housing; Colorado, Connecticut, Minnesota, New Hampshire and New York passed amendments to strengthen existing laws.

Note: Not included in the list of 16 states which have adopted laws applying to private housing is Washington, where a ruling of the Attorney General that real estate firms are covered by the state's public accommodations statute is now being challenged in the courts.

Three of the 30 city ordinances have been struck down by referenda, and one was held invalid by the courts on technical grounds. (See page 9.)

"A decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family"

Also significant is the fact that during 1965 anti-fair housing forces failed in their efforts to secure legislation in eight states to provide for referenda to repeal or prevent the enactment of anti-discrimination housing laws. In Arkansas, Indiana, Maryland, Nevada, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah and Washington, referenda proposals were either defeated or died in legislative committees.

Scope of the Laws

The fair housing laws vary widely in their primary coverage of the housing supply and in provisions for enforcement. Alaska's statute covers all sales and rentals with no exemptions, and is enforced by a state human rights commission. Maine, on the other hand, is the only one of the 16 states which provides no administrative machinery for enforcing a law which is limited to part of the rental housing supply.

There is also considerable variance in enforcement practices, both under statutory provisions and operating procedures adopted by the commissions. Some commissions initiate complaints of discrimination on their own motion; some seek restraining orders from the courts to hold the housing at issue on the market until the charge of discrimination is investigated and resolved (injunctive relief); some lean toward a liberal interpretation of anti-discrimination legislation, taking into account "the intent of the law"; some follow a conservative approach, adhering rigidly to "the letter of the law."

The Trend

The trend is in the direction of comprehensive laws which substantially cover the housing supply and which apply alike to owners, builders, brokers and mortgage lenders. Seven of the 16 states (Alaska, Colorado, Connecticut, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan and New York) now prohibit discrimination in 100 per cent of all residential property advertised for sale and in most rental housing.

Also, there is clearly a movement toward achieving more effective implementation of the laws: ten of the 15 state commissions administering fair housing legislation now have specific power to take affirmative action by initiating complaints and investigations of discrimination on their own motion; and six are authorized to ask for court injunctions or have other means of holding the housing in question in status quo until cases are settled. In addition, several commissions are moving to streamline their operating policies and practices. Some states have established the right of an applicant to see a unit in which he may be interested, and a refusal to show the unit is a violation of the law.

Manifestly, the trend toward broader coverage of the market and for provisions to insure more effective implementation are in response to demonstrated needs and weaknesses, and to widespread recognition that affirmative, vigorous action is essential if the fair housing laws are to achieve their purpose: the end of discrimination and segregation in housing and the development of a free society in which every man in fact receives equal treatment and equal service in his search for a home.

STATE LAWS PROHIBITING DISCRIMINATION IN THE GENERAL HOUSING MARKET

State	Major Provisions
1. Alaska	Effective April 4, 1962. Covers sale or rental of all housing; also applies to business transactions of real estate brokers and builders. Enforcement commission empowered to initiate complaints of discrimination on its own motion. Penalties: fines up to $500, 30 days imprisonment, or both. Enforced by Alaska Commission for Human Rights, 24 Reed Bldg., Anchorage 99501.
2. California (See note below)	Effective Sept. 20, 1963. Covers sales or rentals involving buildings with 4 or more units, and all existing publicly-aided housing; also applies to all transactions of brokers, builders and mortgage lenders. Provides for injunctive relief, or damages up to $500. Enforcement by California Fair Employment Practice Commission, 455 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco 94101.
3. Colorado	Effective May 1, 1959. Amended 1965. Covers all publicly-offered sales or rentals (including vacant lots), exempting the rental of rooms in single-family dwellings. Also applies to commercial space, and to brokers, builders and mortgage lenders. Makes refusal to show available housing a violation. Provides that if a respondent fails to comply with a cease and desist order issued by the enforcement commission, the complainant may seek damages in a civil action. In such cases, the court may not only award damages and costs, but may require the respondent to provide housing comparable to that which was at issue in the complaint. Commission empowered to initiate and to seek injunctive relief. Enforced by Colorado Civil Rights Commission, 1525 Sherman St., Denver 80203.

Note: The Attorney General of California has ruled that passage by the electorate at the general election Nov. 3, 1964, of an amendment to the State Constitution providing that an owner may "decline to sell, lease or rent [his] property to such persons as he, in his absolute discretion, chooses" (Proposition 14, now Article I, Section 26 of the Constitution) did not repeal the state's fair housing law so far as brokers and mortgage lenders are concerned; but that, if upheld by the courts, it would remove property owners from the reach of the law. Constitutionality of the amendment is now under court challenge.

MEASURES PROHIBITING "PANIC PEDDLING"

Several states and cities have regulations or ordinances which prohibit real estate operators from engaging in practices designed to incite panic selling due to the entry or prospective entry into a neighborhood of persons of another racial or ethnic backgrounds.

The state licensing agencies in Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania have regulations under which brokers and salesmen are liable to revocation or suspension of their licenses if they are found guilty of engaging in "blockbusting" tactics. Ohio prohibits "blockbusting" under a recently-enacted fair housing law.

The following cities have adopted special anti-panic peddling ordinances:

1. Baltimore, Md.

3. Detroit, Mich.

STATE AND CITY FAIR HOUSING LAWS*

Robert L. Carter, General Counsel for NAACP, has four guidelines for effective fair housing laws:

1. Fair housing laws should cover all of the private housing market, as well as public housing. To cover the whole housing market, the laws should apply to owners, builders, brokers, mortgage lenders, and advertising of housing.

2. The enforcement commission that executes the fair housing law should have the power to back up the law: It should be able to initiate complaints on its own, without having to rely only on complaints coming from individuals. The enforcement commission should be able to investigate a whole real estate industry or building industry and not have to prosecute just one offense at a time. And the enforcement commission should be able to issue subpoenas, hold hearings, issue orders, seek injunctions, give compensatory damages, and go to court for enforcement. The commission needs to have streamlined and speedy enforcement procedures.

3. The government that passes the fair housing law should want to do more than end forced segregation. The government should encourage suppliers of housing to have positive business practices for open housing and should encourage homeseekers to shop for homes in integrated neighborhoods.

---

*This section is based on "How the Fair Housing Laws are Working," Trends in Housing, Vol. IX, No.6, November-December 1965.

4. The enforcement commission should be as important as the other most important government agencies or departments and should be supported 100% by the head of the government, that is, the governor or the mayor.

The enforcement commission should influence all government activities that affect racial patterns of residence, including plans for building or rehabilitating schools.

And it is essential that the enforcement commission have an adequate budget and be able to hire its own professional staff.

Fair housing laws don't have an adverse affect on business. The laws haven't caused more whites to move to the suburbs than ordinarily. And the laws haven't caused resegregation in integrated neighborhodds. Rather, the laws have sometimes helped to stabilize changing neighborhoods.

For the most part, fair housing laws have helped middle-class Negro families. Racial ghettoes still continue to grow. Fair housing laws can't eliminate ghettoes unless state and city governments also work to provide plenty of low-to-moderate cost housing throught the cities and suburbs.

Fifty-one governmental jurisdictions in the continental United States have laws against discrimination in the general housing market. Another 50 or more governmental jurisdictions have laws applying to government-aided housing only, or nondiscrimination policy resolutions, or anti-blockbusting provisions. None of these laws or provisions exist in Southern states or cities.

Laws against discrimination in private housing cover over 52 per cent of the U.S. population and about one-third of Negro citizens.

JERRY DELL GIMARC

November 2, 1966

Dear Mr. Ameth:

No, I had not seen the information on E.O. 11063 complaints at the time I wrote the pamphlet. My surmise that there was no definite complaint procedure came from conversations with VA and FHA represented housing officials who denied knowledge of any complaint procedure.

If possible this information should be listed or at least the reference given. Pp. 41 + 42 should be rewritten to indicate that there is a complaint procedure even if local officials don't know it or don't want to know it. Can you make this revision?

Sorry

Jerry Dell Gimarc

51601 INTRODUCTION: The following procedure is applicable to processing complaints that are filed with FHA alleging violation of FHA Regulations issued pursuant to Executive Order 11063 regarding nondiscrimination and equal opportunity in housing.

51602 DIRECTOR'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROCESSING COMPLAINTS: Responsibility for processing and disposing of complaints filed pursuant to Section 200.340 of the Regulations is placed in the Insuring Office Director having jurisdiction over the housing involved in the complaint, and all complaints should be submitted to the Insuring Office with jurisdiction. Any field office receiving a complaint outside its jurisdiction shall acknowledge the complaint and promptly send it to the appropriate field office for attention.

51603 SUBMISSION OF COMPLAINTS: All such complaints must be in writing and signed by the complainant if an individual, or by an officer of the organization on whose behalf it is filed. Wherever possible, FHA Form 797 should be used, but any written statement which clearly sets forth the complaint will be acceptable.

51604 TIME LIMITATION: The Director may designate appropriate members of his staff to assist in processing the complaint, and he should, of course, call upon the Zone Intergroup Relations Advisor for advice, assistance and comments, as the particular situation may warrant. Every effort should be made to properly dispose of each complaint within 30 days. When more than 30 days are required, preliminary reports shall be submitted giving reasons for the delay and establishing a new terminal date. At reasonable intervals, the Director should also keep zone officials and the General Office officials advised of the status of pending complaints.

51605 NOTIFICATION: The Zone Operations Commissioner shall be informed of all complaints involving sales housing, and the Zone Multifamily Director or Zone Multifamily Representative, as the case may be, shall be informed of all complaints concerning rental units. In all cases, the office of the Assistant to the Commissioner (Intergroup Relations Service) and the appropriate Zone Intergroup Relations Advisor will be advised by the copies of all communications concerning complaints. [illegible] number of copies to be sent to these res[illegible]e offices shall be: Zone Operations C[illegible]oner, Zone Multifamily Director or Zone [illegible]family Representative, and Zone Intergro[illegible]lations Advisor - one copy; Assistant to the Commissioner (Intergroup Relations Service) - three copies.

51606 PUBLICITY RESTRICTION: FHA policy is to deal fairly and objectively with all parties with whom it does business, and this policy will be maintained in the handling of these complaints. Under no circumstances shall any one other than authorized FHA personnel be furnished a copy of the original complaint or shall any press releases or other public statements be made pending a final determination of a complaint. Only the factual statement that a complaint has been filed by the complainant or that a complaint is being processed is permitted. When communicating with an alleged violator or any other third party, the Director should state the allegation of discrimination indirectly and not use direct quotes. For example, "A complaint has been filed in this office charging you with a violation of FHA Regulations alleging that on or about the _____ day of _____, 1963, in Washington, D. C., you failed or refused to sell the premises identified as 1600 Riverside Drive to Mr. John Jones because of his race."

51607 ACTION AFTER RECEIVING COMPLAINT: Upon receiving a complaint over which his office has procedural jurisdiction, the Director, or his designee, shall within two working days:

a. acknowledge receipt of the complaint and request additional information from the complainant, if required;

b. simultaneously send to the offices listed in paragraph 51605 the required number of copies of:

1. the complaint,
2. the acknowledgment of the complaint,
3. any preliminary comments as may be pertinent at that time about FHA's responsibility in the matter and any steps which have been planned for resolving the complaint.

51608 PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS AND PROCEEDINGS:

51608.1 Should the Director find, as a result of the preliminary examination, that there is probable cause to believe the alleged acts of discrimination were committed but that the matter is not covered by our Regulations, the Director will ask the Zone Intergroup Relations Advisor to comment thereon prior to the Director's rendering a final determination in the case.

51608.2 When the Director believes that the allegations, if sustained, fall within the governing Regulations, he shall:

a. promptly obtain all information available for examining the complaint, and

b. upon finding evidence which would appear to indicate discrimination, he shall notify the alleged violator in writing that a complaint has been filed against him alleging violation of the terms of FHA's Regulations, and invite him to an informal discussion of the alleged violation to take place within 10 calendar days from the date of the notification. He should also be notified that he should not take any action that would cause the housing accommodations which are the subject of the complaint to become unavailable to the complainant, pending final determination of the matter. In an appropriate case, the Director may make such alternative requirements as he may deem appropriate to protect the interests of all parties involved.

51608.3 The letter to the alleged violator shall contain a statement (paraphrased as set forth in Exhibit No. 1) of the alleged act or acts of discrimination, including the name of the complainant, the date and place of the alleged act of discrimination and shall be sent by registered or certified mail.

51608.4 If the alleged discrimination is denied or if there is no response to the invitation for informal discussion of the complaint within 10 calendar days, then further inquiries, investigations, and hearings shall be initiated by the Director as are necessary to ascertain the facts.

51608.5 In those cases in which the matters in controversy do not come within the terms of the Executive Order, the Director need not communicate his final decision to the alleged violator unless he has previously communicated with him about the case or knows that there has been some publication of the charge. In which case, a notice by regular mail will suffice.

51608.6 In all cases that come within the terms of the Executive Order, the parties in interest and their attorneys, if any, shall be promptly advised by registered or certified mail of the final action taken by the Director. If the the facts developed from investigation and/or hearings indicate a violation of the Regulations, the Director shall advise the violator to correct the situation and to provide FHA with appropriate assurances of future compliance. The violator shall also be informed that his failure to comply within a reasonable time, as set by the Director, will necessitate the application of sanctions as provided by Section 200.345 of the Regulations.

Which Are?

51608.7 Conclusions reached in all cases shall be sent immediately through the appropriate reporting channels. If sanctions are imposed upon a builder the Director should include in his report to the Assistant to the Commissioner (Intergroup Relations Service) the number of outstanding conditional commitments issued on housing constructed by him; the number of units covered by the commitments on which construction has been started; and the source and extent of construction financing extended to the builder. When sanctions are applied, two copies of the conclusions also shall be sent to the Director of Audit and Examination.

51608.8 The communications informing the interested parties of the Director's final action shall contain a paragraph stating that the action of the Director will be reviewed by the Commissioner if a written request for such review is filed by the party adversely affected either with the Director or the Commissioner within 10 days from the receipt of notice of the final action taken by the Director.

51608.9 In his request for a review in cases in which there has been a finding of discrimination, the violator shall give assurance that the housing accommodations which are the subject of the complaint will remain available and that he will not cause the accommodations to become unavailable to the complainant pending such review. Upon request, the Commissioner may consider accepting an alternate type of assurance from the violator provided it will adequately protect the rights of the complainant while the case is being reviewed.

51609 FINDING OF DISCRIMINATION:

51609.1 Where the Director has found that there has been a violation of the Regulations, no further applications of the violator will be accepted for processing and applications in process shall be discontinued until such time as:

a. the discriminatory practice has been eliminated and satisfactory assurances of future compliance have been received, or

b. the Commissioner, upon reviewing the facts in the case, reverses the findings of the Director.

FHA-Wash., D. C.

In addition, consideration will be given in appropriate cases to invoking the cancellation clause in conditional commitments issued on housing units to be constructed by a builder who has violated the regulation.

51609.2 If a preliminary review of a complaint gives indication of discriminatory practice but it appears that the practice may not be subject to sanctions, as prescribed by the Regulations, the Director or his designee shall:

a. institute a prompt and thorough investigation of the complaint to obtain all of the available facts, and

b. upon a finding that there has been discrimination he will get in touch with the alleged violator and inform him of the nature of the complaint, explain the responsibility of FHA in the matter, and endeavor to work out a solution satisfactory to the interested parties. If after a determined effort the Director is unable to effect an amicable solution of the matter, the complainant will be so advised and the FHA involvement in the case will be terminated, unless by reason of a local law or regulations of other Federal agencies some other avenue of relief appears to be applicable, in which case the Director will render the complainant such further assistance as may be appropriate in keeping with the spirit and intent of the Executive Order.

FHA-Wash. D.C.

51610 ACTION ON REQUEST FOR THE COMMISSIONER'S REVIEW OF THE CASE:

51610.1 A review in any case may be requested by the party adversely affected within 10 days of notification of the Director's finding. If such request for a reivew is made, the Director will assemble, within 15 days from the date of the request, a complete file which will include the complaint, the summary of the proceedings and summary of the evidence and all exhibits and memoranda filed by either party. A complete list of the filed material shall be prepared, including a statement by the Director that the items contained on the list constitute all of the records in the case. As soon as the record is complete, the Director by registered or certified mail, shall notify the party seeking a review that the original record will be available for his inspection at the FHA office for a period of 10 days from the date of the notification and that promptly thereafter the record will be transmitted to the office of the FHA Commissioner. The Director will provide the party seeking the review with a copy of the list of items contained in the record, the summary of the proceedings, and summary of the testimony and copies of any evidentiary memoranda filed or submitted in the case.

51610.2 Upon the delivery of the copies of the record to the party seeking the review and the transmittal of the record to the office of the Commissioner, the jurisdiction of the Director in the particular case will be terminated except upon express directions from the Commissioner or the Zone office.

51611 COOPERATION WITH OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES: Each Insuring Office shall cooperate with other Federal agencies having an interest in carrying out the objectives of Executive Order 11063. Additionally, subject to the Director's responsibility to assure a fair and impartial decision in such matters before FHA, the Insuring Offices may participate in joint investigations of complaints with constituents of HHFA.

51612 COOPERATION WITH STATE AND LOCAL AGENCIES: Each Insuring Office should endeavor to establish a cordial and cooperative relationship with all state and municipal agencies within its jurisdiction that are empowered by law to enforce fair housing practices. The Insuring Office should cooperate with such state or municipal agencies in every way possible, consistent with the Director's responsibility to assure a fair decision with reasonable dispatch of any pending complaints. Cooperation should include advising such agencies of the action taken by the Director in all cases in which the Director finds that there has been a violation of the Regulations; the advising of said agencies of those cases where the facts do not constitute a violation of the Regulations, but do indicate that there is reason to believe that the state law or the local ordinance may have been violated; the collaboration in cases where the complainant has involved both the procedures of FHA and the state or municipal enforcement agency; and, the utilization of the services of the state or municipal investigatory facilities when feasible and available.

HIGH COURT VOIDS FAIR-HOUSING BAN IN CALIFORNIA LAW

Decides That Adoption of Proposition 14 Amounts to Racial Bias by State

TRIBUNAL DIVIDED, 5-4

Justices Find Amendment to Coast Charter Created a Right to Discriminate

Excerpts from court decision will be found on Page 8.

By FRED P. GRAHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 29 — The Supreme Court declared unconstitutional today the voter-approved amendment to the California Constitution that gave property owners "absolute discretion" in resale and rental of housing.

In a 5-to-4 ruling, the Supreme Court upheld the California Supreme Court's decision that the amendment, known as Proposition 14, amounted to racial discrimination by the state and thus violated the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

The opinion by Justice Byron R. White declared that the amendment went beyond a mere repeal of the state's fair-housing legislation and created "a constitutional right to discriminate on racial grounds in the sale and rental of real property."

Scope of Ruling Specific

Proposition 14 "was intended to authorize, and does authorize racial discrimination in the housing market," Justice White said. "The right to discriminate is now one of the basic policies of the state."

Joining in his opinion were Chief Justice Earl Warren, a former Governor of California, and Justices William J. Brennan Jr., William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas.

Justice John M. Harlan contended in a dissent that the decision might discourage the enactment of antidiscriminasaid. "The right to discriminate is now one of the basic policies of the state."

Joining in his opinion were Chief Justice Earl Warren, a former Governor of California, and Justices William J. Brennan Jr., William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas.

Justice John M. Harlan contended in a dissent that the decision might discourage the enactment of antidiscrimination legislation in the future as opponents could argue that such laws might have to remain permanently on the books. Justice Hugo L. Black, Tom C. Clark and Potter Stewart joined in the dissent.

Justice White took pains to limit the reach of the decision to the facts of the California situation so that the ruling would not preclude a state legislature from repealing antidiscrimination legislation it had previously enacted.

He pointed out that Proposition 14 was approved by California's voters at the general election of 1964 in the form of an initiative, which can be reversed only by a subsequent vote of the people. The vote was 4.5 million to 2.4 million—almost 2 to 1.

Housing Laws Affected

The amendment read as follows:

"Neither the state nor any subdivision or agency thereof shall deny, limit or abridge, directly or indirectly, the right of any person, who is willing or desires to sell, lease or rent any part or all of his real property, to decline to sell, lease or rent such property to such persons or persons as he, in his abolute discretion, chooses."

This amendment, which was vigorously supported by California real estate interests, was intended to repeal fair-housing laws previously enacted by the Legislature — the Unruh Civil Rights Act of 1959 and the Rumford Fair Housing Act of 1963.

The laws prohibit racial discrimination in the sale or rental of private housing accommodations in dwellings containing more than four units.

Justice White's opinion leaned heavily on the fact that the Supreme Court of California had found that Proposition 14 amounted to more than a return to neutrality by the state government. He observed that the California court, which he said was familiar with the situation, had found that the intent was "to authorize private discriminations in the housing market."

By approving this conclusion, the Supreme Court took a step forward in the development of a 20-year-old movement toward making states responsible for private racial discrimination.

Private Action Exempt

Under the Supreme Court's long-standing interpretation of the 14th Amendment's prohibition against state acts that deny citizens the equal protection of the laws, discrimination by private citizens is not forbidden unless "a significant state involvement" is found.

But since 1948, when the Supreme Court ruled in Shelley vs. Kraemer that state courts cannot enforce racial restrictions in deeds, the Court has tended to find "state action" in a widening number of situations involving what previously had been considered private racial discrimination.

The decision today moved the Supreme Court a notch closer to a position that many civil rights supporters have long advocated—that a state is guilty of discriminatory "state action" if it has the power to prevent certain forms of racial discrimination but does not do so.

Justice White approved the California Supreme Court's conclusion that a state is not required by the 14th Amendment to have a fair housing law. But

Excerpts From Supreme Court's Decision in California Fair-Housing Case

WASHINGTON, May 29 — Following are excerpts from the Supreme Court's decision on the repeal of California's fair-housing law, written by Justice Byron R. White, and a dissent by Justice John M. Harlan:

COURT'S DECISION

The question here is whether Article I, Section 26 of the California Constitution denies "to any person... the equal protection of the law" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Section 26 of Article I, an initiated measure submitted to the people as Proposition 14 in a statewide ballot in 1964, provides in part as follows:

"Neither the state nor any subdivision or agency thereof shall deny, limit or abridge, directly or indirectly, the right of any person, who is willing or desires to sell, lease or rent any part or all of his real property, to decline to sell, lease or rent such property to such person or persons as he, in his absolute discretion, chooses."

The real property covered by Section 26 is limited to residential property and contains an exception for state-owned real estate.

We affirm the judgment of the California Supreme Court. We first turn to the opinion of that court, which quite properly undertook to examine the constitutionality of Section 26 in terms of its "immediate objective," its ultimate impact" and its "historical context and conditions existing prior to its enactment." Judgments such as these we have frequently undertaken ourselves.

Legislation Reviewed

First, the court considered whether Section 26 was concerned at all with private discriminations in residential housing. This involved a review of past efforts by the California legislature to regulate such discriminations. The Unruh Act, on which respondents based their cases, was passed in 1959. The Hawkins Act followed and prohibited discriminations in publicly assisted housing. [illegible] to privately discriminate on grounds which admittedly would be unavailable under the Fourteenth Amendment should state action be involved."

The judgment of the California court was that section 26 unconstitutionally involves the state in racial discriminations and is therefore invalid under the Fourteenth Amendment.

Agreement Upheld

There is no sound reason for rejecting this judgment. Petitioners contend that the California court has misconstrued the Fourteenth Amendment since the repeal of any statute prohibiting racial discrimination, which is constitutionally permissible, may be said to "authorize" and "encourage" discrimination because it makes legally permissible that which was formerly proscribed. But as we understand the California court, it did not posit a constitutional violation on the mere repeal of the Unruh and Rumford acts. It did not read either our cases or the Fourteenth Amendment as establishing an automatic constitutional barrier to the repeal of an existing law prohibiting racial discriminations in housing. Nor did the court rule that a state may never put in statutory form an existing policy of neutrality with respect to private discriminations.

What the court below did was first to reject the notion that the state was required to have a statute prohibiting racial discriminations in housing. Second, it held the purpose and intent of Section 26 was to authorize private racial discriminations in the housing market, to repeal the Unruh and Rumford acts and to create a constitutional right to discriminate on racial grounds in the sale and leasing of real property. Hence, the court dealt with Section 26 as though it expressly authorized and constitutionalized the private right to discriminate. Third, the court assessed the ultimate impact of Section 26 in the California environment and concluded that the section would encourage and significantly involve the state in private racial discrimination contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment.

Harris & Ewing

Justice Byron R. White said that California amendment was unconstitutional.

The New York Times

Justice John M. Harlan said that decision might discourage antidiscrimination laws.

er rely solely on their personal choice.

They could now invoke express constitutional authority, free from censure or interference of any kind from official sources. All individuals, partnerships, corporation and other legal entities, as well as their agents and representatives, could now discriminate with respect to their residential real property, which is defined as any interest in real property of any kind or quality, "irrespective of how obtained or financed," and seemingly irrespective of the relationship of the state to such interests in real property. Only the state is excluded with respect to property owned by it.

This court has never attempted the "impossible task" of formulating an infallible test for determining whether the state "in any of its manifestations" has become significantly involved in private discriminations. "Only by sifting the facts and weighing the circumstances" on a case-to-case basis can a "non-obvious involvement of the state be attributed its true significance." Burton v. Wilmington Park Authority, 365 U.S. 715,

Court of California nor by any of our past cases decided under the Fourteenth Amendment. In my view today's holding salutary as its result may appear at first blush, may in the long run actually serve to handicap process in the extremely difficult field of racial concerns.

I am wholly at loss to understand how this straightforward effectuation of a change in the California Constitution [Proposition 14] deemed a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, thus rendering Section 26 void and petitioners' refusal to rent their property to respondents, because of their race, illegal under prior state law. The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which forbids a state to use its authority to foster discrimination based on such factors as race, does not undertake to control purely personal prejudices and predilections, and individuals acting on their own are left free to discriminate on racial grounds if they are so minded. By the same token, the Fourteenth Amendment does not require of states the passage of laws preventing such priing and impact of the enactment are entitled to great weight. I agree, of course, that findings of fact by a state court should be given great weight, but this familiar proposition hardly aids the Court's holding in this case.

There is no disagreement whatever but that Section 26 was meant to nullify California's fair-housing legislation and thus to remove from private residential property transactions the state-created impediment upon freedom of choice.

A state enactment, particularly one that is simply permissive of private decision-making rather than coercive and one that has been adopted in this most democratic of processes, should not be struck down by the judiciary under the Equal Protection Clause without persuasive evidence of an invidious purpose or effect. The only "factual" matter relied on by the majority of the California Supreme Court was the context in which Proposition 14 was adopted, namely, that several strong antidiscrimination acts had been passed by the Legislature and opposed by many of those who successfully led the movement for adoption of Proposition 14 by popular referendum. These circumstances, and these alone, the California court held, made Section 26 unlawful under this court's cases interpreting the Equal Protection Clause. This, of course, is nothing but a legal conclusion as to Federal constitutional law, the California supreme court not having relied in any way upon the State Constitution. It seems to me manifest that the state court decision rested entirely on what that court conceived to be the compulsion of the Fourteenth Amendment, not on any fact-finding by the state courts.

II.

There is no question that the adoption of Section 26, repealing the former state antidiscrimination laws and prohibiting the enactment of such state laws in the future, constituted "state action" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. The only issue is whether this provision impermissibly deprives any person of equal particular cases is often troublesome, as the Court itself acknowledges. However, the present case does not seem to me even to approach those peripheral situations in which the question of state involvement gives rise to difficulties. The core of the Court's opinion is that Section 26 is offensive to the Fourteenth Amendment because it effectively encourages private discrimination. By focusing on "encouragement" the Court, I fear, is forging a slippery and unfortunate criterion by which to measure the constitutionality of a statute simply permissive in purpose and effect, and inoffensive on its face.

A moment of thought will reveal the far-reaching possibilities of the Court's new doctrine, which I am sure the Court does not intend. Every act of private discrimination is either forbidden by state law or permitted by it. There can be little doubt that such permissiveness—whether by express constitutional or statutory provision, or implicit in the common law—to some extent "encourages" those who wish to discriminate to do so. Under this theory "state action" in the form of laws that do nothing more than passively permit private discrimination could be said to tinge all private discrimination with the taint of unconstitutional state encouragement.

I believe the state action required to bring the Fourteenth Amendment into operation must be affirmative and purposeful, actively fostering discrimination. Only in such a case is ostensibly "private" action more properly labeled "official." I do not believe the mere enactment of section 26, on the showing made here, falls within this class of cases.

III.

I think that this decision is not only constitutionally unsound, but in its practical potentialities short-sighted. Opponents of state antidiscrimination statutes are now in a position to argue that such legislation should be defeated because, if enacted, it may be unrepealable. More fundamentally, the doctrine underlying this decision may hamper, if not preclude, at-it does not authorize the seizure of articles that are not related to the crime that prompted the police to make the search.

Justice William O. Douglas dissented, declaring that the "mere evidence" rule served as a valuable barrier against invasions of privacy.

Appeal From Baltimore

The appeal had been brought by Bennie Joe Hayden, convicted in 1962 of robbing a Baltimore taxi office. Officers in "hot pursuit" of Hayden found him at home and took items of clothing of the type that the robber was said to have worn. The clothes were introduced in evidence and Hayden was convicted.

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit ruled that the search had been legal, but that the clothing was "mere evidence" that could not be used under the Gouled decision. It ordered his release from prison.

Justice Abe Fortas and Chief Justice Earl Warren supported the decision on the facts of Hayden's case but said it should not have erased the "mere evidence" rule from the books.

Justice Hugo L. Black noted that he concurred in the result but did not state his views.

Franklin Goldstein, Assistant Attorney General of Maryland, argued for the state. Prof. Albert R. Turnbull of the University of Virginia Law School, a court-appointed lawyer, argued for Hayden.

Ralph S. Spritzer of the Solicitor General's office, arguing as a friend of the court in support of the state's position, urged the Court to modify the "mere evidence" rule so that the police would be encouraged to rely more upon physical evidence and less upon confessions.

but does not do so.

Justice White approved the California Supreme Court's conclusion that a state is not required by the 14th Amendment to have a fair housing law. But some equal-housing proponents immediately began insisting that the opinion does move toward that position.

Hailed by Jewish Leader

Howard M. Squadron, a spokesman for the American Jewish Congress in New York, issued a statement declaring that the decision "gives judicial sanction to the concept that the states have a positive responsibility to guarantee equal protection to all citizens, elminate discrimination and insure the civil rights of all."

Justice Harlan's dissent criticized the weight given to the California decision. He said that it was basically a state court's interpretation of the Federal Constitution, which should carry no weight in the United States Supereme Court.

He said Proposition 14 had merely moved the state back to a neutral position on housing. The fact that it was done in the form of a popularly approved initiative should add to, and not detract from, its constitutional validity, Justice Harlan said.

Justice Douglas added a separate concurring opinion in which he declared that state-licensed real estate brokers exercised a zoning function for the state in refsing to place Negroes in white neighborhoods. Consequently, he said, discrimination by them is forbidden "state action."

The appeal originated in two separate suits by Negroes who asserted that apartment house owners had barred them on racial grounds.

One was brought by Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln W. Mulkey, who sought damages from Neil Reitman, charging that he refused to rent them an apartment in Santa Ana on racial grounds.

The second involved Wilfred J. Prendergast, a Negro, and his wife, Carola, who is white. It sought a court order to bar Clarence Snyder, the owner of their Los Angeles apartment, from evicting them. According to the suit, Mrs. Prendergast rented the apartment and the eviction notice came later, after Mr. Prendergast had moved in. starting—In May, 1966,

In May, 1966, the California Supreme court ruled in favor of the Negroes, 5 to 2, on the ground that Proposition 14 is void and thus the fair housing laws are still in effect. The Supreme Court affirmed that decision today.

Samuel O. Pruitt Jr. of Los Angeles argued for the apartment owners. A. L. Wirin and Herman F. Selvin of Los Angeles argued for the Negroes. Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall supported their appeal in an argument as friend of the court.

California legislature to regulate such discriminations. The Unruh Act, on which respondents based their cases, was passed in 1959. The Hawkins Act followed and prohibited discriminations in publicly assisted housing. In 1961, the legislature enacted proscriptions against restrictive covenants. Finally in 1963, came the Rumford Fair Housing Act, superseding the Hawkins Act and prohibiting racial discriminations in the sale or rental of any private dwelling containing more than four units. That act was enforceable by the State Fair Employment Practice Commission.

It was against this background that Proposition 14 was enacted. Its immediate design and intent, the California court said, was "to overturn state laws that bore on the right of private sellers and lessors to discriminate," the Unruh and Rumford acts, and "to forestall future state action that might circumscribe this right." This aim was successfully achieved: the adoption of Proposition 14 "generally nullifies both the Rumford and Unruh acts as they apply to the housing market," and establishes "a purported constitutional right environment and concluded that the section would encourage and significantly involve the state in private racial discrimination contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment.

The California court could very reasonably conclude that Section 26 would and did have wider impact than a mere repeal of existing statutes. Section 26 mentioned neither the Unruh nor Rumford acts in so many words. Instead, it announced the constitutional right of any person to decline to sell or lease his real property to anyone to whom he did not desire to sell or lease. Unruh and Rumford were thereby PRO TANTO repealed. But the section struck more deeply and more widely. Private discriminations in housing were now not only free from Rumford and Unruh but they also enjoyed a far different status than was true before the passage of those statutes. The right to discriminate, including the right to discriminate on racial grounds, was now embodied in the state's basic charter, immune from legislative, executive, or judicial regulation at any level of the state government. Those practicing racial discriminations need no long- the circumstances [illegible] to-case basis can a "non-obvious involvement of the state be attributed its true significance." Burton v. Wilmington Park Authority, 365 U.S. 715, 722. Here the California court, armed as it was with the knowledge of the facts and circumstances concerning the passage and potential impact of Section 26, and familiar with the milieu in which that provision would operate, has determined that the provision would involve the state in private racial discriminations to an unconstitutional degree. We accept this holding of the California court.

The right to discriminate is now one of the basic policies of the state. The California Supreme Court believes that the section will significantly encourage and involve the state in private discriminations. We have been presented with no persuasive considerations indicating that this judgment should be overturned, affirmed.

HARLAN'S DISSENT

I consider that this decision, which cuts deeply into state political processes, is supported neither by anything "found" by the Supreme to discriminate on racial grounds if they are so minded. By the same token, the Fourteenth Amendment does not require of states the passage of laws preventing such private discrimination, although it does not of course disable them from enacting such legislation if they wish.

I.

The Court attempts to fit the coverage of the Equal Protection Clause by Characterizing it as in effect an affirmative call to residents of California to discriminate. The main difficulty with this viewpoint is that it depends upon a characterzation of Section 26 that cannot fairly be made. The provision is neutral on its face, and it is only by in effect asserting that this requirement of passive official neutrality is camouflage that the Court is able to reach its conclusion. In depicting the provision as tantamount to active state encouragement of discrimination the Court essentially relies on the fact that the California Supreme Court so concluded. It is said that the findings of the highest Court of California as to the mean- stituted "state action" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. The only issue is whether this provision impermissibly deprives any person of equal protection of the laws. As a starting point, it is clear that any statute requiring unjustified discriminatory treatment is unconstitutional. And it is no less clear that the Equal Protection Clause bars as well discriminatory governmental administration of a statute fair on its face. This case fits within neither of these two categories: Section 26 is by its terms inoffensive, and its provisions require no affirmative governmental enforcement of any sort. A third category of equal protection cases, concededly more difficult to characterize, stands for the proposition that when governmental involvement in private discrimination reaches a level at which the state can be held responsible for the specific act of private discrimination, the strictures of the Fourteenth Amendment come into play. Given these latter contours of the Equal Protection doctrine, the assessment of such legislation should be defeated because, if enacted, it may be unrepealable. More fundamentally, the doctrine underlying this decision may hamper, if not preclude, attempts to deal with the delicate and troublesome problems of race relations through the legislative process. The lines that have been and must be drawn in this area, fraught as it is with human sensibilities and frailties of whatever race or creed, are difficult ones. The drawing of them requires understanding, patience, and compromise, and is best done by legislatures rather than by courts. By refusing to accept the decision of the people of California, and by contriving a new and ill-defined constitutional concept to allow Federal judicial interference, I think the court has taken to itself powers and responsibilities left elsewhere by the Constitution.

A Summary of Supreme Court's Actions

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 29 — The Supreme Court took the following action today:

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

Ruled unanimously that a lower Federal court in California erred when it set aside an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling that gave Midwestern rail carriers a larger portion of joint rates on through freight service from other sections of the nation (No. 8, Chicago and North Western Railway v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway; No. 24, United States v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway).

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway; No. 59, Nat'l Automobile Transporters Assn. of Detroit v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway; No. 60, United States v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway).

Ruled unanimously that the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit erred when it stayed a cease-and-desist order of the Federal Trade Commission against price-cutting activities, The Court of Appeals holding that the commission should first have investigated allegations of widespread activities of this nature in the subject industry (No. 101, F.T.C.V. Universal-Rundle Corp.).

ANTI TRUST

Vacated a lower court ruling that the acquisition by Continental Oil Company of Malco Refineries, Inc., an independent oil refinery doing business in New Mexico, did not violate Section 7 of the Clayton act (No. 450, United States v. Continental Oil).

BANKRUPTCY

Agreed to review a lower court ruling that had approved a bankruptcy reorganization of a bankrupt company, despite a charge by shareholders who had been excluded as bona fida shareholders by the trustee, that the trustee would become the president of the reorganized company (No. 952, Protective Committee for Independent Stockholders of T.M.T. Trailer Ferry, Inc. v. Anderson).

CITIZENSHIP

Declared, 5 to 4, that Congress lacks the constitutional power to pass laws depriving citizens of their citizenship without their assent (No. 46, Afroyim v. Rusk).

CIVIL RIGHTS

Ruled, 5 to 4, that the voters of California acted unconstitutionally when they voted to amend the state Constitution to repeal the state's fair housing law (No. 483, Reitman v. Mulkey).

Agreed to review a lower court decision declaring unconstitutional an Alabama law requiring racial segregation of prison inmates (No. 1208, Lee v. Washington).

Vacated a ruling by a Federal District Judge in Virginia, who refused to bar Virginia oficials from enforcing a clause, in the will that established Sweet Briar Institute, limiting the student body to "white girls and young women" (No. 110 Sweet Briar Institute v. Button).

CRIMINAL LAW

Ruled, 8 to 1, that clothing seized in a lawful search should not be excluded from evidence against a defendant simply because it is only "mere evidence" and not contraband or a fruit or instrumentality of the crime (No. 480, Warden v. Hayden).

Agreed to consider whether, in a state that has no "stop and frisk" law, evidence discovered during a "frisk" that was incident to an improper arrest can be used against the person "frisked" (No. 1161, Terry v. Ohio).

Agreed to review a ruling by a Federal District judge in Connecticut that the Lindbergh kidnapping law is unconstitutional (No. 1236, United States v. Jackson).

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
MODEL CITIES ADMINISTRATION
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20410

October 30, 1967

CDA LETTER NO. 3

SUBJECT: Citizen Participation

1. INTRODUCTION

Section 103(a)(2) of the Demonstration Cities and Metropolitan Development Act of 1966 requires that a Model Cities program provide for "widespread citizen participation in the program."

2. POLICY STATEMENT ON CITIZEN PARTICIPATION

The implementation of this statutory provision requires: (1) the constructive involvement of citizens in the model neighborhood area and the city as a whole in planning and carrying out the program, and (2) the means of introducing the views of area residents in policy making should be developed and opportunities should be afforded area residents to participate actively in planning and carrying out the demonstration.

This requirement grows out of the conviction that improving the quality of life of the residents of the model neighborhood can be accomplished only by the affirmative action of the people themselves. This requires a means of building self-esteem, competence and a desire to participate effectively in solving the social and physical problems of their community.

HUD will not determine the ideal organizational pattern designed to accomplish this objective. It will, however, outline performance standards for citizen participation which must be achieved by each City Demonstration Agency. It is expected that patterns will vary from city to city, reflecting local circumstances. The city government, as the principal instrument for carrying out the Model Cities program, will be responsible for insuring that whatever organization is adopted provides the means for the model neighborhood's citizens to participate and be fully involved in policy-making, planning and the execution of all program elements. For a plan to be approved, it must provide for such an organization and spell out precisely how the participation and involvement of the residents is to be carried out throughout the life of the Model Cities program.

3. PERFORMANCE STANDARDS FOR CITIZEN PARTICIPATION IN MODEL NEIGHBORHOOD PROGRAMS

In order to provide the citizen participation called for in the Act, there must be some form of organizational structure, existing or newly established, which embodies neighborhood residents in the process of policy and program planning and program implementation and operation. The leadership of that structure must consist of persons whom neighborhood residents accept as representing their interests.

The neighborhood citizen participation structure must have clear and direct access to the decision making process of the City Demonstration Agency so that neighborhood views can influence policy, planning and program decisions. That structure must have sufficient information about any matter to be decided for a sufficient period of time so that it can initiate proposals and react knowledgeably to proposals from others. In order to initiate and react intelligently in program matters, the structure must have the technical capacity for making knowledgeable decisions. This will mean that some form of professional technical assistance, in a manner agreed to by neighborhood residents shall be provided.

Where financial problems are a barrier to effective participation, financial assistance (e.g., baby sitting fees, reimbursement for transportation, compensation for serving on Boards or Committees) should be extended to neighborhood residents to assure their opportunity to participate.

Neighborhood residents will be employed in planning activities and in the execution of the program, with a view toward development of new career lines, including appropriate training and modification of local civil service regulations for entry and promotion.

tion. For example, if the moving party's mobility is greatly restricted, access to a domiciliary forum may be practically unavailable. Moreover, when the parties secure a divorce without the prerequisite domicile in the forum state, it may not be attacked at a later date by either of them. But regardless of the validity of the domicile prerequisite in divorce actions, the same rationale does not apply to annulment actions, since in annulment actions, courts uniformly apply the law of the state in which the marriage was contracted. Moreover, no jurisdictional bar prevents her from continuing to press her claim for separate maintenance, and he may defend on the ground that no valid marriage exists. We conclude that the interests of the state of celebration of the marriage or the state of domicile of either party do not prevent a court that has personal jurisdiction over both parties from entertaining an annulment action.

It does not follow that, because a court may exercise that jurisdiction, it must do so in all cases. But in the present case the plaintiff was under a special disability in terms of access to any forum other than California because of his military duty. Moreover, she was not caught inadvertently within California, and personal jurisdiction was not exercised on a territorial power theory but was obtained over defendant through her consent. Hence, we assume that no undue burdens are placed on her by the trial of the action in California. In other annulment actions where personal jurisdiction is the sole jurisdictional basis, however, the doctrine of forum non conveniens might well be invoked by one of the parties, or asserted by the court, to cause a discretionary dismissal when fairness and the interests of judicial administration so demand.— Traynor, Ch.J.

Housing

HOUSING CODES—

Missouri equity court lacks jurisdiction to compel compliance with municipal housing ordinance by appointing receiver to collect rents, borrow money, use such funds for repairs, and give priority for such obligations over rights of owners and mortgagees, and by issuing injunctions against further violations.

The city does not urge that its ordinance confers jurisdiction upon a court of equity to grant the relief requested. The ordinance merely authorizes the appropriate city officials to seek equitable relief to abate conditions created by continued violations of the housing code. But the city relies on the general power of a court of equity to grant relief where legal remedies are inadequate, and claims a court of equity has authority to grant the relief sought although there is no precedent in this state for the enforcing of a municipal ordinance in an equitable action.

The facts of this case do not fall within the four general classes of cases in which a receiver may be appointed as enumerated in 4 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 5th Ed., 925, Sections 1332-1335; the relevant Missouri statute, Section 515.240, Revised Statutes of Missouri, neither enlarges nor restricts the classes of cases stated in Pomeroy.

Our conclusion is that authority to provide this kind of relief must be conferred by a statute, as has been done in states which use such procedure, and that proper constitutional safeguards must be provided in such statutes.

[Text] "The original New York Act which was upheld as constitutional in In the Matter of the Department of Buildings, 14 N.Y. 2d 291, 200 N.E. 2d 432, apparently was first of this kind. This act is based on the concept of 'nuisance'. To authorize the appointment of a receiver the Department of Buildings had to certify to the existence of a nuisance which 'constitutes a serious fire hazard or is a serious threat to life, health or safety.' It provides, if, after notice, the conditions are not remedied, and the court determines that a nuisance does exist it shall appoint the City Commissioner of Real Estate as Receiver. The receiver is authorized to collect rents and apply them to the cost of removing the nuisance, payment of operating expenses and taxes. If the rents are insufficient advancements are made from the Department of Real Estate operating fund for which the Department is given a lien. However, at the time of the above cited decision, this lien was subject to any previously recorded mortgage but the mortgagee was not entitled to any rents until the lien of the Department was paid. It was also provided that a mortgagee who removed the nuisance or reimbursed the receiver should have a lien equivalent to the lien of the receiver. This Act was held to be constitutional as a proper exercise of the police power of the state because of its relation to public health and safety. It afforded some protection of the rights of mortgagees by only postponing the right to collect rents until the cost of removing dangerous conditions has been repaid, instead of making such cost a prior lien to the mortgage. Certainly, we cannot hold that a court of equity without any statutory authority can appoint a receiver to make alterations and repairs of property, borrow money for that purpose and authorize the establishment of priority of expenditures as a lien over previously recorded mortgages as to rents and income or otherwise. Moreover, such proposed expansion of the power and jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, a state court of general jurisdiction, would surely be considered a matter of state interest, not authorized by the grant of Charter powers for local government under the provisions of Art. VI, Secs. 31-33 Const."

As to the injunctive relief sought, we note that courts of equity have traditionally had the power to abate public nuisances at the suit of interested municipal agencies. 78 Harvard Law Review 801, 826.

"However, there is some question whether courts have the power, absent express statutory authority, to enjoin housing code violations not declared public nuisances: a traditional doctrine, now in varying stages of disrepute, prohibits equity from enjoining commission of a crime. The equity courts observed in this study all operate under statutory authorization; the question of the power to enjoin in the absence of a statute has apparently never arisen.' The City's petition herein does not proceed on the theory of public nuisance and many of the violations alleged concern only leaks in the plumbing system, although there are some which may be structural defects. As the cited article shows a prohibitory injunction could prohibit the owner from operating his building until he had complied with the order to repair. A mandatory injunction could require the owner either to make the repairs ordered or vacate his building. Apparently vacation or prohibition of operation of the nonconforming building is not what the City wants; and we note Sec. 393.080 of Ordinance 51637 authorizes the owner to 'remove or demolish such building and such action shall be deemed compliance.' Furthermore, Ordinance 51637, Sec. 393.050, authorizes the Building Commissioner, if the owner failed to remedy conditions necessary to bring buildings into compliance, to do so at the owner's expense and if not paid by the owner to have special tax bills for the cost issued, which should be a lien against the property. The City fails to show why these provisions do not provide an adequate remedy and does not brief the issue of injunctive relief if it cannot have a receiver appointed."—Hyde, Special Comr.

Dear Mr. Smith:

Knowing of your interest in neighborhood development corporations, we want to bring two important items to your attention.

1. The Report of the Banking and Currency Committee (Senate Report No. 809) related to the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1967 contains a section on "Neighborhood Development Organizations" (p.35). The "proposal" referred to in the first sentence was a bill designed to amend the Model Cities Act to make neighborhood development corporation the structural form of the citizen participation requirement of that Act. Although the bill was not enacted, the Committee did make important suggestions to HUD for the use of supplemental funds in "providing general operating support to a neighborhood development organization". We consider it important to communicate with community organizations in Model Cities areas which could become eligible to qualify for such support under the language of this Report,

2. The Model Cities Administration of the Department of Housing and Urban Development recently published a policy statement covering the standard of citizen participation in the Model Cities program planning phase (CDA Letter No. 3, October 30, 1967). Note that a neighborhood development corporation could easily qualify as being that form of "organizational structure" (Section 3) representing the interests of neighborhoods from whose leadership will be drawn those who are to participate in the planning. Neighborhood corporations could request funds for professional assistance in the planning phase of the program. Also grants for general operating support to the neighborhood corporation could be budgeted for proposed supplementary funds. If no such organization exists in a Model Cities area, a neighborhood development corporation could be formed and both planning (under directive) and supplementary funds for general operating support (under Senate Report) be requested.

We hope that you will act quickly to communicate to such neighborhood organizations that you know of in Model Cities areas that they stand to benefit under these directives, especially under the Senate Committee Report language.

Please correspond directly with either of us if more information is required.

Sincerely,

John Fletcher

This assistance would enable communities to undertake such immediate short-term actions as (1) repairing serious deficiencies in the streets, sidewalks, parks, playgrounds, publicly owned utilities, and public buildings located in the area to the extent needed to maintain or restore the basic livability of the area until permanent action can be taken (no new construction or major capital improvements would be permitted); (2) the improvement of private properties to the extent needed to eliminate the most immediate dangers to the public health and safety; (3) the demolition of structures deemed unsound or unfit for human habitation and which are a public nuisance and a serious health and safety hazard; (4) establishment of temporary public playgrounds on vacant land such as those lots which have been cleared of unsound structures; and (5) the improvement of such public services in the area as garbage and trash collection and street cleaning where unemployed, or underemployed, residents of the area are used for this purpose.

Grants could not exceed two-thirds of the cost of planning and carrying out an interim program, except that three-fourths grants could be made to any community with a population of 50,000 or less according to the most recent decennial census. A community would have to have a workable program for community improvement to qualify for assistance, and relocation assistance and payments would be available to anyone displaced as the result of an interim program.

Neighborhood Development Organizations

The committee considered a proposal to fund the operation of neighborhood development organizations through the Department of Housing and Urban Development for the purpose of promoting citizen involvement at the neighborhood level in determining the housing and urban development needs of the neighborhood and coordinating the efforts of the neighborhood residents with those of other public and private bodies in improving the neighborhood. It was decided that the most appropriate place to encourage such organizations would be in those areas in which a comprehensive city demonstration program was being carried out with assistance under 1966 legislation. With this in mind, the committee does not believe that any further legislative authority is needed. The authority for supplementary grants to city demonstration agencies is broad enough to permit those agencies to use part of the supplementary grants made to them for the purpose of providing general operating support to a neighborhood development organization. We expect the Department of Housing and Urban Development to be sympathetic to the proposals of city demonstration agencies to so use supplementary grant funds, since financial assistance to this type of organization should be most helpful in effecting the statutory objective of widespread citizen involvement in comprehensive city demonstration programs.

Low-Rent Public Housing—Corporate Status

Section 214 of the bill would repeal obsolete provisions of law relating to low-rent housing. When the United States Housing Act of 1937 was first enacted there was established a special corporation known as the U.S. Housing Authority to perform the Federal low-of said system. The Assistant Attorneys General appointed by the Governor shall not be compensated at a rate in excess of the highest rate of compensation established by the Attorney General for the Assistant Attorneys General appointed by him. Any Assistant Attorney General, Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Law Assistant or other employee not under the Merit System may be removed by the appointing authority."

Section 3. Said Act is further amended by striking section 4 in its entirety and inserting in lieu thereof a new section 4 to read as follows:

"Section 4. The Department of Law is hereby vested with complete and exclusive authority and jurisdiction in all matters of law relating to the executive branch of the government and every department, office, institution, commission, committee, board and other agency thereof. Every department, office, institution, commission, committee, board and other agency of the State government is hereby prohibited from employing counsel in any manner whatsoever, unless otherwise specifically authorized by law."

Duties of department, etc.

Section 4. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

STATE REVENUE COMMISSIONER—EQUALIZATION OF TAXABLE VALUES BETWEEN COUNTIES.

Code Chapter 92-70 Repealed.

No. 31 (House Bill No. 468).

An Act to provide that the State Revenue Commissioner shall examine the tax digests of the several counties to compare said digests for the purpose of ascertaining whether the valuation of the various classes of property for taxation purposes as made in the respective counties is reasonably uniform as between the counties; to provide for the equalization of the taxable values of property between the counties by the State Revenue Commissioner; to provide for the return of tax digests found to be unreasonably out of proportion; to provide for the correction of tax digests so returned; to repeal Code Chapter 92-70, relating to the duty of the State Revenue Commissioner to examine tax digests of the several counties; to repeal conflicting laws; and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Georgia:

Section 1. Beginning with the tax digests which are prepared for the calendar year 1967:

Duties.

a. It shall be the duty of the State Revenue Commissioner to carefully examine the tax digests of the several counties filed in his office pursuant to the provisions of Code section 92-6917, and to compare said digests for the purpose of ascertaining whether the valuation of the various classes of property as made in the respective counties for taxation purposes is reasonably uniform as between the various counties and to ascertain compliance with Article VII, Section I, Paragraph III of the Constitution.

Intent.

b. It is the purpose and intent of this Act to bring about as far as practicable an equalization throughout the state of the values of the various classes of property subject to taxation in accordance with Article VII, Section I, Paragraph III of the Constitution.

Adjustment of values.

c. If it shall appear to the State Revenue Commissioner that in any one or more of the counties the taxable values fixed upon any one or more classes of property are not reasonably uniform with the values fixed upon the same classes of property in other counties, the Commissioner shall investigate and inquire as to the reason therefor, and after making such investigation and comparison, shall have authority to adjust and equalize the same, either by adding a fixed per centum to the county valuation of any class of property in any county, if he finds the county valuation too low, or by deducting a fixed per centum from the county valuation if he finds the county valuation too high, as may appear to be just and right between the counties. After making such adjustments, the State Revenue Commissioner shall notify by United States mail the chairman of the county board of tax assessors of the county affected that the county valuations upon the classes of property specified in said notice shall be raised or lowered by the per centum fixed by the State Revenue Commissioner, and the State Revenue Commissioner shall thereupon return to said county its tax digest for correction accordingly.

Duties of county tax assessors.

Section 2. Upon the giving of notice by the State Revenue Commissioner of changes or corrections to be made in the county tax digest, it shall be the duty of the chairman of the county board of tax assessors of the county affected, to call immediately a meeting of said county board, and at said meeting the board shall correct the county valuation upon the class or classes of property specified by the State Revenue Commissioner, so as to make the same conform to the findings of the Commissioner by applying uniformly to the specified class or classes of property the fixed per centum of increase or of decrease specified by the State Revenue Commissioner and by raising or lowering all the individual returns of all the taxpayers of the county upon the specified class or classes of property accordingly.

Code Chap. 92-70 repealed.

Section 3. Code Chapter 92-70, relating to the duty of the State Revenue Commissioner to examine the tax digests of the various counties filed in his office, as amended, is hereby repealed in its entirety.

Section 4. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

Approved February 18, 1966.

AD HOC COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER

FORMATION OF A CITY-WIDE FAIR HOUSING COUNCIL

Minutes of First Meeting, 2/23/68

The persons named on the attached attendance sheet met in Room "E", Bradshaw's Cafeteria, 40 Marietta Street, at Noon for the purpose of exchanging experiences in the formation of neighborhood fair housing committees and exploring the possibilities of organizing a city-wide Fair Housing Council. In the absence of an appointed chairman, Noyes Collinson, American Friends Service Committee staff member, Atlanta Community Relations Program, presided.

SWAP (Southwest Atlantans for Progress): Jim Clark, representing SWAP, reviewed briefly the steps taken to organize and effect operations. He observed that it is difficult to determine whether the goal--stabilization of the Cascade-Sewell area in transition--has been achieved. Too many "For Sale" signs are still in evidence and the out-migration of whites continues although at a slower pace. It is believed that some houses are offered for sale through the classified ads of the daily papers although no signs appear on the property. Monthly forums to discuss pertinent issues will continue. The ratio of Negro-white attendance varies with the nature of the program. The steering committee is equally divided between the races. There are actually two different problems within the area. One section is already 90-95% Negro while another section is approximately 40% Negro, 60% white. There is consensus that a valuable by-product of the forums is better understanding between the races and the creation of a medium of communication between them. It is believed and hoped that this medium provides the basis for education and a change of attitudes on the part of both races.

DRUID HILLS: Bob Sigmon reported that since the organization of this fair housing neighborhood committee in April of 1967, about 150 families have been identified in one way or another with it. There are virtually no Negroes living in this area. An ad hoc steering committee plans monthly meetings in members' homes, attendance at which varies. The committee is eager to have Negro neighbors. The acting chairman of the Druid Hills group has had conversations with the Druid Hills Civic Association, a property owners group, and a statement of mutual concern has been issued. A listing committee has been set up to receive applications from persons willing to sell or rent in the open market and the names of would-be purchasers or renters in the area. It should be noted that there are very few rentals available. Members of an information committee discuss open occupancy informally with their neighbors. By summer it is hoped that the organization will be formalized. It has succeeded in persuading Emory University to declare in print on its rental and sale listing forms its policy of open occupancy and fair housing for all persons seeking accomodations. It is expected that during the period of the fall enrollment, 1968, the impact of this declaration will be demonstrated.

Mrs. Whatley, a member of the new Summit Leadership Conference's housing section announced planned visits to the Druid Hills neighborhood Sunday, March 25th, by Negroes looking for apartments. The Druid Hills Committee will cooperate. Questions were raised as to how best to inform Negroes that they will be welcomed as neighbors by members of the Druid Hills Committee. An open house tea was arranged December 17, 1967. This was not too well attended by Negroes, possibly because of the pre-Christmas pressures or the uncertainty as to the real intent of the tea.

NORTHWEST ATLANTA FAIR HOUSING COMMITTEE: Ramona Cowart reported on a preliminary meeting held in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Gerald Reed to consider organizing a Northwest Atlanta group. Severely inclement weather cut down on the attendance but a steering committee was created to plan a second meeting scheduled for March 19th. Notices will be sent out for this meeting. John Morris inquired whether Northeast Atlanta, the area lying between the Northwest boundaries and Druid Hills, would be better served by affiliation with Northwest or Druid Hills or should it have its own local committee? Plans are underway to organize an independent Northeast committee.

YWCA: Mrs. Pierce Allgood reported that the YWCA nationally and locally have selected as a major issues concentration on open occupancy. It is hoped that YWCA will be able to cooperate through its membership both with neighborhood committees and churches with which they are affiliated. One phase of the program will be an attempt to create an attitude of acceptance of fair housing.

FULTON COUNTY LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS: Mrs. Parham reported that the national League of Women Voters program will focus attention on open occupancy at all levels. It will study effective legislation in other parts of the country, building codes and other items pertinent to fair housing.

NEW ENGLAND EXPERIENCES: Bob Tuve, an invited guest, spoke at some length on experiences as far back as 1959 under Unitarian-Universalist Church auspices in trying to effect fair housing for minority home seekers. He cited instances in the Boston metropolitan area where 45 suburban communities federated and set up a clearing house with headquarters in the Negro community. During the first year, 150 families who were looking for better quarters were served. It was soon discovered that funds would be needed to make the program truly effective and that relying on volunteer help alone would not produce results. Fair Housing, Inc. was created, enlisting the support of people competent in needed categories such as law, politics and financing. A demonstration grant was received from HUD enabling this group to serve 400 families.

Hartford, Connecticut, had experiences similar to the Boston group. However, a loose council type was developed for coordinating area-wide meetings to work with the Civil Rights Commission.

Bob Tuve mentioned the possibilities inherent in the formation of a private corporation to deal directly with sellers and buyers in middle bracket homes ($15,000 to $23,000). The Hartford Real Estate Board issued a policy statement on open occupancy which is perhaps unique in the country. Insurance companies and churches cooperated.

SUMMIT LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE (#2): Mrs. Whatley, speaking for this group, reported that its housing committee will concentrate on seeking new houses in fringe areas and the suburbs and will visit elected officials for support. She observed that many Negro families, especially those whose income is above $4700 a year and who are obliged to leave public housing when that figure is achieved, can well afford to make monthly mortgage payments equivalent to public housing rentals.

ISSUES: John Steinichen, speaking for INTERFAITH, INC., a group of churches of several denominations concerned with low-cost housing, inquired whether Negroes have been persuaded to live elsewhere than in the ghettoes. Mrs. Whatley replied in the affirmative that they do want to leave and that there is no other choice. He also inquired into what steps are being taken to re-integrate areas which have become all black: is there a movement to persuade whites to return to their former neighborhoods? He reported on some issues that must be faced, such as suburban opportunities, building codes, political action, land use plans and zoning ordinances and the need for an economic and racial mix. He inquired whether Negroes welcome a dispersal plan of residence. He suggested that a pragmatic approach must be taken in dealing with real estate boards. He observed that in the last analysis, community attitudes are more effective than fair housing ordinances which, at best, are symbolic, stating that with proper education leading to better community attitudes of acceptance of open occupancy,legislation would still be symbolic.

FEDERAL EXECUTIVE BOARD (Sub-committee on Housing): Nat Welch, chairman of this sub-committee, invited all persons attending today's meeting to meet at 9:30 A.M., Friday, March 1st in the Veterans Conference Room, 730 Peachtree Street, to consider the advisability and feasibility of arranging a Metro-Atlanta Area Conference on Open Occupancy to be scheduled during the spring of 1968.

Meeting adjourned at 1:30 subject to call following decisions reached at the March 1st meeting referred to in the preceding paragraph.

CLSA Reports
COMMISSION ON LAW AND SOCIAL ACTION

SUMMARY OF FAIR HOUSING PROVISIONS OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL OF 1968, AS APPROVED BY THE SENATE ON MARCH 11.

On March 11, 1968, the United States Senate terminated many weeks of debate on a comprehensive civil rights bill and approved it by a vote of 71 to 20. The bill on which the Senate acted was H.R. 2516, which had been passed by the House of Representatives in 1967. As passed by the House, the bill dealt with only one limited subject, protection of civil rights workers against violence. The Senate, under the prodding of both its liberal and conservative wings, added a number of other features, including protection of the rights of Indians, attempts to curb fomentation of riots and Federal penalties for crimes committed during riots. Undoubtedly, however, the provisions barring discrimination in housing that were added on the floor of the Senate attracted the most attention.

The bill, as amended by the Senate, has been returned to the House of Representatives which will decide whether to accept it as it stands or to insist on the convening of a conference committee to consider further changes. This will not happen before April 10.

This report summarizes the fair housing portion of the bill (Titles VIII and IX) with particular reference to the scope of its application, the practices that are prohibited and the enforcement provisions.

Scope

The bill would go into effect in three stages, gradually extending its application to a very large part (estimated at 80 to 85 per cent) of the total housing market.

(a) Immediately upon enactment (that is, when it is signed by the President), the bill would apply to all dwellings owned or operated by the Federal Government; all dwellings built with the assistance of loans or grants from the Federal Government under agreements entered into after November 20, 1962, unless the loans had been paid off prior to enactment of the bill; all dwellings receiving Federal mortgage guarantees (such as those granted by the FHA and VA), under agreements entered into after November 20, 1962, unless the mortgage had been paid off prior to the effective date of the Act; and dwellings made available through redevelopment projects receiving Federal assistance granted after November 20, 1962.

The term "dwellings" includes not only residential housing but also vacant land for use for residential housing.

The date repeatedly referred to in the sections described above, November 20, 1962, is the date of President Kennedy's executive order prohibiting discrimination in Federally-assisted housing. Apparently, the theory is that discrimination in such housing is already illegal and it is appropriate to make the statutory prohibition effective immediately.

(b) After December 31, 1968, the bill would apply to all dwellings except (1) rooms or units in any dwellings occupied by no more than four families if the owner maintains his living quarters there, and (2) single family homes sold or rented by the owner. However, this second exemption would not apply if the owner owns more than three such single family homes at one time. It is also provided that, in the case of a sale of a single family home by an owner other than its most recent resident, the exemption shall apply only with respect to one sale made within any 24-month period.

(c) After December 31, 1969, the bill would apply to the sale or rental of single family homes unless the house is sold or rented without the services of a real estate broker or of a person engaged in the business of selling or renting of dwellings, and also without public advertisement in violation of the provision in the bill on discriminatory advertising.

As noted below, the bill also contains provisions barring discrimination in financing of housing and discrimination by associations of real estate brokers, both of which would go into effect at the end of 1968.

The bill would not prohibit religious organizations from giving preference to their own followers with respect to dwellings which they operate for other than a commercial purpose (unless membership in the organization was restricted on account of race, color or national origin). The bill would also permit private clubs to restrict to their own members lodgings which they operate for other than commercial purposes.

Prohibited Practices

The bill contains the customary provisions making it illegal to refuse to sell or lease housing, to refuse to negotiate for sale or lease of available housing or otherwise withhold housing, because of race, etc., and to discriminate in the terms or conditions of a sale or lease with respect to services and facilities. It would also ban discriminatory advertising. In a section aimed at "block-busting," the bill would make it illegal for anyone, acting "for profit," to induce any person to sell or rent by representations regarding the entry into the neighborhood of persons of a particular race, etc.

After December 31, 1968, it would be unlawful for any financial institution to discriminate in making loans on dwellings because of the race, etc. of the borrower or of the prospective owners or tenants of the dwellings. It would also be unlawful, after that date, to deny to any person full and equal participation in any multiple listing service, real estate brokers' organization or other similar facility on the basis of race, etc.

General Administration

Responsibility for administering the fair housing portions of the bill would be given to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. An additional Assistant Secretary would be added to the HUD Department. All Federal executive departments and agencies administering programs affecting housing and urban development would be directed to do so affirmatively so as to further the purposes of the Act. The HUD Secretary would be directed to make studies concerning housing discrimination, publish reports and cooperate with other governmental and nongovernmental agencies. The Secretary would also be directed to initiate educational and conciliatory activities directly upon enactment of the bill.

Enforcement

The bill provides three separate procedures for enforcement.

1. HUD Administrative Proceedings. Persons aggrieved by discriminatory practices or believing that they may be injured by threatened practices could file complaints with the Secretary within 180 days of the violation. The Secretary would investigate and then notify the complainant "whether he intends to resolve" the complaint. (Although this is not spelled out, the Secretary would presumably make such a declaration of intent when his preliminary investigation produces evidence of illegal discrimination.) On making such a declaration, he would attempt to eliminate or correct the discriminatory practice by informal methods of conciliation and persuasion.

The bill contains a provision to insure handling of cases under state and local fair housing laws where they exist. Thus, when a complaint was filed in such areas, the Secretary would notify the appropriate state or local agency of the filing of the complaint and would refrain from further action on it if the agency accepted jurisdiction and proceeded to act.

If within 30 days after the complaint was filed with the Secretary (or within 30 days after expiration of the reference of a case to a state or local agency) the Secretary was unable to achieve compliance, the aggrieved person could start a civil action in the United States District Court to enforce his rights. (However, such an action could not be started in any state or local area where the law provides a judicial remedy for housing bias.) If the court found a violation of the Act, it could enjoin the practice "or" order appropriate affirmative action. (Despite the use of the word, "or," it is likely that a court could both halt the practice and require remedial steps.) It is specifically provided that the burden of proof shall be on the complainant, as it is in most if not all civil actions.

There are customary elaborate provisions giving the Secretary power to subpena evidence in the investigation of complaints.

2. Individual Court Proceedings. In separate provisions, the bill would permit any person to enforce his rights under the Act by civil actions in the United States courts. This section provides, however, that the court shall suspend proceedings if it believes that conciliation efforts by the Secretary or by a state or local agency in any proceeding are likely to result in satisfactory settlement of the discriminatory practice involved.

The court would be empowered to issue an appropriate order. However, no sale or lease entered into with a person having no notice of the existence of the complaint could be set aside. There are provisions allowing the court to appoint an attorney for the plaintiff if he is not financially able to assume the attorney's fees. It could issue both temporary and permanent injunctions and could award the plaintiff actual damages and not more than $1,000 in punitive damages.

3. Proceedings by the Attorney General. The bill contains provisions (paralleling those of the 1964 Civil Rights Act with respect to employment and public accommodations) which would permit the Attorney General to bring a civil suit restraining discrimination if he found a "practice" of discrimination and the practice "raises an issue of general public importance."

Prevention of Intimidation

The bill would make it unlawful to coerce or interfere with any person in the exercise of the rights described above. This section could be enforced by "an appropriate civil action." In a separate portion of the bill, Title IX, intimidation would be made a criminal offense punishable by a fine of $1,000 and/or up to one year in jail and, if bodily injury results, a fine of up to $10,000 and/or imprisonment of up to ten years and, if death results, imprisonment for any term of years or for life.

RE: Media Coverage

I am pleased to assume the responsibility for keeping the media informed as to the progress of the Fair Housing Congress, and I solicit your advice and suggestions.

However, it is imperative that there be maintained only one news source and one spokesman.

Mrs. Kathleen Wood, the Executive Director, has been designated by Nat Welch as the spokesman, at least until a chairman is appointed. No one else is authorized to speak for the group until further notice.

Secondly, I am in the process of preparing news releases and stimulating radio, TV and newspaper interest in the Congress and those working with it. I will appreciate your suggestions but please DO NOT arrange for media interviews yourself or otherwise comment to the media. Refer any media inquiries to me.

It will serve the reporters, and the Congress, best if we have central focal points -- as spokesman and media coordinator.

Thank you for your help.

You may reach me, as needed, at 526-5001, and Mrs. Wood at 875-3024.

EVIDENCE grows that Atlanta will move to implement the new federal fair-housing law with the same kind of strong community leadership it had when the schools were integrated seven years ago.

The best evidence is the strong sponsorship which the Atlanta Metropolitan Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing has drawn. The committee is headed by Cecil A. Alexander, who also is chairman of the mayor's Housing Resources Committee, and Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, retired president of Morehouse College. The sponsors at the outset were 56 organizations and individuals.

The committee will conduct an all-day conference May 29 at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel to discuss what the new federal law means to Atlanta. It hopes for a broadly representative attendance at the talks and workshops. (You may call 875-3024 for arrangements.)

Atlanta leaders in the real estate field, as well as federal officials and legal authorities, will be on the panels. Secretary Robert C. Weaver of the Department of Housing and Urban Development and Police Chief Herbert Jenkins will be the principal speakers.

HOUSING DISCRIMINATION in Atlanta has had ramifications far beyond the simple denial of the right for anyone to live where he chooses. The pattern that has developed over the past century has made for gross economic discrimination, as well.

Negroes pay substantially more for what they receive in housing in Atlanta. What is available to them now tends to be substandard housing more often than what is available for whites; in fact, the 1960 census that 46 per cent of the Negro housing units in Atlanta were "deteriorating, dilapidated, or lacked essential amenities." Only a fourth of Atlanta's Negroes occupy their own homes; half the whites do. At certain levels, the Negro demand for housing is much stronger than the supply.

Within the patterns of the past, white residential areas that have received Negroes have always subsequently become "transitional," and finally all-Negro. This is a pattern that must be broken, for the sake of white home-owners in potentially transitional areas (many of whom would be ready to stay in an integrated neighborhood but not in an all-Negro neighborhood) and for the sake of Negro families that simply need the same freedom of purchase which whites have. Atlanta cannot afford to go on with the present pattern of making an all-black city surrounded by all-white suburbs.

THE REV. HUGH BROOKS, pastor of West End Baptist Church, has put his fin on some of the problems recently in a s mon to his white congregation. Mr. Bro is one of those who wants to prevent one the city's oldest white communities fr becoming, under the pressure of Negro ho ing requirements, an all-Negro commun during the next few years.

Unless the present trends are revers he told his church members, today's pr lems will be passed on to the next gene tion "not as a wind but as a whirlwind." recounted Atlanta's past history of ghet izing the city through discrimination by re estate agencies, lending institutions and pu lic policy. He predicted strong efforts n to circumvent the new fair-housing law, a that can lead to continuing re-segregation.

He urged white residents of transition areas to stay where they are, to work for d segregation without re-segregation; and called for a metropolitan-wide solution th will remove heavy pressure on any one are by enabling Negroes to purchase wherev they wish.

The federal housing law answers Atlanta need on that score. But it must be impl mented effectively with as little hanky-pank by realtors, lending institutions and indivi uals as possible. The full weight of th influential people of Atlanta should be brougl to bear to guarantee this.

Joseph Lee Jones et ux., Petitioners, v. Alfred H. Mayer Co. et al.	On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

[June 17, 1968.]

Mr. Justice Stewart delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this case we are called upon to determine the scope and the constitutionality of an Act of Congress, 42 U. S. C. § 1982, which provides that:

On September 2, 1965, the petitioners filed a complaint in the District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, alleging that the respondents had refused to sell them a home in the Paddock Woods community of St. Louis County for the sole reason that petitioner Joseph Lee Jones is a Negro. Relying in part upon § 1982, the petitioners sought injunctive and other relief.[1] The District Court sustained the respondents' motion to

INTRODUCTION

The new Federal fair housing law comes at a time of unparalleled economic, social, and political crisis in the United States. It comes at a time when the cumulative, degrading effects of generations of racial discrimination and segregation threaten the future not only of the American system, but of every individual citizen — black and white.

The fair housing law alone cannot turn our increasingly urban society away from its headlong plunge toward chaos. It must be buttressed by immediate and massive programs to wipe out the racial and economic disparities and injustices which divide the American family. But this law, if effectively enforced and coupled with affirmative action programs by all agencies of government, will be a major step in moving the nation toward economic health, social advancement, and domestic peace.

This interpretation and guide, prepared by the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH), is for use by the public-at-large. It is based on a technical analysis of the Federal statute prepared by members of the NCDH Legal Committee and on NCDH's continuous study and evaluation of state and local fair housing laws from the beginning of this type of legislation more than a decade ago.

In this booklet, NCDH has outlined in broad, practical terms the primary housing coverage of the new Federal law; actions which are prohibited; the provisions for enforcement; and ways the law can be used to fulfill its guarantees of individual rights as well as the collective right of "fair housing throughout the United States." Also included are suggested government and private agency resources to help aggrieved persons with the filing of complaints or to aid organizations and institutions in planning and carrying out programs in support of the law. Finally, the NCDH guide lists states and localities with fair housing laws.

THE PRIMARY HOUSING COVERAGE

The open housing section of the 1968 Civil Rights Act (Title VIII) prohibits discrimination based on race, color, religion, or national origin in the sale, rental, financing, or advertising of dwelling units, including vacant land to be used for residential purposes. It also makes "blockbusting"—sometimes called "panic peddling"—illegal. In addition, the law requires that membership in real estate boards and other organizations relating to the business of selling or renting residential property, and participation in multiple listing services, shall be on a nondiscriminatory basis. These provisions go into effect in the three stages described below.

First Stage—1968

As of April 11, 1968 (upon signing of the Act by the President), the law applies to federally-aided housing, the coverage at this stage being substantially the same as that provided by the Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing (No. 11063), issued by President Kennedy on November 20, 1962. Thus, the immediate coverage includes:

- Dwellings owned or operated by the Federal Government.
  Examples: One- and two-family homes and multi-family apartment buildings which have been repossessed by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) or the Veterans Administration (VA) for default on payment of mortgages guaranteed by those agencies. These dwellings are usually referred to as "FHA-acquired" or "VA-acquired" properties, and information about them can be obtained from the nearest FHA or VA office.

- Dwellings provided by loans, grants or contributions from the Federal Government.
  Example: Federally-aided low-rent public housing projects. (The fair housing law limits coverage of public housing projects to those built under agreements made with the Federal Government after November 20, 1962—the date of the Executive housing Order, and where repayment in full had not been made before April 11, 1968 – the date the new law was enacted. However, most public housing projects, new and old, receive annual contributions from the Government, and discrimination is prohibited under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Thus, it would appear that substantially all federally-aided public housing units are covered by a prohibition of discrimination based on race, creed or ancestry.)

- Dwellings provided under a state or local public agency's slum clearance or urban renewal program that received Federal assistance since November 20, 1962.
  EXAMPLE: Urban renewal housing, including that provided under the Model Cities program.

- Dwellings provided by loans insured or guaranteed by the Federal Government under agreements entered into after November 20, 1962, unless the loans were paid off in full before April 11, 1968.
  EXAMPLES: One- and two-family homes and multi-family buildings constructed in recent years and in the future under the FHA and VA mortgage insurance or guarantee programs.
  (In this one category, the first stage of the new law appears to extend beyond the 1962 Executive Housing Order. Under FHA and VA regulations, the Order was applied only to the initial sale of one- and two-family FHA-insured and VA-guaranteed homes by the developer, and subsequent resales by individual owners were exempt. In the opinion of lawyers associated with NCDH, the language of the 1968 Act covers both the original sale by the developer and all subsequent resales by individual owners if the federally-insured or guaranteed mortgage had not been paid off in full by April 11, 1968.)

It is estimated that the first stage of the Federal law, covering the period April 11 through December 31, 1968, will apply to approximately six million dwelling units throughout the United States.

Second Stage – 1969

AS OF JANUARY 1, 1969, coverage will be extended beyond federally-assisted housing to apply to substantially all apartment house rentals, sales of units in cooperative developments, sales of homes by subdivision developers, and to some buildings with four or fewer dwelling units. Specifically, the second stage will extend coverage to include residential property sales and rentals involving:

- All buildings containing five or more dwelling units.

- Buildings with two, three, and four dwelling units, provided the owner does not live in the building.

- One-family houses sold or rented by those who own more than three single-family houses. (The law applies to an owner with three or fewer houses if he sells more than one house, other than the one in which he lives, within any 24-month period.)

Effective January 1, 1969, discrimination is also prohibited by:

- Mortgage lending institutions.

- Real estate boards (and other business organizations related to selling or renting homes and apartments) in their membership policies and in participation in multiple listing services. (Until recent years, the vast majority of real estate boards were "lily white." Even now there is only token, if any, minority representation in most boards. Since members share their listings of properties for sale through a "multiple listing" system, denial of membership in a board cuts a broker off from most housing offered on the market. The new law should swiftly remove this serious business disadvantage long inflicted on Negro and other minority-group brokers.)

It is estimated that beginning with January 1, 1969, coverage of the nation's housing supply will be extended to between 18 and 20 million dwelling units.

Third Stage – 1970 and Thereafter

As of January 1, 1970, coverage of the new Federal law will be extended to include:

- All one-family houses which are sold or rented with the service of a real estate broker, agent, salesman, or any other person engaged in the business of selling or renting dwellings. This provision includes houses which are occupied by the owners at the time they are put on the market. (The statute defines a person who is "in the business of selling or renting dwellings" as one who has: 1) during the preceding 12 months participated as the seller or lessor of three or more dwellings; 2) within the preceding 12 months participated as an agent in two or more such transactions other than the sale or rental of his own personal residence; and 3) a person who is the owner of any house containing five or more dwelling units. This definition apparently is aimed at bringing unlicensed real estate dealers, part-time salesmen, and other small volume operators who derive profit from selling or renting housing within the non-discrimination requirements of the law.)

- All one-family houses sold or rented by owners who have advertised, made statements, or written or posted notices in connection with offering the property for sale or rent that in any manner indicate any preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, religion, or national origin.

Possible Exemptions

The new Federal law includes a provision which may allow discrimination in sales or rentals involving some owner-occupied buildings containing four or fewer dwelling units. However, the unclear language of the statute has given rise to legal questions as to the precise circumstances under which any such exemption may apply. For the present, it is suggested that where discrimination is encountered involving owner-occupied houses containing two, three, or four dwelling units, detailed information be sent immediately to NCDH for review and advice from its Legal Committee.

It is estimated that beginning with 1970, the Federal open housing law will apply to 55 million dwelling units of the national total of 69 million, or approximately 80 per cent of the nation's housing supply.

ACTIONS PROHIBITED

The Federal fair housing statute makes the following actions unlawful if taken because of race, color, religion, or national origin:

- Refusal to sell or rent after a bona fide offer for the purchase or rental of housing (including vacant lots) which has been put on the market.

- Discrimination in the terms or conditions of the sale, rental, or financing of housing (including vacant lots).

- Making, printing, publishing or posting statements, notices, or advertisements relating to housing sales or rentals that indicate discrimination or the intent to discriminate. (Owners who seek to avoid the fair housing law by selling or renting without the aid of a broker are subject to the law if they violate the ban on discriminatory advertising – see page 8.)

- Falsely to represent that any housing on the market (including vacant land) is not available for inspection, sale or rental.

- "Blockbusting": For profit, to try to persuade people to sell their homes or rent dwelling units by representations regarding the movement or prospective movement into a neighborhood of persons of particular races, creeds or national origin.

Interference or Threat of Force

A separate section in the statute (Sec. 817 of Title VIII) makes it illegal to coerce, intimidate, threaten, or interfere with persons exercising or encouraging others to exercise rights granted or protected by the Federal fair housing law. This section authorizes civil actions against any such interference. It protects homeseekers, brokers, and others exercising rights granted under the law; owners, landlords, and others seeking to obey the law; and those – for example, NCDH and fair housing groups – who are working to achieve the intent of the law.

In addition, under Title IX of the Act criminal prosecutions may be brought against those who use or threaten to use force which injures, intimidates, or interferes (or attempts to do so) with the sale, rental, purchase, financing, or occupancy of housing, or with any other rights granted under the fair housing law. This title also protects those who, by speech or peaceful assembly, educate for fair housing or protest any denial of rights granted by the law. Criminal penalties may be a fine up to $1,000, or imprisonment up to one year, or both. If bodily injury should result from the use of force, the penalty may reach a fine of $10,000, imprisonment up to 10 years, or both. If death should result, the person who resorted to force in violation of the fair housing law could be subject to life imprisonment.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAW

Primary responsibility for administering the open housing law rests with the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). In order to further the objective of "fair housing throughout the United States," the Secretary is authorized to initiate and carry out a broad range of educational, investigative and promotional programs. He may conduct studies, publish reports, cooperate with public and private agencies, hold conciliation meetings, convene conferences, and carry forward various other activities designed to facilitate both voluntary compliance with and effective enforcement of the open housing requirements.

PROVISIONS FOR ENFORCEMENT

The law provides three methods for enforcement: administrative action by HUD; civil lawsuits by aggrieved persons; and court action by the Attorney General of the United States.

Administrative Action by HUD

The Secretary of HUD is authorized to receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and to attempt to resolve them by conciliation and persuasion. However, if a complaint involves possible violation of a state or local fair housing law which provides rights and remedies "substantially equivalent" to those provided by the Federal statute, HUD will refer the case to the appropriate state or local agency for handling. If that agency proceeds to act on the matter with "reasonable promptness" (generally within 30 days), HUD will take no further action. Only in cases where the Secretary determines that the interest of justice requires further Federal action will HUD proceed with its own investigation, as will be done immediately if no state or local fair housing law is applicable.

Although HUD's enforcement powers for handling individual complaints are limited to conference, conciliation and persuasion, the Secretary is authorized to subpena witnesses and examine all necessary records. Persons who refuse to obey a subpena or testify or produce necessary records are liable to a fine up to $1,000, or imprisonment up to one year, or both.

HUD is required to furnish copies of complaints to those who allegedly committed discriminatory housing practices. Also, within 30 days after receipt of a complaint (or within 30 days after referral to a state or local agency), the Secretary must notify the aggrieved person whether he intends to resolve the issue.

Court Action by Aggrieved Persons

An aggrieved person may bring a civil court action to secure rights guaranteed by the statute. Private lawsuits can be instituted immediately without the filing of complaints with HUD, or can be brought following a failure of HUD or a state or local agency to obtain satisfactory settlement of the complaint. However, a court may suspend proceedings if it believes conciliation efforts of the Secretary of HUD or action by a state or local agency administering a fair housing law may resolve the matter.

Private lawsuits must be brought within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory act. If a judicial remedy, at least equivalent to the Federal statute, exists under a state or local fair housing law, the case must be brought in a state court; otherwise it may be filed in a Federal district court.

Persons who cannot afford to pay the costs of a private lawsuit to secure rights granted under the law may appeal to the court for help. If the court finds it would promote justice, it may appoint an attorney for the plaintiff and authorize the filing of a civil action without payment of fees or costs. A state court may do likewise, consistent with the laws of the state. If the plaintiff wins, the court may award actual damages to the plaintiff and up to $1,000 as punitive damages, plus court costs and reasonable attorney fees. The court must, however, find that the plaintiff is not financially able to pay the attorney fees.

The court may issue an appropriate order, including either a temporary or permanent injunction. However, a sale or lease of the housing in question to a third party who is a bona fide purchaser or tenant cannot be affected if such sale or lease was made prior to the issuance of the court's order and without actual notice to the third party of the existence of the complaint or court action.

Action by the Attorney General

The new law provides that whenever the Attorney General of the United States has reasonable cause to believe that a person or group of persons is engaged in a "pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of the rights granted" under the fair housing law, "or that any group of persons has been denied any of the rights" granted by the law and that such denial "raises an issue of general public importance," he may bring a civil action in the Federal district court. He may request the court to issue permanent or temporary injunctions or such other orders as he deems necessary "to insure the full enjoyment of the rights granted" by the fair housing provisions of the 1968 Civil Rights Act.

PROVISIONS FOR AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

The new Federal fair housing law must be used forcefully and effectively to redress individual injustices. But a decade of experience under state and local open housing legislation has proved that implementation must reach far beyond the case-by-case individual complaint process if meaningful impact is to be made on unfair housing practices.

The potential for making the promise of this new law a reality lies in a few key provisions which can, if properly implemented, affect the whole pattern of urban housing and community life and actually lead to the establishment of "fair housing throughout the United States."

First, the statute directs the Secretary of HUD and "all executive departments and agencies" [emphasis supplied] to administer their programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the policies set forth by the fair housing law. It also directs that all such departments and agencies shall cooperate with the Secretary of HUD to that end.

If that mandate is obeyed, it can turn this nation toward the creation of a slum-free, ghetto-free America. Every housing and development program would be planned, executed and operated to expand housing opportunities and to wipe out limitations and devices that automatically restrict housing choice and "build in" discrimination and segregation. Low-cost housing would no longer build huge permanent communities of the black poor in contained areas of the cities or elsewhere; it would be located on scattered sites throughout both cities and suburbs. Grants of Federal funds and power would be conditioned on action by states and localities to insure an adequate supply of housing at all income levels in all neighborhoods.

Federal support for schools, highways, hospitals, sewer lines, recreational facilities, and the war against poverty would be conditioned on programs to further rather than hinder "fair housing throughout the United States." The same would apply to selecting sites for military and other Government installations, and to the awarding of Government contracts.

Next, the law gives the Attorney General of the United States both the authority and the responsibility to investigate and take legal action to eliminate patterns and practices of discrimination in housing. This provision is one of the most significant contained in the statute and, if properly implemented by the Department of Justice and used by public and private agencies, has the potential for breaking down walls of exclusion in wide areas of the housing market.

And finally, there is specific authority for HUD to develop a cooperative relationship and to assist private as well as public agencies working to eliminate the ghetto system.

THE ROLE OF PRIVATE ORGANIZATIONS

The Secretary of HUD is directed to cooperate with state and local organizations toward advancing the national policy of open housing. This provision should enhance and undergird all public and private efforts to eradicate discrimination and segregation in housing and community life. A sound partnership between the Federal establishment and the private sector will strengthen existing fair housing programs and stimulate new ones among business, labor, religious, and civic institutions, as well as those carried on by metropolitan fair housing centers and other community groups which concentrate on opening the housing market in their areas.

As a clearinghouse and nationwide service agency in the housing/civil rights field, NCDH will expand its working relationship with HUD and other Federal departments and agencies whose programs affect racial patterns of residence and community life. NCDH will continue and expand its role as educator, innovative agent, watchdog, technical consultant, and clearinghouse for information and assistance. NCDH will:

- Provide assistance and guidance to individuals and organizations seeking to use the law and to further its effective implementation.

- Continuously study and evaluate the operation and impact of the new Federal statute.

- Cooperate with Federal agencies in developing and proposing more effective methods for implementation.

- Encourage and assist community groups and institutions in surveys of local housing practices and in the preparation of reports and recommendations for action at the Federal, state and local government levels.

- Stimulate and assist local efforts to secure coordination of programs affecting housing, schools, jobs, transportation, recreation, health, welfare, and other interrelated areas of concern.

- Stimulate and assist local efforts in suburban areas to break down customs and codes which prevent the provision of moderate-income housing spread over outlying sections where jobs increasing are locating.

- Work with business and industry in the development of policies and programs to insure that suburban communities revise restrictive zoning regulations and take such other action as is necessary for the provision of an adequate and dispersed supply of housing for workers reasonably near plants and other business establishments.

- Identify and present to the Department of Justice specific instances where patterns and practices of housing discrimination and segregation call for legal action by the Attorney General.

- Advise local groups and cooperate with national agencies affiliated with NCDH in the development of proper evidence needed for the establishment of fair practices in housing market areas, as well as in efforts to secure the right of individual homeseekers to be free from discrimination.

HOW TO FILE COMPLAINTS AND REPORTS ON DISCRIMINATORY PATTERNS

Individual complaints of discriminatory acts prohibited by the Federal fair housing law must be filed within 180 days after the alleged violation of the law with the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in Washington, or at one of HUD's regional offices. Addresses for these offices are given below.

Reports of "patterns or practices of resistance" to any of the rights guaranteed by the law, or instances where groups of persons have been denied such rights, should be filed with the Attorney General in Washington (address given below), or with the nearest U.S. Attorney. Every ongoing "practice or pattern" of discrimination anywhere in the nation is, of course, subject to legal action by the Attorney General.

Complaints must be in writing and must state the facts upon which the charges of housing discrimination are based.

Individuals and organizations, including homeseekers, fair housing and other community groups, who file complaints with HUD or reports with the Attorney General are urged to send copies to NCDH.

Persons who file complaints because they are unlawfully denied membership in real estate brokers' and other organizations related to the housing and home financing industries, or because they have been excluded from participation in any multiple listing service, also are requested to send copies to NCDH.

In addition, those who need advice or help in the preparation of complaints or reports of patterns of discrimination should make contact with NCDH or one of the agencies listed under "Resources for Assistance," page 18.

RESOURCES FOR ASSISTANCE

The following resources for information, counsel, and assistance are suggested for individuals and groups who wish to file complaints or to carry on activities aimed at advancing compliance with open housing laws — Federal, state and local. Most of these resources can by located by consulting your telephone directory.

NCDH

Get in touch with NCDH either for direct assistance or for suggested resources for help in or near your community. One of the NCDH member agencies (see list on back cover) may be operating a housing opportunities program in your city; one of the more than 1700 fair housing groups with which NCDH is in contact may be working in your area; or NCDH may be able to put you in touch with key professionals involved in housing and civil rights.

HUD Regional Equal Opportunity Officers

(For locations, see "Where to File Complaints," page 16.)

State and Local Human Relations Commissions

Almost every state and many cities, counties, and towns have official human relations or human rights commissions, often with professional staff assigned to housing and urban development.

Local Lawyers

Attorneys in your locality who are identified with civil rights and civil liberties programs.

STATES AND LOCALITIES WITH FAIR HOUSING LAWS

Twenty-three states, the District of Columbia, and 155 localities now have laws prohibiting discrimination in all or part of the general housing market. These jurisdictions are listed below.

Sixteen of the states, the District of Columbia, and many of the cities have laws which are broader in their coverage of housing than the new Federal legislation will be when it reaches its widest scope on January 1, 1970. All of the state and local laws apply to more housing than the Federal statute will reach through 1968.

Twenty-two of the states, the District of Columbia, and most of the cities and towns have official agencies to enforce their open housing laws. (Maine does not have an administrative agency to implement its law. Aggrieved persons in that state, or those who wish more information about the law, should make contact with the Attorney General, State Capitol, Augusta 04332.)

State agencies are usually located in the capital city; some have branch offices in the largest cities of the state. Enforcement agencies in smaller towns often are located in City Hall. Typical names are: Alaska Commission for Human Rights; Colorado Civil Rights Commission; Rhode Island Commission Against Discrimination; Pittsburgh Commission on Human Relations; Peoria Fair Housing Board. Locate the enforcement agency in your area by checking your telephone directory; calling city or state offices; asking any organization or individual identified with the civil rights movement; or by getting in touch with NCDH.

FAIR HOUSING 1968

An interpretation of Title VIII (Fair Housing) of the Civil Rights Act of 1968

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION
Washington, D.C. 20410

Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the Fair Housing title, declares a national policy to provide for fair housing throughout the United States. The housing units covered by Title VIII are called dwellings which include any structure intended as a residence or vacant land offered for residential construction or use.

Your Rights Under the Fair Housing Law

The law protects you from the following acts where they are based on discrimination on account of race, color, religion, or national origin:

- Refusal to deal. To refuse to sell or rent or to negotiate for the sale or rental of a dwelling (Section 804(a)).

- Discrimination in terms. To discriminate against any person in the terms or conditions of sale or rental of a dwelling (Section 804(b)).

- Discriminatory advertising. To make, publish, or print any statement with respect to the sale or rental of housing, indicating any racial or religious preference, or an intention to discriminate (Section 804(c)).

■ False representations. To represent falsely to any person that a dwelling is not available for sale or rental (Section 804(d)).

■ Blockbusting. For profit, to induce owners to sell or rent dwellings by representations regarding the entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of a particular race, color, religion or national origin (Section 804(e)).

■ Discrimination in financing. To deny a loan to any person or to discriminate in the fixing of the terms or conditions of a loan. This prohibition is applicable to banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, or any other business involved in the making of commercial real estate loans (Section 805).

■ Discrimination in real estate services. To deny access to or participation in any multiple-listing service, real estate brokers' organization or other service, organization or facility relating to the business of selling or renting dwellings (Section 806).

What Is Covered by the Law? When?

Discrimination in Financing, Real Estate Services and Advertising

The prohibitions against discrimination in financing and the prohibition against denying access to or participation in real estate services become effective after December 31, 1968 and apply to all dwellings. The prohibition of Section 804(c) against discriminatory advertising applies upon enactment to all dwellings which have received the kind of Federal assistance described in stage 1 below and applies to all other dwellings after December 31, 1968.

The Other Prohibitions—Three Stage Coverage

With respect to the other four categories of discrimination in the sale or rental of housing prohibited by Section 804—namely, Refusal to Deal, Discrimination in Terms, False Representations and Blockbusting—the prohibitions become applicable on a three-stage basis.

STAGE 1—Upon enactment, the kinds of housing listed below are covered by the prohibitions if they are federally owned or operated or if they have received (under agreements or contracts entered into after Nov. 20, 1962, and still outstanding at the time of passage of the Fair Housing Title) certain types of Federal assistance; such as, public housing loans or grants, FHA mortgage insurance, construction or rehabilitation loans or grants, and urban renewal or slum clearance program assistance:

- Multi-family dwellings of five or more units.
- Multi-family dwellings containing four or fewer units, if the owner does not reside in one of the units.
- Single-family houses not owned by private individuals.
- Single-family houses owned by a private individual who owns more than three such houses or who, in any two-year period, sells more than one in which he was not the most recent resident.

STAGE 2—After December 31, 1968, the prohibitions apply to any of the four kinds of dwellings described immediately above, regardless of whether they are federally assisted.

STAGE 3—After December 31, 1969, single-family houses owned by private individuals become covered if they are sold or rented through a broker or other person in the business of selling or renting dwellings, or if a discriminatory written notice or advertisement is used in offering to sell or rent.

What Are The Means Of Enforcing The Law?

Title VIII provides three methods of obtaining compliance: a complaint to the Secretary of HUD, private civil action, and suits by the Attorney General.

Three Stage Coverage of Dwellings Under Section 804

April 11, 1968	January 1, 1969	January 1, 1970
Covered if federally assisted under agreements made after Nov. 20, 1962 and outstanding on April 11, 1968	Covered regardless of whether or not federally assisted	All dwellings covered under Stage 1 and 2 plus any 1. Single-family houses sold or rented through a broker or other person in the business of selling or renting dwellings. 2. Single-family houses offered for rent or sale through a discriminatory written notice or advertisement.
1. Multi-family dwellings of five or more units; 2. Multi-family dwellings containing four or fewer units, if the owner does not reside in one of the units; 3. Single-family houses not owned by a private individual; 4. Single-family houses owned by a private individual who owns more than three such houses or who, in any two year period sells more than one such house in which he was not the most recent resident.

The Prohibitions Do Not Apply To:

1. Single-family houses owned by a private individual owner of three or less, where a) a broker is not used to sell or rent; b) discriminatory advertising is not used; c) no more than one house in which the owner was not the most recent resident is sold during any two-year period.
2. Rentals of rooms or units in owner-occupied multi-unit dwellings for two to four families.
3. Religious organizations in giving preference to their members in the sale, rental or occupancy or dwellings which they operate for other than a commercial purpose, and private clubs in giving preference to members in the rental or occupancy of "lodging" which they operate for other than a commercial purpose and as an incident to their primary purpose.

Private individuals can seek enforcement of the Fair Housing Title by making a complaint to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development or by bringing a civil action in court. Where the act complained of is also a violation of a State or local fair housing law, the private individual may choose to pursue his rights under such law rather than under the Federal Fair Housing Title.

The Attorney General may seek enforcement of the Title, through court action, in cases where there is a pattern or practice of resistance to the law or where the denial or rights to a group of persons raises an issue of general public importance.

Additionally, the Supreme Court ruled in the case of Jones v. Mayer (June, 1968) that Federal law provides that an individual may go to Federal court to seek relief against racial discrimination which interferes with his right to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, or convey real or personal property (42 U.S.C. 1982). This right is available regardless of whether the housing in question is covered or exempt under Title VIII.

How Does the Complaint and Conciliation Procedure Work?

Filing a Complaint. Any person who claims that, as of the effective date of the Title he has been discriminated against in housing may file a complaint by writing to "Fair Housing," % Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. 20410. The complaint should state all the facts upon which the charge of discrimination is based, and should be notarized. All HUD Regional Offices, including FHA field offices, will be available to assist in filing of complaints and filling out complaint forms.

Processing a Complaint. Upon receipt of a complaint, the Secretary will furnish a copy to the person charged with the discriminatory practice. The person charged may file an answer in writing, which should be notarized.

Referral to a State or Local Agency. In those cases where State or local law applies to the complaint and provides rights and remedies "substantially equivalent" to those under the Fair Housing Title, the complaint will be referred to a State or local agency. If the State or local agency does not commence proceedings within 30 days and carry them forward with reasonable promptness, the Secretary may require that the case be returned to him.

Investigation by the Secretary. The Secretary will investigate and notify the complainant (within 30 days of receipt of the complaint or within 30 days of the return of a case from a State or local agency) of his intent to resolve it.

Conciliation. If the Secretary decides to resolve a complaint, HUD will engage in informal and confidential conciliation to obtain resolution. If conciliation fails or if the Secretary decides not to resolve a complaint or otherwise does not act, the complaining party may, within the next 30 days, file a suit under section 810 of the Title.

How Can a Private Individual Bring Court Action?

After failure of conciliation, a party who has complained to the Secretary may bring civil suit under section 810 in the appropriate United States District Court. In states with equivalent judicial rights and remedies, such a suit would have to be brought in State court.

Or;

At any time within 180 days after the alleged discriminatory practice, suit may be brought under section 812 in either United States district court or State or local court. In appropriate cases, an attorney may be appointed for the plaintiff and the payment of fees, costs, or security can be waived. The court can grant permanent or temporary injunctions, temporary restraining orders, or other appropriate relief as well as award actual damages and not more than $1,000 in punitive damages. The courts are also directed to expedite cases under section 812 and assign them for hearing at the earliest practicable date.

Interference, Coercion or Intimidation

Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 protects persons from willful interference or injury because of race, color, religion, or national origin, and because they were seeking (a) to sell or acquire housing, (b) to finance or occupy a dwelling, or (c) to exercise other rights connected with housing. The law also prohibits willful interference with those who would aid or encourage others who would exercise these rights. Criminal penalities are provided. Civil action may also be brought under section 817 against interference with rights under Title VIII.

FAIR HOUSING: What It Means To You

A guide for owners, buyers and renters

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT
Washington, D.C. 20410

The purpose of the Fair Housing Law is to provide every person in the United States, an equal opportunity to choose housing suited to his needs and financial ability, wherever he would like to live.

To this end, the Fair Housing Law (Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968) bans discrimination based on race, religion, color, or national origin in the sale or rental of housing covered by the law.

Housing Covered by the Law

When the Fair Housing Law went into effect April 11, 1968, it immediately covered the following kinds of housing only if federally assisted:

- Housing for five or more families.

- Multi-unit housing for four or fewer families if the owner does not live in one of the units.

- Single-family houses not owned by a private individual—for example, tract housing developments.

- Single-family houses owned by a private individual who owns more than three houses or who sells more than one house, within any two years, in which he was not the most recent occupant.

(Federally assisted means, in general, housing with mortgages insured by FHA or VA after Nov. 20, 1962, and outstanding as of April 11, 1968; public housing; housing in urban renewal areas; and housing owned by the Federal Government.)

After Dec. 31, 1968, the housing in the above categories will be covered by the law even if not federally assisted. (This means, for example, that all housing sold by tract developers will be covered.)

There can be no discrimination in the advertising of housing for sale or rent. For example, housing can not be advertised as unavailable to members of minority groups. This applies now to all federally assisted housing and to all other housing after Dec. 31, 1968.

After Dec. 31, 1969, the law will also cover all other housing except where a private individual owner sells or rents a single-family house without using a real estate broker.

The law will not apply to the rental of apartments in buildings for up to four families if the owner occupies one.

Religious organizations or private clubs may give certain preferences to their members for housing or lodgings operated for other than a commercial purpose.

Your Rights Under the Fair Housing Law

The law protects you from the following acts where they are based on discrimination on account of race, color, religion, or national origin:

Now

- Refusal to sell, rent, or deal with any person.

- Making different terms and conditions for buying or renting housing.

- Advertising that housing is available only to certain persons.

- Denying housing is available for inspection, sale, or rental when it really is.

- "Blockbusting"—persuading someone to sell housing by telling him minority groups are moving into the area.

Additional Acts Covered After December 31, 1968

- Denying or making different terms for home loans, by commercial lenders such as banks, and savings and loan associations.

- Denying to anyone the use of real estate services, such as a broker or multiple listing service.

Enforcement

Any person who believes he has been discriminated against by an act covered by the Fair Housing Law should:

A. Write to the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

- Complaints must be made within 180 days of the alleged discrimination.

- HUD will investigate, and if it finds that the complaint is covered by the law and is justified, it will try, by informal methods, to end the discrimination.

- In those cases where State or local law gives at least the same protection as Federal law, HUD will first ask the State or local agency to try to resolve the problem.

- If HUD's efforts or the State or local efforts do not resolve the complaint, the individual may take the matter to court.

B. Or take the complaint directly to court (within 180 days of the alleged discrimination) whether or not a complaint was filed with HUD.

Information about possible discrimination in housing may also be given to the Attorney General of the United States. If his investigation indicates that a pattern or practice of discrimination exists, he may bring a court action to stop it.

In addition to the new fair housing title, Federal law also prohibits any racial discrimination which interferes with the right to sell, rent, lease, buy, inherit or convey any kind of housing, regardless of whether that housing is covered or exempt under Title VIII. This right was made clear in the Supreme Court decision of Jones v. Mayer (June 1968) and is enforceable by private action in court.

Interference with an individual's rights under this law is illegal. This means that no one may threaten or prevent another person from buying, renting, or selling housing or from making a complaint of discrimination. If violence is threatened or used, criminal prosecution may result.

All HUD Offices (including FHA field offices) will be available to assist in the filing of complaints. For further information or to find the HUD office nearest you, write to:

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND URBAN PLANNING

Address by A. Y. Brown
Public Administration Planner of the ARMPC

Before the Georgia Tech Summer Course on Urban Planning

Tuesday, July 12, 1966
Atlanta, Georgia

It is entirely appropriate to turn our attention to the activities and policies of the Federal government as we analyze the business of urban planning, for Uncle Sam has become a major partner in urban development. By the end of 1965, the Federal government was administering more than 70 separate programs of financial aids for urban development, and more than three-quarters of these were authorized after January, 1950. Administration of these 70 programs was distributed among many bureaus of seven different departments and eight independent agencies within the Executive Branch.

The expanded Federal role is evidenced by the increased reliance of state and local governments on intergovernmental grants as a source of revenue. It is estimated that in ten years from 1957 to 1967 the amount of Federal aid to state and local governments will have more than tripled, rising from $4 billion to $14 billion annually. These figures serve only to illustrate what is clear to all of you here. Without arguing the merits or demerits of the case, the fact is that the Federal government, through an extension array of grant-in-aid programs, has come to be a major force in urban development. Our purpose here is to take a brief look at the Federal posture vis-a-vis planning.

The first observation that must be clearly recognized is that the Federal government has no unified policy in regard to the planning requirements associated with its various grant programs. Indeed there is no agreed upon definition of what planning is among Federal bureaus, agencies, departments, etc. Think for a moment of what confusion and bewilderment a mayor must feel when he makes what has come to be called a "fishing trip" in the Peachtree-Seventh Building. Should he be interested in a public housing project for his community, he is told that his town must have a Workable Program for Community Improvement. In that office he hears about comprehensive community planning to be carried out by a city planning commission. If he then visits another office to inquire about a grant to build water or sewer facilities, he learns that there must be a comprehensive planning program for the entire urban area in which his community is located. If his town is in a Metropolitan Area, the urban area will be considered at least an entire county and maybe as many as 3, 4, or 5 counties.

Now suppose he visits our friends in the Economic Development Administration. Here again, there will be talk of planning, but now the arena may well have been expanded to an Economic Development District which may be 12 to 15 counties.

Since he is a hardy soul, he decides to make one more stop before returning home. He has been talking with a friend who serves as a county commissioner and the two have become interested in buying some land adjacent to a lake in the county and developing a park and recreation area. Therefore, he stops by the office of the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation.

By this time he is not surprised that the conversation turns quickly to the matter of planning. But here again the rules are different, for the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation people are talking about a state-wide plan for outdoor recreation.

Thus we see that all in a day's time, he has talked with four different representatives of the Federal establishment; each talked about planning; but each agency had different planning requirements and the chances are that if he had asked each the basic question, "What do you mean by planning?" he would have received four quite divergent answers.

The problem that is illustrated by this hypothetical mayor's tour was studied in some depth by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in 1964. This research showed that not only are there differences between Federal planning requirements in regard to area-jurisdiction; there is also a fundamental difference between those programs that require comprehensive planning and those that require functional planning. Their survey identified seven programs that positively encourage comprehensive planning for urban development. The short-hand definition used for "comprehensive planning" was "planning for the coordinated physical development of all urban facilities." The classic example of the positive encouragement referred to is the general planning requirement associated with the urban renewal program. Prior to receiving a Federal commitment to assist with the execution of an urban renewal project, a community must have completed preparation of a comprehensive community plan and, in addition, show that the urban renewal project plan is consistent with the comprehensive city plan.

Another group of grant programs are related to comprehensive planning but not so affirmatively. The Advisory Commission found that policies governing ten programs require that an assisted project be "not inconsistent" with comprehensive plans if any exist.

In addition to its review of Federal requirements for coordinating the physical development of all urban facilities, the survey examined requirements for special purpose planning associated with specific functions. These facts emerged: 15 Federal aid programs require conformance with official plans for the function being assisted; four require review only, not necessarily conformance; and 11 stipulate that aid projects be "not inconsistent" with whatever functional plans already exist.

I have dwelled long enough on the inconsistencies of Federal planning requirements and policies as they have emerged in recent years. Let us now turn our attention to new trends that seem to be developing and try to envision what can be expected in the future. The first observation I would make is that the Federal government is definitely committed to planning. As a good friend of mine who has long worked in local government recently commented, "Boys, the Federal government has married planning." The marriage did not occur at one specific time in a hallowed ceremony, but like all national policies, has been formulated over a period of time. The President's 1965 Message to Congress on "Problems of the Central City and its Suburbs", proclaimed as national policy what is already taking place, agency by agency, on an ad hoc basis. The Message proposed new programs which would:

> ". . .require sound, long-range development programs as a condition of Federal assistance. Whenever it can be done without leaving vital needs unmet, existing programs will also be keyed to planning requirements."

We saw this policy enacted into the laws authorizing several new grant programs during the 89th Congress. Examples of new programs that require conformance with comprehensive planning include: basic water and sewer facilities, neighborhood facilities, urban beautification, FHA mortgage insurance for land development, grants for advance acquisition of land, advances for public works planning, and amendments to the open-space land program which tie it even more closely to comprehensive planning. There seems to be every reason to expect Congress to impose a comprehensive planning requirement on other new programs in the future and add such a requirement to existing programs as they are amended from time to time.

Two specific pieces of pending Federal legislation deserve mention. One is the Intergovernmental Cooperation Act of 1966. This Bill would require review by a metropolitan planning agency of all applications for Federal loans or grants to assist local governments in a variety of fields. The programs covered are urban renewal, open-space, construction of hospitals, airports, water supply and distribution facilities, sewerage facilities and waste treatment works, highways, transportation facilities, water resources development and land conservation. Before submitting an application to the appropriate Federal agency for assistance under one of these programs, the applicant would have to first submit it to a metropolitan planning agency for review and comment. The comments would have to include information concerning the extent to which the proposed urban development project or program is consistent with comprehensive planning developed or in the process of development for the metropolitan area and the extent to which such project or program would contribute to the fulfillment of the area-wide planning.

This type of review function is already required by several Federal aid programs. The significance of the pending legislation is the extent to which this planning agency review function would be broadened to cover other grant-in-aid programs. Another benefit would be the element of consistency that should follow from such blanket legislation that would apply to programs administered by several different departments. The Intergovernmental Cooperation Act has already passed the Senate and is under consideration in the House. Even if it is not enacted into law during this session of Congress, it should serve to alert all of us who are involved with planning to an evolving trend in Federal policy.

The other piece of pending Federal legislation I would mention is the Urban Development Act. This legislation was introduced in the Congress for the first time this year and has already been favorably reported out of committee in the Senate. One title of this bill would authorize what might be called "bonus grants" for a number of Federally assisted urban development projects or programs. Bonus grants of up to an additional 20 percent could be made for the following projects: open-space, urban beautification, basic water and sewer facilities, sewerage treatment facilities, airports, mass transportation, land and water conservation fund projects, and projects authorized by the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965. The basis for receiving a bonus grant would be a finding by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development that adequate metropolitan-wide comprehensive planning and programming is underway; that adequate institutional arrangements exist for coordinating public policies and activities in accordance with this planning and programming; and finally that public facility projects which have a major impact on the development of the area are, in fact, being carried out in accord with metropolitan planning and programming.

The passage of this bill could be a tremendous stimulous to metropolitan planning. Local governments in an area that became qualified under the terms of the act would find the door open to much larger Federal grants than they have previously been eligible to receive.

The next basic trend that I see in Federal planning policy is a serious effort to link planning with policy making. There are many people saying that the most cogent observation that can be made about planning of the past is that it has had precious little influence on urban growth patterns. Planning has all too often been carried on in splendid isolation from the actual decision-making processes of government. In an attempt to remedy this deficiency and bridge the gap between planning and decision-making, I see two emerging aspects of Federal policy. One is an emphasis on short-range programming. If the planner paints a picture of what could or should be in the distant future and does not follow this up with a specific, practical course of action that elected officials can follow to attain the desired objectives, he has failed in a basic way. His long-range plans must be translated into tangible programs that can guide those who are responsible for the day-to-day decisions of government.

By way of example, the planning requirements of the basic water and sewer facilities program envision three major phases of the total planning process. First, there must be basic comprehensive planning which covers land use, transportation, water and sewers, open-space and recreation, housing, health and education facilities, community development and renewal, and other aspects of physical, economic and social development of significance to the particular urban area. Second, there must be, as part of or closely coordinated with comprehensive planning, adequate long-range water and sewer planning for the urban area. Here, we see that comprehensive planning and functional planning must be closely integrated, for comprehensive planning establishes the basis for determining future levels and patterns of demand for water and sewer facilities and services. This basis is provided primarily through the land use element, including the distribution of population and economic and other urban activities.

The third major phase of the process is systems programming and coordination. Here, the planner is called on to prepare a water or sewer system improvement program for the urban area covering a 5-10 year development period. The improvement program should: indicate the needed improvements in the system for a 5-10 year development period; include a schedule of priorities general estimates of costs and recommended or anticipated means of financing; and describe the allocation of responsibilities for carrying out the program. These are the practical down-to-earth issues that mayors, city councils, county commissions, and utility boards must deal with on a regular basis and the planner is being called on to furnish professional guidance.

The second emphasis in Federal policy that is designed to make planning more influential in the halls of government is to encourage greater involvement of elected officials in the planning process. The participation of elected officials in the planning process is especially important in areawide planning since the metropolitan or regional planning agency has no single political jurisdictional counterpart. Therefore, it is a must to involve those who do have executive powers. New Jersey's Department of Conservation and Economic Development has argued for this principle quite persuasively. The following paragraph is taken from its publication, The Setting for Regional Planning in New Jersey:

> "To create regional planning boards based solely upon the theory of impartial-distinterested citizen participation and to assign them the job of coping with areawide long-range issues is to invite an unnecessary excursion beyond reality. What regional planning needs is the participation of decision-makers. While this may or may not include participants other than elected officials, it must include the executive officials of those governments taking part in specific regional planning operations."

The main organizational vehicle being used to bring about the involvement of decision-makers is the voluntary association of elected officials, often called a Council of Governments. Such organizations received tremendous impetus in 1965 by amendment of the Urban Planning Assistance Program to make them eligible recipients of 701 grants.

Considerable interest is developing in this type of organization as an institution for areawide planning and policy formation, and I predict that we will see a number of councils established in the future. They are especially adaptable to metropolitan areas and urban regions that involve parts of more than one state.

In conclusion, let me turn more specifically to the relationship between Federal policy and land use planning. Here again there is no simple statement as to Federal policy. I can speak from direct experience as to the policies of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and know from that experience that the Department has not made an effort to specifically favor any particular land use patterns. The philosophy that has in the past permeated HUD's policies is that sound planning is basic to reasonable and orderly land use, and land use, in turn, is a basic contributor to the urban pattern. Though many might argue the point, I firmly believe that Federal policy is grounded in the conviction that land use decisions, as well as other public policy decisions affecting urban growth, are appropriately made in city hall rather than in Washington. The intent behind planning requirements is to encourage local governments to thoroughly analyze alternative causes of action and inject some degree of rationality into the decision-making process.

I hasten to say that I recognize full well the significance of certain federal policies as influencers of urban growth patterns in the past. Two examples come to mind readily: one has been the traditional favored treatment given to single-family home ownership by national tax policy and the insurance programs of the Federal Housing Administration; the other has been the affect on Urban Transportation systems that has resulted from the strong "roads and rubber" preferance over public mass transportation in federal assistance for developing urban transportation systems. Both of these influences have been major contributors to the urban sprawl pattern of land use that has characterized so much urban growth. Even in the face of these examples, I feel it would be difficult to find a spokesman for the Federal establishment who would admit to a conscious Federal policy that is designed to support particular land use patterns and policies in favor of others.

The final observation I would make about federal policies and land use planning is that Federal policy is coming to recognize that land use planning must be undertaken for entire urban areas, regardless of how many political jurisdictions might be involved. One of the weaknesses of city planning in the past has been too often that it is just that--city planning--planning for one political unit. Planners recognize, and Federal policy is coming to take cognizance of the fact, that in our large urban complexes and metropolitan areas a single city is only a piece of the pie. The structure of local government in these areas has caused some to refer to the typical metropolitan area as a crazy-quilt patchwork. It is impossible to prepare a reasonable land-use plan for East Point without viewing it as a part of the Atlanta area urban configuration.

The result of this recognition of the social and economic unity of urban areas, (even though local government serving these areas is fragmented) is a trend in Federal planning policy to require planning for entire urban areas. This forces representatives of local governments to join together in preparing commonly agreed upon plans for the entire urban complex. Hopefully once such plans are prepared, they will serve as a guide to the individual governments which have the legal authority to implement the plans. This is the theory of what might happen even though many are discouraged with the results of past efforts in multi-jurisdictional planning. The failures of the past should not discourage us from trying even harder in the future and searching out new approaches and techniques.

FHA-ACQUIRED PROPERTIES AVAILABLE FOR SALE OR RENT

Notice to Interested Parties. The attached list of FHA acquired properties is published and made available solely for public information. The listed properties are under the jurisdiction of the local FHA Insuring Office identified on Page 1 and are available for purchase subject to prior sale, rental, change in price, or removal from availability for some other reason. This is not a binding offer to sell or rent, nor is it to be construed as any type of agreement. This list will be revised from time to time to add newly acquired properties or to delete properties sold or rented.

Who May Purchase or Rent an FHA-Acquired Property. Any individual or any company or corporation, regardless of race, creed or color, meeting the downpayment, credit, and other requirements of the FHA may offer to buy or rent an FHA-acquired property. However, only those properties so indicated on the attached are available for rent.

Physical Condition of Properties. The general policy of the FHA is to sell properties in a livable condition. The purchaser of an FHA-acquired property can expect to occupy the property without the need to make extensive repairs.

Sales Procedure. FHA policy is to market all acquired properties on an "Open" basis with offers to purchase being submitted through qualified or licensed local real estate brokers. Offers to purchase may be submitted direct to FHA only when the purchaser cannot secure the services of a qualified broker. The sales price and terms will be the same in either instance. Information about any of the properties listed may be obtained from the FHA Insuring Office identified on the attached Page 1. When making inquiry to the FHA office, the specific property should be identified by giving the FHA case number and the property address. Local brokers will probably have information which the FHA office may not have and which will be of interest, such as type of neighborhood, schools, churches, transportation and shopping.

Financing the Purchase. There are three methods under which FHA-acquired properties may be purchased:

(1) The purchaser pays all cash; or

(2) The purchaser obtains a mortgage loan from a private lender and uses the mortgage proceeds to buy the home from FHA; or

(3) If private financing under 2 above cannot be obtained within thirty days after acceptance by FHA of an offer to purchase, the FHA may accept a mortgage given by the purchaser.

Offerings are subject to prior sale, withdrawal or change without notice. Financing of the mortgage is to be obtained by the selling broker through an approved mortgagee. (See listing of participating mortgagees attached.) All offers must be submitted on FHA Standard Retail Sales Contract (Form 2384) and are subject to the terms and conditions thereof. Purchasers must be acceptable to the Commissioner; and to obtain maximum mortgage and minimum down payment as listed, the purchaser must be an owner-occupant.

Submit all contract packages and direct further inquiries to the Management Broker indicated. Brokers in areas not under the jurisdiction of an Area Management Broker will forward all documents direct to FHA.

The showing of FHA acquired properties prior to their being made available for sale by inclusion in this listing or the newspaper supplement to this listing is prohibited.

When pre-showing is brought to our attention, we have been authorized to refuse the acceptance of purchase offers from the broker involved for a period of up to 90 days. This prohibition against pre-showing should be called to the attention of all salesmen immediately, as any suspension will apply to an entire broker organization and not only to the individual salesman operating within the organization.

An offer received prior to the property being released in our Public Information List or newspaper supplement shall be returned. The first offer, meeting published requirements, received by the area broker or if no area broker by this office shall establish priority provided such offer is accompanied by appropriate earnest money deposit in the form of a certified or cashier's check drawn in the purchaser's name and payable to the Federal Housing Administration. This precedence shall be maintained until and unless the offer is rejected on the basis of credit or withdrawn by the prospective purchaser.

If the order of precedence is not determinable because of simultaneous offers, that is two or more offers on the same property received at the opening of business on the day that the price of the property first becomes effective or two or more offers on the same property received simultaneously at any time thereafter, the decision as to precedence will be decided by lot.

No priority may be established prior to the opening of business on the day a price becomes effective for a property.

Contract submission should consist of: Sales Contract (2384) signed copies as provided; Brokers Tender (2385) original and 2 copies; 2900 copies as provided; 2 copies of Credit Report; 2004-F (original and 1 copy); 2004-G (original and 1 copy): Check payable to Federal Housing Administration. All earnest money is to be purchaser's certified check, post office or bank money order, cashier's or other banker's check made payable to FHA and showing purchaser's name or remitter. Checks representing earnest money refunds will be returned direct to purchaser. Show FHA Case Number on the face of the remittance.

Lockbox keys may be obtained from the Management Broker. Under no circumstances must a lockbox key be given to a prospective purchaser.

The sales contract and credit package will be delivered to FHA by the Management Broker. Preliminary review and credit analysis will be conducted simultaneously, and if the sales contract is acceptable as to the price and terms and the purchaser is deemed acceptable for mortgage insurance, a letter of approval will be issued to the selling broker, along with a copy of the approved sales contract for delivery to the purchaser. Upon receipt of the approval letter, the selling broker is responsible for assisting the approved purchaser in arranging financing with the mortgagee of his choice. It is the selling brokers responsibility to follow-up approved cases with the mortgagee to assure prompt closing. An approved purchaser may rent the property at this stage by contacting the Management Broker. Occupancy can be authorized only by the Management Broker or FHA.

PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON URBAN HOUSING

IV. PUBLIC HOUSING

NAME (1)	SUMMARY OF PROGRAM (2)	ELIGIBILITY (3)	FINANCING (4)	INCOME LEVEL REACHED (5)
Conventional Program	Construction of housing for low income families who cannot afford privately produced standard housing.	Housing authority must be created by local governing body pursuant to state enabling legislation if it wishes to receive benefits of public housing programs.	Bond is classified as a municipal bond backed by Federal contract to make annual contribution equal to amount of principal and interest due each year. Rentals must cover all other expenses including a payment in lieu of taxes.	Low
Leasing Program	Based upon the utilization of existing private housing supply. Permits the Local Housing Authority to lease existing dwellings from private landlords for a period of at least 1, but not more than 5 years. Lease may be renewed.	At the local level there must be a local housing authority and a resolution by the local governing body authorizing participation. HUD requires a vacancy rate of 3% for given size unit or standard vacants of given size cannot be leased.	Annual contribution of Federal government equals difference between market rental and ability of tenant to pay. Amount of annual contribution subsidy paid for a family under leasing program cannot be greater than amount that would be paid for newly constructed units of similar size and type.	Low
Turnkey Method	A new process for providing housing (new construction or rehabilitation) within the framework of public housing programs. Cost limits same as for conventional program.	Private developer: All costs, from preparation of proposal until development is completed and turned over to the LHA, must be financed by the developer.	Purchase of completed project financed as in conventional program. No cost certification required of developer.	Low
Indian Housing Program: Mutual Help—"Sweat" Equity	Local housing authority established by Indian tribe contracts with HUD have houses built by tribal members for their own occupancy.	Tribe must create a local housing authority. Minimum units in a development is usually 10. Therefore, there must be sufficient number of families to cover 10 completed units.	Local housing authority issues short term notes which are refinanced repeatedly, backed by maximum annual contribution from HUD. Occupants contribute 20% of equity through their labor and pay all operating and maintenance costs.	Low
Acquisition and Rehabilitation Program	Acquisition of existing property and rehabilitation as necessary. The H.A. of 1965 set a goal of acquisition and rehabilitation of 15,000 dwellings a year for period 1965-69.	Same as conventional public housing program.	Same as conventional program.	Low

Site Selection for Moderate-Income Housing Communities to be Financed with FHA Mortgage Insurance

1. Introduction: Proper site selection involves political, economic, social, legal and several other kinds of considerations. Some of the more important matters to consider are mentioned below.

2. Options: Perhaps the most important thing to remember is that no land should ever be purchased until it has been approved and a fair market price for it established by the Federal Housing Administration. Commercial builders usually keep their proposed building sites on options until they are ready to start construction. Nonprofit agencies should not take chances that builders avoid!

Proper options should provide that only a nominal payment is made until the site has been approved by the FHA, and even then only a small payment should be made prior to the start of construction. The option should allow for approximately one year from date of execution to start of construction, and there should be provision for extensions of time.

3. Size and character of project: An economic project under FHA insurance should contain not less than 100 dwelling units. The size of a tract of land needed for 100 units depends on the zoning and building regulations applicable to the property and the type of dwelling units desired. No more than four detached houses should be built on an acre of land. From eight to twelve attached houses may be built on an acre of land. In central city areas where apartments are acceptable, it is possible to provide decent living conditions with as many as twenty-five or thirty units per acre.. Elevator apartment buildings are usually too costly for moderate income families and sites for them are not considered in this memorandum.

4. Cost of land per unit: The permissible cost of unimproved land per dwelling unit varies from one state to the next and from one kind of a site to another. As a rule of thumb, the raw land for any housing development to provide homes for moderate income families should never exceed $800 per unit for even the choicest project in a central city location. Good land on the outskirts of most urban areas should be available for perhaps $300 per dwelling unit, based on the densities mentioned in paragraph 3 above. But these rules of thumb do not necessarily apply in any given situation, Some projects for moderate income families have been built on land costing substantially more than $1,000 per dwelling unit and others have been built on land costing less than $100 per dwelling unit. What price is acceptable depends on the availability of utilities and consequent costs of developing the property and the costs of purchasing comparable properties in the immediate market area.

5. Physical characteristics of a good site:

The land should be served by public roads, public water and sewer.

The land must be "buildable" -- that is, it must not require too much fill, blasting of rock or present difficult foundation conditions due to swamps, etc.

Not too much of the site should have slopes over 15%. Steep portions of the site, if any, cannot support very many dwelling units without excessive construction costs.

The site should be convenient to schools, public transportation, centers of employment, shopping centers, community facilities, recreation facilities, etc.

The site must not be subject to flooding and should not be affected by objectionable smells, odors, bright lights or vibration from nearby heavy traffic arteries or industrial or commercial establishments.

6. Policital acceptance of site: Good land which generally meets the above criteria is hard to find in most communities. Compromises have to be made with what is really desirable. But a practical "site" must be one on which buildings of the proposed type can be erected in the foreseeable future. If there is a zoning ordinance, the property must either be properly zoned or optioned subject to the securing of suitable zoning. Existing Building codes, planning and sub-division regulations, and other municipal regulations applicable to the site must also be taken into consideration.

7. Site inspection and approval: FCH Company and the Federal Housing Administration both provide free site inspection and technical consultation under certain conditions and with certain limitations. Some of these conditions and limitations are as follows:

(a) Sites submitted for consideration should never be obviously impractical! No technical or agency will continue to give service to anyone who abuses their confidence. Sites which are definitely not practical for one or more reasons should never be submitted for consideration.

(b) This means that the parties looking for sites must undertake a systematic investigation of the items mentioned above and must have answers to virtually all questions before a site is submitted for approval.

(c) It is usual practice to attempt to find several possibilities in a given area before a physical inspection is requested, either by FCH Company representatives or the FHA office having jurisdiction. Then the technicians can compare the sites found and suggest which is best. At the time of an inspection, available information on all subjects outlines above should be on hand to aid in an intelligent appraisal of the situation.

8. Use of brokers: As will be seen from the above, in many instances it will be necessary to secure the services of a reputable real estate broker in attempting to find suitable sites. The broker should be able to provide most of the information mentioned above. However, there should be a clear understanding of the fees to be paid the broker. Furthermore, certain sites owned by public and nonprofit agencies and certain private individuals may best be obtained without the services of a broker. Good judgment needs to be used to avoid eventual payment of unnecessary or excessive commissions.

9. Payments for land: Before a real search for land can be conducted, the method by which the land will eventually be paid for must be clearly known.

In cases involving FHA insured mortgages, it is possible to option land for comparatively nominal funds if the owner of the land has confidence in the ability of the prospective purchaser to complete his deal, get his financing and purchase the land with funds released from mortgage proceeds. The option must be subject to the necessary approvals of the FHA, any required rezoning, extension of existing utilities, etc., as spelled out in the terms of the option agreement.

If the prospective purchaser does not have a clear idea of the program which will use the land, the sellers will either require a case transaction or will raise the price or the cost of the option to unreasonable levels.

STUDY OF COMMUNITY SERVICES IN PERU MADE BY TWO STAFF MEMBERS FOR GUARANTY PROGRAM

Two FCH staff members -- Jack Edmondson and Mario Pita -- have returned from a 3-week evaluation of community organization in 3 large housing projects in Peru. The study was made for the Agency for International Development. The team is now preparing its recommendations to AID relating to community facilities and to management and maintenance services. These recommendations will be used as guidelines for the new AID Investment Guaranty program.

During the study, Edmondson and Pita met with major city and housing officials and conducted extensive interviews with project residents. They surveyed voluntary homes associations of residents and the affect of these associations both on the solution of community problems and on the provision of all types of adequate community services.

Edmondson is Director of the FCH Investment Guaranty work for AID. Pita is his assistant.

FCH OFFICIAL IS MEMBER OF UNITED NATIONS WORKING PARTY ON SQUATTER AREA IMPROVEMENT

The United Nations Centre for Housing, Building and Planning organized a one-day working party early in December on the improvement of marginal - or squatter - areas. J. David McVoy, FCH Director of International Programs, was one of the group of internationally recognized specialists in squatter problems invited to participate.

The working party advised the Centre in preparation for a regional seminar on the improvement of marginal areas which will be held in 1969 in Santiago, Chile, in cooperation with the Chilean government. The objective of the seminar is to promote action on the squatter problems through use of governments' and peoples' own capacities for investment and work and through use of adequate administrative and technical machinery. In lectures and discussions, it will bring together experts in the different fields concerned with some aspect of the problem, and will enable them to compare, analyze and evaluate the experiences and the financial and human resources available in individual countries.

The UN Economic and Social Council has expressed its concern about the squatter settlement problem in Resolution 1168 (XLI) on Social Aspects of Housing and Urban Development, and in Resolution 1224 (XLII), which urges member states to undertake practical pilot programs directed at the improvement of living conditions in squatter settlements or slums through a simultaneous attack on the social, economic and physical conditions, by gaining the participation of the citizens concerned, and when feasi-

3RD INTER-AMERICAN CO-OP HOUSING SEMINAR ATTRACTS 176 PARTICIPANTS FROM 12 COUNTRIES

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil - Interest is growing in cooperative housing as a prime factor in economic development. This was evident as 176 participants from 12 countries and 8 international agencies took part in sessions of the Third Inter-American Seminar on Cooperative Housing, held in Rio de Janeiro on March 11-14.

The seminar was jointly sponsored by its host, the Banco Nacional da Habitação - the National Housing Bank of Brazil, by the Instituto de Viviendas Populares - the Institute of Peoples' Housing of Chile, and by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing of the United States. The meetings were focused on U.S. methods of organizing housing co-ops, on the cooperative as an efficient instrument to reach low-income families, on the management of housing co-ops, on varied forms of mutual ownership of housing and on the mobilization of low-income families' savings through savings and loan associations and credit unions.

The 4-day seminar was followed by a delegates' visit to cooperative housing projects in Guanabara State. Hosts for this trip were COOPHAB, a technical service organization for development of cooperative housing in Guanabara, and the National Housing Bank of Brazil. Delegates were told that there are 162 cooperative housing associations in Brazil with projects completed, under construction, or with land. They serve 71,000 members who have saved $23 million in cooperative savings associations for investment in homes.

National Housing Bank officials estimated that more than $300 million will be available for development of cooperative housing in Brazil in the next 3 years. The funds come from a payroll tax of 8% which is turned over to the Bank for the development of housing programs which include cooperatives.

Opening session speakers at the seminar included the Brazilian Minister of Interi-

FCH AWARDED FORD FOUNDATION GRANTS

FOUNDATION RECEIVES TAX-EXEMPT STATUS FROM TREASURY DEPARTMENT; OPENS WAY FOR NEW FUNDS

The Foundation for Cooperative Housing has been granted tax-exempt status by the United States Treasury Department, based on a determination that the Foundation is a charitable and educational organization.

Now that FCH has received this new status, contributions made to it, including bequests, legacies, devises, transfers and gifts, are tax deductable by the donor.

This ruling by the Internal Revenue Department makes it possible for the Foundation for Cooperative Housing to receive grants such as the Ford Foundation Grants described elsewhere in this issue.

It is hoped that other contributions will be received to further the principal work of the Foundation, which is to conduct educational and research programs that will lead to better housing for lower and middle income families.

The Ford Foundation has awarded three grants to the Foundation for Cooperative Housing to support FCH's efforts directed towards making better housing available to low and middle-income families.

The first grant, amounting to $170,000 over an 18-month period, is for an intern program, to be sponsored jointly by FCH and the Urban America, Inc., to train specialists in the development and management of low and middle-income housing.

The training program will begin early in August, 1968, and will consist of approximately nine months of on-the-job training preceded by six to eight weeks of orientation and followed by four to six weeks of review in Washington, D. C.

During the on-the-job training portion of program, each intern will receive experience in two or more of the following categories: project development, organization and marketing, management and maintenance, and community facilities and community development.

Twenty interns will be trained under this grant. Each will receive $4,000, financed by the Ford Foundation Grant and about $3,600 in earnings during the on-the-job training. Travel expenses to and from the on-the-job training sites will also be paid out of the grants.

Rural Program Funded

Another Ford Foundation Grant for $90,000 is to provide a minimum staff for working on the development of a rural cooperative housing program over a three year period. The program will involve the use of mortgage finance resources available from the Farmer's Home Administration. Several pilot projects will be developed and it is hoped that these can be approved by the end of this fiscal year. Work will be carried out in rural communities with under 5,500 population.

Representatives of several Latin American and Asian Countries attended a briefing session at the FCH Washington offices as part of a Department of Housing and Urban Development International Training Program Seminar on Finance.

INT'L PARTICIPANTS AT F.C.H. BRIEFING SESSION

As part of the Department of Housing and Urban Development International Training Program: Seminar on Finance held from June 3 to July 5 in Washington, D. C., representatives of several Latin American and Asian Countries attended a briefing session on cooperative housing at the international offices of F.C.H. Services, Inc.

The participants included Kim Chon-Sil of Korea, Carlos Eduardo Coelho de Magalhaes and Jorge Francisconi of Brazil, and Domenico DeCaro of Venezuela, who were studying the implementation of public and private financing techniques which could be adapted to the local needs of the participating countries.

While they were here, the participants heard a panel of three F.C.H. experts, J. Robert Dodge, L. Albert Wilson, and Paul M. Campbell, discuss the fundamentals of cooperative housing and relate methods of financing to the development of cooperative housing programs in the United States and throughout the world.

Paul Campbell, F.C.H. Training Officer, defined and discussed the forms of cooperative housing, as well as the advantages of the single mortgage cooperative. The international program, including methods of financing cooperative housing in developing countries, sources, use of credit union and savings and loan funding, El Hogar Obrero (in Argentina), and N.H.B. (in Brazil), as well as financing in the United States, was discussed by Robert Dodge, Director, International Programs for F.C.H. The remainder of the discussion was devoted to methods of financing cooperative housing throughout the world (apart from the Americas), and was given by Albert Wilson, Deputy Director, International Programs.

F.C.H. Services, Inc. Elects Officers

Four new officers were elected and seven others re-elected at a Board of Directors meeting of F.C.H. Services, Inc. held in New York City on June 18, 1968. Officers re-elected were Winslow Carlton, Chairman of the Board; Roger Willcox, President; C. Franklin Daniels, Executive Vice President; Wendell G. Addington, Senior Vice President; Wallace J. FOUNDATION TRUSTEES FORM TECHNICOOP

A new non-profit subsidiary corporation, called TechniCoop, Inc., has been organized by the Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing. The new corporation will also provide consulting services in connection with rehabilitation cooperatives, in cases where the Foundation is involved in organization and marketing programs.

Members of the F.C.H. staff who originally performed the technical functions will be absorbed into the new corporation.

FCH Staff Members At Honduran Dedication

Jack Edmondson, Latin American Coordinator of the Investment Guaranty Program for FCH SERVICES, INC., and Henry Shipherd, FCH Housing Specialist in Guatemala, attended the inauguration of the Colvisula Cooperative Housing Project in San Pedro Sula, Honduras, on August 17.

This dedication was especially significant because Colvisula is the first project to be completed with the assistance of the Honduran Federation of Cooperative Housing (FEHCOVIL) using loan funds from the Agency for International Development under the Alliance For Progress.

The men and women of the Housing Intern Program received their raison d'etre in hard statistics from Federal Housing Administration Commissioner Philip N. Brownstein at the ceremonies which opened the Program.

"For the first time in this nation's history, a President has set goals for housing," said Brownstein, referring to President Johnson's 1968 housing legislation. Of the 10-year goal of 26 million units, six million units will be for those who cannot afford housing in the usual private market, he noted. "In the last 30 years, about a million units have been produced in this category," he said, in the principal address of the day. "In the next ten years we propose to multiply this by six. This is going to take some doing.

"The skill you are going to acquire in the Housing Intern Program is precisely the type of skill we are going to need to achieve this goal."

Federal Housing Administration Commissioner Philip Brownstein.

Earlier, J. W. Bethea of the Public Affairs Department of Urban America, Inc., and FCH President Wallace Campbell had stressed the emergence of a "third force" in housing. The new force is in the shape of community enterprise — churches, labor unions, community action and other groups — which is constructing housing on a non-profit basis.

"This third force has provided some 90,000 units under federal mortgage assistance programs," Bethea said. "It is filling the gap between the private and public sectors of housing, providing an answer for those who do not qualify for public housing but are faced with the problem of decrepit, battered homes."

"There is a great shortage of people who know how to get action in this field of non-profit housing," Campbell said in his address to the interns. "There are too few people who know how to

First Rural Housing Co-ops Organized

This cabin, in one of the condemned labor camps of the Pahokee, Florida, Housing Authority, is an example of the housing which has been available to low-income families in that county. Residents of the camps report paying as much as $100 a week in rent.

Applications have been filed on the first rural cooperative housing projects organized within the continental United States by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing, as part of the program funded by a grant to FCH from the Ford Foundation.

An application was filed in May on a rural project in Salinas, Puerto Rico.

The new projects are in Pahokee, Florida. Application is expected this month on projects in Blue Lake Township, Muskegon County, Michigan.

The Pahokee project consists of five cooperatives with a total of 123 units. Each project will be within the mortgage limitation of $300,000 established under Section 515 of the National Housing Act. It is sponsored by the Glades Citizens Association and the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Miami.

The Michigan project will total 72 units in three cooperatives, to be sponsored by the Blue Lake-Dalton Neighborhood Association and the Muskegon County Council of Churches.

The role of FCH is essentially the same in the rural cooperative projects, financed under the Farmers Home Administration, as it is in projects developed under Federal Housing Administration guaranties.

A UN housing officer found one of the machines in the shop of an importer who did not know what it was. Here, a group of trainees learns what the machine can do.

Five Countries In Training Program

Housing specialists from Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay and Brazil will participate in training programs with FCH sponsorship early next year, it has been announced by Paul Campbell, Training Officer for FCH Services International Programs.

Late in January, 15 members of the cooperative housing staff of Brazil's National Housing Bank and INOCOOP will begin four weeks with FCH in the United States. Their time will be divided among Washington, Detroit, Chicago, and New York. The time spent with FCH will be preceded by a week of orientation at A.I.D.

Areas of study for the Brazilian delegation will be the planning and development of cooperative housing projects and the management of the projects, including education programs and social development.

Plans for a four-country course in cooperative housing to be held April 14 to June 13 next year were the occasion for talks last month by Rolando Maturana of the international staff and Paul Campbell and other FCH officials as well as staff members of the Organization of American States, co-sponsor for the course. The course will be held in Cordoba, Argentina, and will cover all aspects of cooperative housing: legal, financial, promotional and physical. The 30 participants in the course will represent the countries at the southern tip of South America — Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, and Paraguay.

Included will be persons at the professional level, with the sessions bringing together architects, engineers, social workers and others for five weeks of classroom work, lectures and round table discussions. The 30 will break into smaller groups for a week of visits to cooperative projects and agencies in Argentina. The last phase of the course will take the form of three weeks of practical exercise, through specific work assignments.

FCH Develops 4,049 New Housing Units

The Foundation for Cooperative Housing and associated organizations developed 33 new housing cooperatives valued at $65.3-million during the past fiscal year, Wallace J. Campbell, President of the Foundation, reported this week. The 33 projects included 68 sections of new housing developments or additions to established cooperatives. In addition to these housing projects, FCH was involved in the development of 517 rental units for non-profit sponsoring organizations, which are to be converted into cooperatives during the next year.

The cooperatives are located in nine states, including Arizona, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, and Georgia. The total mortgage value of the projects developed during the year was $74.2-million. The operating arm of the Foundation, FCH Services, Inc. under the direction of Roger Willcox, President, and Wendell Addington, Senior Vice President and Director of National Operations is directly responsible for the development of these projects.

The cooperatives will house 4,049 low and middle income families consisting of over 16,000 persons. Twenty-seven of the projects are financed under Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act for low income families. Nine of the projects are financed under Section 213 for moderate income families.

FCH has now completed in its domestic program a total of 29,482 dwelling units valued at approximately $415-million in 15 years of operation according to Campbell.

Twenty-five percent of all housing built or under construction under Section 221(d)(3) is owned by cooperatives with below market interest rates. Pre-sold cooperatives with subsidized interest rates have had no failures or defaults.

Director, International Programs Outlines FCH Projects and Goals

The housing investment guaranty program was described as a "bright spot on the horizon" for FCH international programs, in a report made to the December 3 meeting of the Foundation's Board of Trustees by J. Robert Dodge, Director of International Programs. The report presented a summary of FCH programs in international development.

The housing investment guaranty program, Dodge said, is particularly promising in Latin America. "It is popular with Congress and with U.S. investors. We are therefore hopeful that it will move forward in such countries as Jamaica, Colombia, Panama, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Guatemala, British Honduras and Venezuela, and that new programs may develop in several other countries."

Dodge surveyed for the Trustees the accomplishments of the three years since he joined the organization and the place where FCH international work now stands.

Despite substantial cuts in AID appropriations over the past three years, the Agency has shown a continued interest

Technical Service Organization Born; ICT and FEDECOOP Sign Documents

A new technical service organization emerged in Colombia on December 10. The new Promotora de Viviendas Cooperativas (PROVICOOP) was created to serve as a non-profit auxiliary cooperative housing services organization. It will assume responsibility for the technical aspects of cooperative housing development in Colombia.

The inauguration ceremony took place in the Colombian Land Institute (ICT) building in Bogota. Mr. Luis Alberto Villegas, General Manager of ICT and Luis Jimenez, Secretary General of the Federation of Colombian Housing Cooperatives (FEDECOOP) there signed the documents creating PROVICOOP. Among those attending were: Mr. Stanley Ott, Housing and Urban Development Officer for USAID in Colombia; Carlos Ayerbe and Daniel Coleman, FCH staff stationed in Colombia; Mario Pita, FCH Deputy Director for the Cooperative Housing Investment Guaranty Program.

Financial aid for FEDECOOP programs has been provided by the Agency for International Development and technical assistance from the Foundation for Cooperative Housing was initiated in 1964. Since that time, the Colombian cooperative housing federation has organized cooperative projects in Cali, Bogota and Medellin.

In August 1968, AID agreed to guarantee private United States financing for a cooperative housing project in Bogota, sponsored by FEDECOOP with ICT financial participation as well. This commitment was granted under the terms of the AID Latin American Housing Investment Guaranty Program.

The approval of the guaranty project prompted FEDECOOP and ICT to begin negotiations which led to the creation of PROVICOOP. The Board of PROVICOOP is made up of representatives from ICT, FEDECOOP and the National Association of Cooperativas (ASCOOP).

Architect Antonio Restrepo Pelaez, former Deputy Director for the Medellin City Planning Office, has been named PROVICOOP's Executive Director; Dr. Gustavo Romero Conti has been designated its Cooperative Specialist and Mr. Luis Carlos Bonell was appointed Comptroller. FCH will be assisting PROVICOOP in the development of the new cooperative projects.

Attends UN Housing Meeting In Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

Ervan Rudolph Bueneman assumed the responsibilities of Director of International Programs for the Foundation for Cooperative Housing in January. He replaced Robert Dodge, who is retiring. (See story on page 4.)

Before joining the FCH Washington staff, Mr. Bueneman served as Chief, Urban Development Division, Agency for International Development, Panama, Republic of Panama. In that capacity he directed specialists in the programming, execution and evaluation of AID sponsored urban development projects in Panama's four urban areas.

January 15-23, Mr. Bueneman was in Addis Ababa, representing the Foundation at the Meeting on Technical and Social Problems of Urbanization (with emphasis on financing of housing). This conference, sponsored by the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and the German Federation for Developing Countries, explored and made recommendations concerning the problems of Africa's urban areas. Mr. Bueneman had the opportunity to discuss the cooperative housing concept with members of the ECA, the German Federation for Developing Countries, the German Federation of Nonprofit Housing Societies, as well as with delegates from various African countries. He observed that there was much interest and enthusiasm for the co-op concept.

Among the final recommendations drawn up by the conference delegates was a proposal that "ECA should consider establishing a housing co-operative pilot project in one African country with bilateral or multilateral assistance." It

11 Brazilians in U.S. For Co-op Training

Eleven high-level supervisors working in cooperative housing in Brazil recently participated in a four-week training program sponsored by the Agency for International Development. Paul Campbell, FCH Training Officer directed the program. Eight members of the group are employed in Brazil's National Housing Bank as engineers, analysts, administrative assistants, econoomists and program directors. INOCOOPs, Brazilian regional technical service organizations under the National Housing Bank's Division of Cooperative Housing, sent the other three participants.

During the course of the program, which began February 14, the trainees studied cooperative housing methods in Washington, D.C., Detroit, Chicago and New York. They discussed programming, policy and procedures with administrative and operating personnel and examined cooperative housing developments.

Two Trustees Elected

Two new members were elected March 11 to the Board of Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing. Mr. Sam Carsman of Detroit and Mr. B. F. Ihlenfeldt of St. Paul have long been active in the field of cooperatives.

For six years, Mr. Carsman has served as President of Ferndale Cooperative, Inc. The latter is a consumer cooperative organization, with approximately 40,000 members, which operates a credit union, a home modernization business and a Section 202 housing project for the elderly in downtown Detroit. That project is managed by FCH Services, Inc., the operating arm of the Foundation. Among its other activities, Ferndale Cooperative is exploring means of rehabilitating inner-city homes in Detroit. The Ferndale Cooperative home modernization department was basic contractor in the rehabilitation of the Kramer Homes Cooperative — one of the most successful rehabilitation projects undertaken by FCH.

Mr. Carsman is also Vice President and Director of Marketing for the League Life Insurance Company. Owned by the Michigan Credit Union League, League Life is the largest life insurance company in Michigan. It provides group life coverage of more than three billion dollars for 1,295,000 credit union members in that state.

Mr. Ihlenfeldt has devoted his entire career to cooperatives. Before becoming associated with Cooperative Insurance Mutual in Milwaukee, he served at various times as organizer, training and education field man, manager of local cooperative associations and consultant to new cooperatives.

Currently Mr. Ihlenfeldt is Vice President for Public Relations of Mutual Service Insurance Companies, in which capacity he has assisted in the organization of various co-op housing projects.

Mr. Ihlenfeldt has served the Cooperative League of the USA (CLUSA) as chairman of its Insurance Conference Committee and Public Relations Committee. While on a leave of absence from Mutual Service Insurance, he served as Director of CLUSA's newly organized Department of Economic Opportunity. During the three years of his directorship, that department aided the cooperative development among low-income groups of co-op housing, consumer groups and credit unions. It also assisted in the establishment of cooperative marketing and management programs and of a forestry marketing and production association.

New Officers Serve NSHC

NSHC, which provides low-cost services to housing cooperatives throughout the nation, will soon become a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing. Trustees of the Foundation voted at their most recent meeting, on March 11th, to acquire all shares of stock in NSHC from its founders and present owners, FCH Services, Inc., and the Association for Middle-Income Housing.

New officers and directors of the service organization were also elected at the Board meeting: Winslow Carlton, Chairman of the Board; C. Franklin Daniels, President and Director; Wallace J. Campbell, Treasurer and Director; Shirley Boden, Vice President and Director; Ruth Senior, Secretary and Director. John J. Seifert will continue to serve as Vice President and Manager and Gro V. Wood as Assistant Secretary.

Through NSHC, cooperatives and their members across the country have obtained various types of insurance, including the new "occupancy" insurance. An experimental project has also been inaugurated in the Washington, D.C. area to provide home furnishings at low cost for co-op residents. (See March Newsbriefs.)

30 Housing Interns Convene In Michigan

Twenty-eight participants in the Housing Intern Program jointly sponsored by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing and Urban America, Inc., met at Colombiere College in Clarkston, Michigan for a three-day seminar May 10 through 12.

This meeting presented the interns the opportunity to share their on-the-job experiences and to critique the training program as it has been carried out to date. Five discussion groups examined the various aspects of the program. Many of their recommendations will be incorporated in plans for next year's program. During the seminar the trainees also developed the curriculum for the final phase of their instruction. This portion of the program, which will take place in Washington, D.C. from July 7 through August 1, will be devoted to review and broadening the interns' knowledge of housing.

A Ford Foundation grant is funding the Housing Intern Program. However, two of the interns are auditing the course.

The program began early last fall in Washington, D.C. with an intensive seven-week course in housing. The four major areas of study were project development, sales and marketing, management and maintenance and community facilities development.

The interns were then assigned to various housing development organizations for nine months of on-the-job training. Their sponsors included church related, cooperative, non-profit and pub-

FCH Activities Set New Record

A total of 2276 low- and middle-income families will get new cooperative townhouses or apartments in 23 new cooperatives sponsored by Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing in the last six months.

The announcement was made by C. Franklin Daniels, President of Administration of FCH Services, Inc., the operating arm of the Foundation, who pointed out that this is a record for the cooperative development organization.

During the first six months of its fiscal year — October 1, 1968 to March 31, 1969 — FCH completed the mortgage closings on 37 sections of 23 cooperative housing projects in five states — Michigan, Indiana, Kansas, Missouri and Maryland, Mr. Daniels announced. The new housing will be valued at $39,185,400.

Thirty-three of the 37 sections are financed under Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act, designed for families of moderate income. The remaining four sections are financed under Section 213, designed for middle-income families.

The Foundation for Cooperative Housing and FCH Services, Inc., have 17 years of experience in the organization and marketing of cooperative housing. FCH has now completed approximately 35,000 units of cooperative housing valued at more than $415 million.

The Trustees also reelected five of the Foundatiton's officers: Winslow Carlton, Chairman of the Board; Wallace J. Campbell, President of the Foundation; C. Franklin Daniels, Executive Vice-President; S. F. Boden, Secretary; and Dwight D. Townsend, Treasurer.

Guest of honor at the Trustee's luncheon was the new Commissioner of the Cooperative Development Administration of Puerto Rico. He commented briefly on his visit to the FCH Services office in Detroit.

Quick 100% Sales Tell New Success

"The immediate sales success of the Jardines de San Francisco cooperative housing project in Puerto Rico signals the beginning of a new era of cooperative organization in that island commonwealth," announced Roger Willcox, FCH President for Research and Demonstration. He added "It also testifies to the enthusiasm of the island's populace for cooperative housing."

Thousands of families there have waited as long as five years to become residents of housing co-ops. These long waiting periods resulted from the former practice in Puerto Rico of organizing membership cooperatives months or even years before the commencement of housing construction.

By contrast, Jardines and Villa Victoria, another new Puerto Rican co-op, are management type cooperatives planned and organized by technical service organizations. Co-op members are assembled only after all arrangements for housing construction are made.

In the case of Jardines, the sales program was begun only two months before the scheduled completion of construction. Begun May 8, its sales program closed two weeks later when families had subscribed for every one of its 344 units and a waiting list had been established. Villa Victoria is expected to enjoy a similar success when its sales program commences.

Both new Puerto Rican projects are being organized by the Cooperative Development Administration of Puerto Rico with assistance from the Foundation for Cooperative Housing, through FCH Services, Inc., under a consultant contract.

FCH Opens Doors In San Francisco

The October 1 opening of a new Western Regional Office of FCH Services, Inc. in San Francisco has been announced by Wendell G. Addington, FCH Senior Vice President and Director of National Operations.

The new office, headed by Leland W. Scarlett, serves six states: California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Alaska and Hawaii. Already more than 1500 units of cooperative housing are under active consideration in that region, Mr. Addington said.

Mr. Scarlett, 50, of Walnut Creek, California, has been named Regional Director and elected a Vice President of FCH. A real estate broker and land development specialist, Mr. Scarlett has developed multi-family and commercial parcels for projects valued at more than $75 million during the last thirteen years.

Jac Wasserman, Foundation for Cooperative Housing housing consultant, has relocated from the Washington, D.C. office to San Francisco. He will concentrate on developing rural and Indian housing in the Mountain States and Western regions.

Located at 1182 Market Street (tel. 415—861-6100), the new office was opened as part of a national expansion program financed by long-term loans from the Ford Foundation. According to C. Franklin Daniels, FCH President for Administration, it is anticipated that two other new regional offices will be opened during 1970 in conjunction with that program.

"Throughout the history of this country, many citizens, who have found it difficult or impossible to achieve their goal of bettering their situation alone, have joined together to pursue their common goals. Labor unions, farmers' markets, credit unions and consumer co-ops are examples of this type of effective cooperative effort.

"We at FCH are dedicated to the principle that the cooperative approach can also bring the benefits of homeownership to many who could not achieve it as individuals. By combining determination and resources, people can shape their environment.

"By recognizing advantages already achieved by many through cooperatives, Co-op Month encourages others to discover that they, too, can enjoy these benefits. For these reasons, FCH strongly supports Co-op Month."

4th Regional Course Planned

The Fourth Cooperative Housing Training Course is being planned for the early months of 1970. Jointly sponsored by the Organization of American States (OAS) and the Foundation for Cooperative Housing, the meeting will be conducted in Costa Rica on a regional basis for Central American and Caribbean countries, Panama and Mexico.

Officials to Confer On Squatter Problem

High officials of government housing agencies from fifteen Latin American countries will gather November 3 in Washington, D.C., for a five-day conference on squatter programs.

Sponsored by the Agency for International Development, the conference has been planned as a forum for the free exchange of ideas rather than as a course outlining specific policy recommendations. FCH Services, Inc., under one of its regional AID contracts, is supporting AID in the development and guidance of the workshop.

During the first day of the meeting men with knowledge and experience in the Latin American squatter and population problems will explain their philosophies and concepts as to how the squatter problem might best be approached. Phillip Hanser, Director of the Population Research Center, University of Chicago, and John Turner, Professor of City Planning with the MIT Joint Center for Urban Studies in Cambridge, Massachusetts, will figure among the guest speakers.

The following three days will be devoted to the presentation by one delegate from each country represented of a report on the squatter situation in his nation and the resources available to deal with it. Each will also outline the squatter policies which have been formulated by his country and their implementation.

The final day of the conference will be open to a general discussion of the different country situations and of the merits of the various philosophies and policies presented during the preceding four days.

FCH Starts Reach All-Time High

5287 New Houses Begun In Just Nine Months

Nearly 1,000 low- and moderate-income housing starts, representing $18,239,800 in FHA-insured mortgages, were initiated during June by the non-profit Foundation for Cooperative Housing and its subsidiary, FCH Services, Inc., making June the biggest month in FCH's 20-year history.

This brings the total number of starts sponsored by FCH during the last nine months to 5,287, as compared with 3,708 starts completed during the same period last year, according to C. Franklin Daniels, President for Administration of FCH Services.

The mortgage value of the new starts exceeds the value of starts made during the first nine months of last year by nearly $30 million, or 47%. This year's figure stands at $93,308,500 as compared to $63,398,000 last year. The average mortgage per unit, up $600 from the 1969 average, is $17,783.

Much of this development activity in June was concentrated in Indiana, where 364 of the units are under construction, and in Michigan, where 248 of the homes are located. Other units will house families in Georgia, Kansas, Missouri and St. Croix, the Virgin Islands. The 995 homes will make up part of 12 housing cooperatives.

FHA financing of all homes will permit eligible family-residents to pay below-market-interest rates and thereby lower monthly payments.

The majority of the families will pay interest rates ranging from a low one percent to the current market rate, according to their annual incomes. Their homes are insured under Section 236 of the National Housing Act of 1968. The remaining 434 families will pay a set three percent interest on their mortgages, which are financed under Section 221(d) (3), a program now being phased. out by HUD.

Each new home will be equipped with modern kitchen appliances and have access to laundry facilities. Many will also be centrally air-conditioned. FCH-sponsored co-ops also provide their members with open green spaces, recreational areas, community buildings and maintenance services.

FCH's record setting activity during June brings the total of low- and moderate-income homes sponsored by FCH to over 40,000.

First Housing Co-op In St. Croix Started

Construction of the first housing cooperative in St. Croix, the Virgin Islands was begun during June.

It is expected that the co-op, financed under a Federal Housing Administration program, will be only the first of a series of new houisng developments designed to help alleviate the housing shortage of St. Croix.

Jointly sponsored by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing and the St. Croix Labor Union, the 189-unit cooperative is located on land made available by the labor union, which has also given its name to the community.

90% Aid Co-op Loan To Panama Committed

The awarding of construction and inspection contracts on the urban La Loceria housing cooperative marked the commitment of ninety per cent of AID's $3.5 million cooperative housing development loan to Panama's National Housing Institute (IVU).

The cooperative housing loan was initiated in 1967. The first year of the program was devoted to the establishment of a new technical service organization to implement the loan.

Since 1968, the new institution, the Panamanian Foundation for Cooperative Housing (FUNDAVICO) has carried out thirteen rural projects and four urban programs under the loan. It is anticipated that all of these projects will be completed by the end of 1971.

FCH has provided technical assistance to IVU and, subsequently, to FUNDAVICO since the program's inception.

$15 Million Co-op Housing Under Construction In Va.

More than $15 million in low- and middle-income cooperative housing, organized by the FCH Mid-Atlantic regional staff, is under construction in Southeastern Virginia.

Construction has already started on the first 149 units of the 500-unit Irongate Townhouse Cooperative at Newport News. Work will begin on the remaining units before the end of the year.

The two-, three-, and four-bedroom townhouses in Irongate, built by Bush Construction Company, range in price from $93 to $122, including utilities. The cooperative, which is being financed under Section 236 of the National Housing Act, is expected to achieve economic integration among its residents. Under this section the amount of each occupancy charge is determined by the size and income of the family. Eligible families may receive interest subsidies. The pattern of sales for the past 10 weeks indicates that at complete occupancy, approximately 1/4 of the residents will be paying the full market rate.

Each townhouse includes modern kitchen appliances, easily accessible laundry facilities, outdoor storage and central air-conditioning. A unique feature of this cooperative is that residents can customize their homes by selecting the color and style of wall tile, flooring, cabinets and counter tops. The cooperative is designed to assure its residents maximum privacy and convenience.

A three-acre play area -- complete with community building, basketball court and baseball diamond -- is planned for the site. The grounds of the cooperative will be attractively landscaped, combining large open areas of grass and shrubbery with continuous sidewalks and small tot lots.

Interim financing is being provided by the Investment Corporation of Norfolk. The Federal National Mortgage Association will supply the long-term mortgage.

In nearby Hampton, 41 units of the 112-unit Fox Hill Townhouses were completed last month. Construction of the remaining 71 units began in September. In sales since April, Fox Hill is being financed under Section 221(d)(3) of the National Housing Act, which sets a ceiling on the income of eligible families and limits the mortgage interest rate to 3%.

Built by the Whitecliff Corporation, Fox Hill's two- and three-bedroom units are being offered to residents at a monthly occupancy charge of $108 to $122, including utilities. The townhouses are equipped with a modern kitchen, laundry and recreational facilities and central air-conditioning.

International Agency Could Produce Housing Revolution

"A new international agency for urban development and housing, with the capability of performing another miracle for humanity like the "green revolution" miracle of the United Nation's Food and Agriculture Organization, and the "health revolution" miracle of the United Nation's World Health Organization, is needed if the urban crisis facing the World today is to be solved."

Carl A. S. Coan, Staff Director, Senate Housing Subcommittee, issued this challenge to the U. S. and all other developed nations of the world in an article appearing in the October, 1970 issue of the National League Journal.

Pointing to the rapidly worsening situation of urban centers in the developing world and citing the warnings of such imminent experts as Addeke Boerma, Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), and Barbara Ward, the noted British economist, Mr. Coan asserted that "Existing institutions are falling far behind in their efforts to stem the tide of decay, overcrowding and squatters which are threatening the peace and orderly growth of large numbers of cities in the developing nations of the World."

"The solution," he stated, "calls for the combined power of government, private enterprise, and an informed public mobilized into a massive effort to attack the problem." Recognizing that the U. S. alone cannot assume the entire burden, but recognizing, too, that no international assistance effort is possible without strong U. S. support, Mr. Coan called upon the U. S. and the United Nations "to agree to the establishment of a Specialized Agency for Urban Development and Housing."

Mr. Coan suggested that the institution be organized after the pattern of the FAO and the World Health Organization (WHO). Like these two organizations, the new agency would have multilateral sponsorship and funding and, hence, sufficient prestige to launch a major, worldwide program.

Outlining its chief activities, Mr. Coan said that "Its principal functions would be to provide technical assistance and to stimulate and coordinate international planning and community development among the nations in the developing world." He proposed that it conduct research and develop demonstration programs, work with international financial institutions to assure adequate financing for housing developments and assist individual governments in the implementation of low-cost housing programs. The new agency would also "encourage cooperative and self-help housing schemes" as a means of alleviating urban housing problems.

Since the organization of such an agency and making it operational will take several years, Mr. Coan called for an immediate initiative in that direction. In the meantime, he called for the continuation of the savings and loan program and the Investment Guaranty Program in Latin America and urged that the cooperative housing program carried on overseas by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing receive adequate support and funding to continue.

New Attitudes Toward Housing Necessary To Reach National Goals

Speaking at the Upper Midwest Institute on Cooperative Home Ownership, Wallace J. Campbell, President of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing, declared "We have learned by bitter experience that housing need alone does not necessarily create new housing. An adequate answer to the need can come only when there is an understanding of the priority of the problem at the highest levels in government and in the fields of finance."

Sponsored by fifteen cooperative, financial, building and civic organizations, the Institute was convened December 3 in St. Paul to explore the potential of cooperative housing in the Midwest area. Representatives of concerned organizations and individual citizens of the area were invited to attend and meet with government and industry leaders experienced in various aspects of cooperative housing.

Community Effort Answers Rural Needs

The Little Blue Lake area constitutes one of Michigan's worst rural slums, an isolated, underdeveloped region served by only one hard surfaced road. Factory employees moved to the area during World War II in search of jobs, but almost the entire population of the neighborhood is now unemployed and subsisting on welfare or social security.

Most of the existing housing in the Little Blue Lake area is substandard, ill equipped, over priced and hidden among trees off dusty, dirt back roads. Many of the houses are old "pre-fabs" used to house war workers in Muskegon thirty years ago and subsequently moved to rural lots by speculator landlords. Rents for these box-like shacks run about $65 a month and it is estimated that during the cold months, heating expenses reach $45 to $50 monthly.

Now, a result of long hours of volunteer efforts by members of three local civic groups – the Council of Churches, the Little Blue Lake-Dalton Neighborhood Association and the Muskegon Area Development Council of the Chamber of Commerce – and innovative work by the builder, Richard Johnson of Harbor Hills, Inc., a pilot cooperative housing program to provide decent homes for some of the area's poor is under construction in the Little Blue Lake area.

These civic organizations have been involved in other housing efforts, but the 72-unit Little Blue Lake co-op project is their first large scale housing endeavor.

They contacted the FCH Great Lakes Regional Office in Detroit for assistance and the development work soon began. FCH work on this program was funded by a Ford Foundation grant for rural co-op housing.

The Little Blue Lake-Dalton Neighborhood Association obtained an option on a forty-three acre tract for which it subsequently paid $2,100. Funds for the land purchase were obtained from the Grand Rapids Catholic Archdiocese on a promissory note.

The next step in realizing the project was land development. Although it had been thought that existing water supplies would be adequate, the builder, headquartered in Muskegon, found it necessary to drill a community well. At his own risk, Mr. Johnson invested approximately $100,000 to drill the well. He also put up model units from which the co-op homes were sold.

The sales program proved to be one of the most difficult aspects of the community's development. Newspaper and radio ads as well as handbills were used, but it was found that these media do not reach rural families as well as they do urban residents. The population of the Little Blue Lake area, so long neglected and forced to live in the substandard dwellings, was skeptical about the program.

Then too. the $360 required down

FCH CO-OP USES NEW INDUSTRIALIZED TECHNIQUE

Factory Produced Box Components Slid Into Masonry, Steel Walls Erected at Co-op Site

A new modular slide-in box construction technique is being applied for the first time in the construction of an FCH-sponsored housing cooperative started during January in Annapolis, Maryland.

Conceived by The Perkins and Will Partnership, the project architects, and American Construction Systems, Inc., the general contractor, the industrialized system being employed at Bywater Mutual Homes involves the use of masonry on steel exteriors into which modular frame boxes are slid. One of the most significant features of the system is that the components can be produced by any mobile home plant in the nation. This means not only that production can be easily accessible to many sites but also that the box production can become competitive.

On Site Assembly

The masonry exteriors will be raised by American Construction Systems, Inc., of Rockville, Maryland. When these exterior walls are completed, the modular boxes will be shipped to the site from the Guerdon Industries plant in Pennsylvania. The boxes will then be slid into place and the fourth side of the unit bricked over. This entire process can be accomplished in six months.

The frame boxes will contain all heating, plumbing and electrical equipment which will need only to be connected to the community lines. Interior walls will be of dry wall.

Baruch Urges Housing Push

Speaking before the Ninth Inter-American Savings and Loan Conference, Stanley Baruch, Secretary-General of the Conference, emphasized that there can be no "sabbaths" in efforts to provide good housing for all the world's population.

Demetrio B. Lakas, President of the Provisional Junta of Panama, welcomed the representatives from 17 countries to the annual event, held this year in Panama City, January 23-30. Sponsors for the Conference were the National League of Insured Savings Associations, the Inter-American Savings and Loan Union and the Agency for International Development (AID).

In his speech to the delegates, Mr. Baruch, Director, Office of Housing, AID, presented nine points which he felt represented a synthesis of the knowledge acquired during the past twelve years of the savings and loan movement.

According to Mr. Baruch, the construction of residential housing is of tremendous importance in the economic development process and therefore justifies international loans to make it possible. "No one," continued Baruch, "who has observed the human degradation resulting from the slop and slime of the bad housing which abounds in every major city of the world, and no one who has measured the incredibly beneficial effect on the economy, employment, and general prosperity resulting directly from extensive home building can challenge this thesis."

Mr. Baruch noted that only the international pooling of ideas, experiences, successes and failures would mobilize nations' collective strength into a constructive world-wide force. He added that the Inter-American Savings and Loan Union would be a valuable aid in achieving this goal.

The President of Panama, Demetrio B. Lakas, in his opening speech, stressed his country's interest in housing and the savings and loan movement. He stated

Foundation Expands Technical Facilities

The Foundation for Cooperative Housing announced this week the reorganizing and strengthening of two of its principal subsidiary organizations, FCH Services, Inc., and TechniCoop, Inc. The announcement was made by Winslow Carlton, Chairman of the Board of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing.

The purpose of the reorganization is to streamline the development program for the organization of housing for families of middle and low income through FCH Services and at the same time strengthen the control of quality of the new housing by a contract between FCH Services and TechniCoop. The enlarged program of TechniCoop will also call for the expansion of research in housing techniques and costs by TechniCoop and the launching of new programs of innovation in housing rehabilitation and conversion, plus other experimental programs.

C. Franklin Daniels will continue as President of FCH Services. Roger Willcox will transfer from FCH Services to TechniCoop and will serve as President of that organization. The Board of Directors of TechniCoop will include Julian Whittlesey, prominent architect and planner; Eric Carlson, Director of the Housing Division of the UN Centre for Housing, Building and Planning; Ira S. Robbins, former Chairman of the New York City Housing Authority; Kenneth S. Waterman, former Assistant Vice President of FCH Services; Roger Willcox, who has served for eighteen years as an Officer of FCH Services; and Wallace J. Campbell, President of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing.

Development Rate Up 20%; Mortgage Rate Down to 7%

Housing starts sponsored by Trustees of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing during the first five months of the 1970-71 fiscal year are up 20% over last year.

Making this announcement, C. Franklin Daniels, President of FCH Services, Inc., pointed out that "This increase is especially significant in view of the fact that activities during the last fiscal year represented a record-breaking 77% increase over the previous start rate."

A total of 2807 new homes, with a mortgage value of $50,907,369, have been started by FCH in co-op communities around the country since October 1, 1970. Six hundred twenty-four of these units, with a mortgage value of $12,205,000, were started during February in Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts and Michigan.

Several residents of the FCH-sponsored co-ops to be started during February will benefit from the recent reduction in the FCH-authorized mortgage loan interest rate from 8 1/2% to 7%. (FHA interest rates have not been as low as 7% since January, 1969.)

The reduced rate will be reflected in lower member monthly charges. For example, at Branford Townhouses in Taylor, Michigan, a Section 236-financed co-op, families paying the market interest rate would have paid $218 a month for a one-bedroom townhouse at the previous interest level. Now that family will pay only $204. Likewise, the cost has been reduced from $237 to $222 for a two-bedroom unit and from $274 to $257 for a three-bedroom unit. The payments of families receiving the maximum interest assistance prescribed by Section 236 are unaffected by the interest cut, since their payments are based on a 1% mortgage interest rate.

FCH CO-OP TO GET LOW COST FUEL

A new agreement designed to lower the charges for fuel services is being applied for the first time to an FCH-sponsored housing cooperative.

The co-op, Irongate Townhouses, Newport News, Virginia, is also the first presold management type housing co-operative to be sponsored by FCH in the Tidewater area under Section 236 of the National Housing Act.

Bush Construction Company, the builder, entered into contract with the Virginia Electric Power Company (VEPCO) for an interruptible service agreement for the cooperative.

Interruptible service agreements state that in times of great demand for fuel, the Virginia Electric Power Company can turn off the fuel supply for an undetermined length of time. When this happens, Irongate Townhouses will rely on fuel supplied by its own 30 thousand gallon tank of propane gas which is located on the co-op's grounds. The fuel for Irongate continues to be supplied in this manner until VEPCO resumes service.

Rates for interruptible service are much lower than those for non-interruptible contracts.

The builder was able to take advantage of the still lower rates offered for high volume fuel consumption, since all co-op home utilities – air conditioning, heating, cooking – are gas-operated.

When completed, Irongate will house 500 families. Each townhouse will have individual front and rear entrances, privacy fences between homes, a storage shed and landscaped lawn.

Irongate, like all FCH-sponsored co-operatives, will also include modern kitchen appliances, laundry facilities,

Morris, Raber Named Executive Officers

C. Franklin Daniels, President of FCH Services, Inc., has announced the appointment of two FCH officials to senior staff positions in the national headquarters office, Washington, D.C.

Lloyd Morris, Director of the FCH Mid-Atlantic Regional Office, has been named Vice President for Development and Sales. He assumes these new responsibilities in addition to his regional assignment.

Ron Raber, former Director of Sales in the FCH South Central Regional Office, has been appointed Assistant Vice President for Sales.

As members of the national staff, Morris and Raber will advise and assist the FCH President in carrying out his responsibilities for the development and sales of housing co-ops sponsored by the Foundation for Cooperative Housing. They will also provide support and information services to regional directors and their development and sales staffs.

Mr. Raber is currently making plans for a national seminar for FCH regional sales directors. The seminar will provide its participants with the opportunity to compare sales practices in the eight regions and to exchange new ideas.

Mr. Morris joined the FCH team in 1965 as Assistant to the Director of International Programs. Three years later, he joined the staff of the then new Mid-Atlantic regional office. Last year, he became Director for the region, which encompasses eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Washington, D.C., Virginia, North Carolina and West Virginia.

Mr. Raber has been a member of the FCH sales staff since 1964. He has worked in both Illinois and Indianapolis as a sales representative. For the last eighteen months, he has served as Director of Sales in the South Central Regional Office at Indianapolis, which handles co-operative development in Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Illinois and Iowa.

Startling Growth Rewards Efforts in South

"I'm a little startled myself at the rapidity of our growth," admits Al Wilson, Director, FCH Southeast Regional Office.

Since the summer of 1968, when Mr. Wilson arrived in Atlanta, Georgia, to set up the new office, he and his staff have completed the development of three co-operatives with a total of 536 units, now fully occupied. (Two co-ops, containing 499 units, had previously been developed in the area by other FCH offices.) Another 3,810 units in thirteen active programs, worth $60,384,893 in Federal Housing Administration (FHA) commitments, are in various stages of development.

The Idea Takes Root

Mr. Wilson feels he cannot fully explain the success of the FCH program in an area where, three years ago, housing co-ops were completely unknown to the public and still unfamiliar to the local FHA officers. He attributes it, in large part, to the recent general growth of the South, particularly the Atlanta area. He also credits the Atlanta FHA office, headed by Cary Hooks, with accepting the co-op idea and promoting it as an important means of meeting the area's housing needs, especially among low and moderate income groups.

At least part of the answer, though, must also be found in the imagination, talent and enthusiasm of the Southeast staff.

A few months after arriving in Atlanta to establish the new Southeast office singlehandedly, Mr. Wilson filed an application for the first FCH-sponsored cooperative to be financed under Section 236, Brandywine Towne Houses, typing the form himself on an old door he used as a table at his home. Since that time, the Southeast staff has grown considerably and has moved its center of operations to the newest section of Atlanta.

One of Mr. Wilson's first recruits was Dagmar O'Conners. A native Atlantan,

The Diamond & Kaye Building Co. constructed London Towne Houses, which was already under construction when the Southeast Region opened in 1968. Since that time, the office has worked with nine builders in the development of 4,346 co-op homes.

Western Office Organizes Its First 2 Co-ops

Construction has begun on the first housing cooperative to be developed by FCH Services' Western office, and sales are underway on another project organized by the San Francisco based staff.

The co-ops also represent the first FCH ventures in Washington and Nevada.

Homewood Terrace, the new co-op in Auburn, Washington, is being constructed by Mayer-Built Homes of Tacoma on a heavily wooded tract within fifteen miles of both Tacoma and Seattle. The co-op buildings have been designed to take full advantage of the site, preserving an open, uncrowded atmosphere. The townhouse clusters will contain no more than six units and several will have no more than two.

Co-op members will enjoy many amenities at Homewood Terrace not usually included in Section 236-financed communities. Their community building, already completed, contains a well furnished community room, fireplace, billiard room and equipment, game tables, wet bar and two office rooms. Other co-op recreational facilities will include an olympic-size swimming pool and ten custom built pieces of creative play equipment in the playground areas. For extra convenience, many of the units will be equipped with garages or carports.

The first section of Homewood Terrace, that which is currently under construction, will consist of 44 units. It is anticipated that, when completed, the

First 'Breakthrough' Site Goes Co-op

This beautiful, wooded 50-acre tract, with a six-acre spring fed lake in Macon, Georgia is the site of the first "Operation Breakthrough" project to be under construction. The project is to be organized as a housing cooperative.

"Operation Breakthrough" finally broke through the myriad problems and delays which had put it behind schedule late last month when, on June 21, the final FHA instruments were signed permitting the start of construction at the Macon, Georgia prototype site.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development has specified that this first 'Breakthrough' project be organized as a cooperative so that it will not only serve as a model for new construction and planning techniques, but also as a pattern for viable community living and involvement. HUD feels that only with the ownership and occupant participation inherent to a cooperative can the long-term success of its pioneering program be assured. Thus, it has called upon the Foundation for Cooperative Housing to sponsor the new community, Kenilworth Manor, and FCH Services to implement its directive.

FCH will work closely with Fickling and Walker, Inc. of Macon, Georgia and the National Corporation of Housing Partnerships of Washington, D. C., the HUD-appointed site developers.

HOUSING DIVERSIFIED

Six producers — Alcoa, Boise-Cascade, Building Systems International, Christiana Western, Hercules, Inc. and Material Systems, Inc. — will build a total of 287 industrialized housing units at Kenilworth. Both panelized and modular systems will be applied and basic materials utilized will include aluminum, light gauge steel, precast concrete, wood and fiber reinforced resin.

Several types of units are planned in order both to demonstrate the diversity of industrialized housing techniques and to lend the community a diversified atmosphere. There will be 56 highrise apartments, 24 midrise apartments, 149 townhouses; 42 garden apartments and 16 single family homes. The majority of the dwellings will contain either two or three bedrooms, but one- and four-bedroom units will also be provided.

The 50-acre Macon site is an unusually beautiful piece of land. It is heavily wooded and contains a 6-acre, blub-shaped, spring fed lake. As site planner, Reynolds, Smith and Hills of Jacksonville, Florida, was confronted with the difficult task of introducing 287 housing units and all the large, heavy equipment used in the assembly of industrialized components, while preserving the beauty of the natural setting. The necessity of juxtaposing many diverse units in an attractive, livable community also presented an unusual challenge to the planner.

GREEN AREAS FEATURED

The site plan developed entails the clustering of housing units, in varying densities, around the lake and a large, central green area. Community activities will be centered around the lake. A large community building and swimming pool will be built on the lake's shore. The major vehicular road will encircle the homes on the perimeter of the co-op's property. Cul-de-sacs will provide access and parking facilities for each housing cluster. Traffic-free pedestrianways will permit safe pedestrian passage to all community buildings.

Financing for the Kenilworth cooperative will be provided under Section 233,

Kalamazoo 'Breakthrough' Project Opens

These 'Operation Breakthrough' cooperative townhouse units in Kalamazoo, Michigan were built by Levitt Building Systems, Inc. Delivered to the site by truck, the first three factory-manufactured units were under roof in one day.

A crane is used to lift factory-manufactured modular units of these Kalamazoo, Michigan 'Operation Breakthrough' cooperative townhouse units into place. The units are being built by Hercoform Marketing, Inc.

Forty-three units are already under roof at the Kalamazoo "Operation Breakthrough" site and the Federal Housing Administration has given the green light for all construction and sales to begin.

Kalamazoo is the second "Breakthrough" prototype site to reach the construction stage of development and the second to be designated a housing cooperative by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Foundation for Cooperative Housing is sponsoring and marketing the Kalamazoo Breakthrough Consumers Housing Cooperative, as it is the Kenilworth Manor cooperative, the Macon, Georgia project. (See July Newsbriefs.)

As organizer of the new co-op, FCH is seeking to fulfill HUD's goal of broad economic and social integration among community members. Thus, Dennis Devinney, FCH Community Relations Representative, has been working for several weeks with local community groups and the three nearby universities to acquaint their members and faculty with the cooperative. The sales program has just been launched by other on-site FCH personnel.

It is anticipated that construction of all 245 homes of the Kalamazoo co-op will be substantially completed by the end of this year.

Many amenities not usually included in Section 236-financed housing will be included in the Kalamazoo homes. Every unit will be centrally air conditioned and will contain a clothes washer and dryer, dish washer, refrigerator, range and garbage disposal. Room size will also be

YEAR END REPORT

FCH Home Starts Hit $152 Million

In inner-city areas, university towns, experimental communities and suburban neighborhoods throughout the U.S. and Puerto Rico, over 8,200 homes were developed by the nonprofit Foundation for Cooperative Housing during its recently ended '70 - '71 fiscal year.

Announcing the year-end figures, C. Franklin Daniels, President of the Foundation's chief operating subsidiary, FCH Services, Inc., said that the FCH housing starts were worth $152,261,651 in FHA-insured mortgages.

During September, the final month of the fiscal year, FCH organized 1,185 homes valued at $20,877,414. Over half of these homes are located in seven new housing cooperatives: the others are being built in existing co-op communities.

Hotel Rehabilitated

The completion of one of the new cooperatives, located in downtown Detroit, Michigan, marks the culmination of the joint efforts of the Foundation and a local citizens' organization to rehabilitate a dilapidated nine-story hotel and convert it to an occupant-owned residence. The structure was completely stripped in order to transform its 400 hotel rooms into 183 apartment units, complete with individual kitchens and baths. The new co-op is financed under Section 236, as are the majority of current FCH programs. (See story on page 3.)

OFFICIAL MONTHLY NEWSLETTER OF THE ATLANTA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OCTOBER 1969

First LEADERSHIP ATLANTA Seminar Held September 29

Leadership Atlanta, the community's first effort to develop a core of civic leadership for the future, was launched September 29 with a challenge that business communities must face the task of mixing rapid urban growth with enjoyable living.

Fifty-two potential leaders heard John W. Feild, Director of the Center for Policy Analysis for the U. S. Conference of Mayors, outline the problems that urban development and growth are imposing on the nation's cities. In spirited open discussion the group reviewed ways the business and political leadership of the community can help overcome the perplexing difficulties of the urban community in the 1970's.

After the presentation by Mr. Feild, Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. and Atlanta Chamber of Commerce President Frank Carter joined the guest speaker in an extensive question and answer session on Atlanta activities and problems.

The Leadership Atlanta participants represent major businesses and service groups in the area. They were chosen for present and future leadership qualities.

The Chamber will hold these monthly sessions to study various urban problems and their possible solutions.

John W. Feild of the U. S. Conference of Mayors addresses the first session on Leadership Atlanta. The program, which is designed to train Atlanta's next generation of community leaders, will continue for 10 months.

J. L. Jerden, Pritchard and Jerden, has produced over $5,500 in new memberships, with Richard Bell, Pope & Carter, running a close third with a production figure of $3,200.00.

The festival, which continues through November 8, is intended to enhance Atlanta's goodwill toward Denmark and intensify Atlanta's interest in Danish products. Similar festivals have been held in Rochester, Philadelphia and Phoenix.

The festival is sponsored jointly by the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Danish Fashion Association, Danish Agriculture and Marketing Board, Denmark Cheese Association, Danish National Travel Office, and Scandanavian Airlines System.

Main exhibits will be in the space atop the Merchandise Mart, and other exhibits will be in stores near Peachtree Center and several surburban supermarkets.

Entire I-285 to Open October 15

The circumferential highway, call it I-285, the Inner Loop, the Outer Loop, the Atlanta By-Pass, or whatever, (but most will call it Blessed) will be opened to traffic for its entire 63-mile length on or about October 15.

Its opening gives Atlanta a brief moment of hope. Vehicular traffic has just about reached the saturation point on major arterial highways serving Atlanta, and I-285 will help provide a smidgen of time until other major arteries as well as expanded mass transit facilities can be built.

But the most significant result of this opening may be the efficiency, cooperation and speed in construction of the final 6.9 miles of I-285 between the Bankhead Highway in Atlanta and U. S. 41 in Cobb County. This $15 million project was one of, if not the most, complicated construction jobs in the history of the State Highway Department. It involved five prime contractors, a number of sub contractors and 13 public utilities and government agencies. Yet it will be opened to traffic on the originally scheduled date, and within the time alloted limit of 26 months.

The State Highway Department deserves congratulations for a job well done. So does MacDougald Construction Company, which had the main roadway contract; the bridge contractors, and all other agencies involved. Highway Department officials controlling the project went all out in their efforts to finish on time. They had good cooperation in nearly all instances.

There have been times in the past when less complicated Interstate contracts have dragged on for four years.

The Highway Department now has shown that it can get the job done efficiently in the congested urban area.

The Atlanta Chamber extends its congratulations and appreciation to all concerned, and urges that the experience gained on this project be applied to all future contracts in the Metropolitan Atlanta area. It's a matter of survival or strangulation.

Hanes Talks Tax Revision

Attorney Paul Hanes, Executive Secretary of the Georgia Tax Revision Commission, outlined prospects for tax revision recently before the Chamber's Public Finance and Taxation Committee.

Hanes, associated with the firm of Heyman and Sizemore, told the Committee that the goals of the 1969 tax revision effort were to cut red tape, remove inequities, and improve the enforcement of Georgia's present tax laws.

In the personal income tax field, Hanes predicted the commission would recommend accomplishing what the legislature attempted this year—pegging the personal income taxes to federal adjusted gross income, requiring a minimum number of adjustments, and making slight revisions in the rate schedule.

One of the commission's two subcommittees will recommend removing most exemptions to the state sales tax, such as on new production machinery, farm machinery, feed, seed, and fertilizer. The commission's other subcommittee has recommended that local governments be authorized to levy either a one percent local option sales or a one percent local option income tax, sharing the revenue among local governments and school systems. The Chamber has advocated such a broadening of local tax revenue sources for several years.

Hanes expressed doubt that any change would be made in motor fuel tax rates, but said consideration might be given to further definition of the "user" of such fuel, in order to tax fuel sold for non-highway purposes. On intangibles, Hanes predicted some structural changes which would ease reporting and enforcement problems, but would exempt small savers and investors. Another recommendation would exempt household furnishings from the property tax.

Hanes said the Tax Revision Commission's final report and recommendations would be published early in the fall.

Sheats Speaks on Law Reform

Harold Sheats

Fulton County Attorney Harold Sheats advocated strong constitutional home rule at the September meeting of the Chamber's Local and State Affairs Committee.

Sheats, Chairman of the County and Municipal Government Committee of the State Constitution Revision Commission, said the main thrust of his committee would be to recommend a workable form of home rule for local governments, preferably one which could be changed only by general law. This would virtually eliminate the local courtesy practice now used in the passage of local bills in the legislature.

The Fulton County Attorney pointed out the difficulty of adopting a new constitution all at once, stating that if such a document contained one broadly unpopular section, the electorate might defeat the whole document because of one or two provisions.

Sheats expressed hope that any new constitution would contain provisions permitting consolidation of both public services and governments in Georgia.

The Local and State Affairs Committee, led by attorney Clifford Oxford, is making preparations to evaluate the forthcoming report and recommendations of the Institute of Public Administration on consolidation of Atlanta and Fulton County.

Atlanta Gets New Air Service

Two major airlines have introduced daily nonstop flights between Atlanta and San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Dallas/Ft. Worth.

National Airlines made its debut October 1 with two daily nonstop flights to and from San Francisco, and Eastern Airlines introduced nonstop flights September 23 to Los Angeles and Dallas/Ft. Worth.

National, the sixth largest U. S. domestic air carrier, will serve 43 cities with the addition of Atlanta, and a 139-passenger DC-8 jet aircraft will serve their Atlanta route. Seeking to complement the Atlanta-San Francisco service, National has applied for other Atlanta routes to southern and midwest points.

Eastern will have three daily round-trips between Atlanta and Los Angeles, and six daily flights between Atlanta and Dallas/Ft. Worth. On its Los Angeles run, Eastern will use its newest aircraft, the giant 203-passenger McDonnell/Douglas DC-8-61.

Agri-Leaders of the Year Chosen

Hampton Daughtry congratulates Mr. & Mrs. Robert Fowler on Mr. Fowler's selection as one of six "Agri-Leaders of the Year."

The Agri-Business Club of the Atlanta Chamber honored six "Agri-Leaders of the Year" from a 23-county area surrounding Metropolitan Atlanta in ceremonies held September 11.

Selected by a panel of judges in this new Chamber project were three agri-businessmen and three farmers as follows:

Agri-Business Category

—Dorsey A. Duffey, President of Duffey's Sausage Company, Carrollton

—Robert Fowler, President and Manager of Fowler Fertilizer Company, Covington

—Ralph Griffin, Manager of Farmers Mutual Exchange, Griffin

Farmers Category

—W. Lester Hall, Auburn

—James Earl Mansell, Roswell

—Phil Ogletree Sr., Griffin

The announcement of the winners was made by Hampton Daughtry, Agri-Business Club President, and Lowry Gillespie of Georgia Power Company, Chairman of the Agri-Leader program, at a luncheon for the recipients. The winners were also guests at a dinner in the Stadium Club and a ball game in which the Braves obligingly beat the Giants 5 to 3.

R. H. Harris Named

R. H. Harris

R. H. Harris, Chairman of the Chamber's Aviation Committee, has been named Eastern Region manager of General Electric's Defense Programs Division.

In his new post, Harris will be responsible for marketing the company's aerospace and aircraft engine products through eight districts in 20 states. The divisions' regional headquarters have been moved from New York City to Atlanta.

Atlanta Magazine

Each month, beginning in January, ATLANTA Magazine will feature major stories on the city's and the South's business world, including in-depth looks at business trends, entertaining profiles on business leaders, and informative and interesting briefs on economic developments throughout the region.

One, two, and three year subscriptions to ATLANTA Magazine cost $8, $14, and $20 respectively. Subscriptions can be charged to either Bank Americard, C&S Charge or Master Charge.

Operation Breakthrough

A new federal housing program, designed to explore innovative materials and methods in construction of "modest income" housing, has been endorsed in principle by the Atlanta Chamber's Housing and Redevelopment Committee.

The program, designated as "Operation Breakthrough," received the attention of the Chamber Committee at a meeting during which officials of the Federal Housing Administration explained its finer points.

Declaring its support of the concept of "Breakthrough," the Committee, led by Chairman Denver D. Gray, Travelers Insurance Co., urged City of Atlanta officials to submit an application to seek a pilot program here.

Atlanta is in competition with several other cities for selection as a "prototype" city in the program. If successful in its bid, Atlanta would provide one or perhaps two sites of land in the Model Cities area, plus another larger tract of land, for use in the "Breakthrough" effort.

"Operation Breakthrough" is being administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. Essentially, it proposes to use appropriate vacant land for demonstrating the use of pre-constructed housing units and other innovative methods.

The prototype units would be literally a "housing laboratory" for some time after construction.

The land and structures on it eventually would revert to the city.

Chamber President Frank Carter, at the request of the Housing and Redevelopment Committee, conveyed the Committee's position to HUD officials.

He said: "Although Atlanta has made great strides in recent years to meet its housing needs, it is obvious that mere brick and mortar are not sufficient in themselves. It will require imaginative planning, coordinated efforts at every level of government, and dedicated follow-through from the entire community, if our urban centers are to overcome their acute housing problems."

"Volunteer Atlanta" Created

A two-year study of community needs and the techniques of matching Atlanta volunteer workers with the most essential jobs has resulted in the creation of a major service agency—"Volunteer Atlanta."

Sponsored jointly by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, the Atlanta Junior League, the Community Council of the Atlanta Area, Economic Opportunity Atlanta and the Community Chest of Atlanta, "Volunteer Atlanta" will serve as a clearing house for the thousands of Atlantans who want to give their time and talents in community service.

"Volunteer Atlanta" will be officially opened Monday, October 13, when Mayor Ivan Allen Jr. leads ceremonies in the headquarters at 936 Gordon Street, S. W. The Mayor is proclaiming the week of October 13-19 "Volunteer Atlanta Week."

Officers of the new organization are Eugene T. Branch, chairman; Mrs. Frazier Durrett, vice chairman; and Sam Wilburn, treasurer.

"Volunteer Atlanta" was created as a result of the Atlanta Junior League's extensive study on the need for volunteer workers among the many service agencies in the Atlanta area, and how volunteer bureaus worked in other cities. The League submitted the study and proposal to other civic and service organizations, who joined them in sponsorship.

The preliminary study indicated a present need for more than 6,000 volunteer workers. A professional staff has been selected to place volunteers in jobs where their services can best be utilized.

Urban Action Forum Meets

A delegation of Atlanta business leaders joined their counterparts from several Southern states for a one-day Urban Action Forum in Chattanooga Tuesday, October 7.

Concurrent working sessions searched for answers to urban problems in four major areas: crime, education, housing and manpower. Participants shared the highlights of the workshop sessions and continued their discussions during a lunch program.

Similar forums are scheduled in several urban centers throughout the eastern part of the nation. Some nationally known authorities will appear on panels at the various sessions.

Hughes Named Chamber General Manager

Edmund W. Hughes

Edmund W. Hughes has been named general manager of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. Opie L. Shelton, Chamber Executive Vice President announced that the appointment was effective September 15.

Hughes was previously an account executive with Bell & Stanton, a public relations firm, and has been handling the public relations phase of the Chamber's Forward Atlanta program.

From 1962 through 1968 he was the managing director of the Greater Atlanta Traffic and Safety Council. Prior to that he was an editorial writer and a reporter for the Atlanta Journal, specializing in local government and urban affairs.

As general manager, he will be charged with overseeing the Chamber's various program activities.

A native of Birmingham, Alabama, Hughes is a journalism graduate of the University of Alabama. He is a member of the Board of Directors of Big Brothers of Atlanta and Volunteer Atlanta, and has been serving as secretary of the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority.

Old Smokey

"Old Smokey," the city's ancient incinerator located in the shadow of Atlanta's mushrooming downtown skyscrapers, is scheduled to undergo a $2.5 million face lifting which will probably still leave it the number one belching air polluter on the Atlanta scene. Or so say officials charged with such matters in city government.

Long under fire as the city's worst source of air pollution, often leaving the entire downtown section under a blanket of smoke, the old installation just doesn't lend itself to effective modernization. Sanitary Department Director Ralph Hulsey says that even with the planned infusion of ta[illegible] dollars, the best that could be hop[illegible] for would be a 50 percen[illegible]

Actually, Hulsey has expressed his preference for building smaller incinerator units away from the down- [illegible] the Mason [illegible] for special [illegible] tion use. AFGE LOCAL FILES PETITION FOR UNION RECOGNITION: NLRB TO SET AN ELECTION DATE

The first big step toward gaining exclusive union representation for HUD employees was taken April 20 when the AFGE local filed a 1,400-name petition with the National Labor Relations Board.

The NLRB will soon order a 10-day posting of its election notice on all official bulletin boards in the HUD Building. George Thornton, president of the AFGE local, said the notice, giving full details about the election arrangements, will probably go up before May 1.

Thornton said 1,400 employees who petitioned to have AFGE represent them, equal 43 percent of all employees eligible to vote. HUD management has determined that 3,230 are eligible to be represented. Those ineligible include such categories as personnel professionals, auditors and investigators, and others.

Under NLRB regulations, an election can be called if 30 percent or more of eligibles petition for an election. One union must win 50 percent plus one of the total number of ballots cast to win exclusive recognition as bargaining agent.

There is a chance that voters may have a three-way choice in the election: to vote for AFGE, or for no union, or for the NFFE local that has suddenly launched a membership drive in the HUD Building. The NFFE can get on the ballot if it manages to sign up only 10 percent of the eligibles. NFFE is using paid organizers at a number of locations made available by HUD.

HUD officials say they did not invite NFFE to come in at the last moment.

CLEANLINESS IS NOT NEXT TO GODLINESS. NEXT TIME YOU HEAR SOMEONE SAY "LOOK AT THOSE DIRTY HIPPIES CAMPAIGNING FOR PEACE" REMEMBER THAT PONTIUS PILOT WASHED HIS HANDS.

MERIT SHAFTING

(by ____ ____)

Personnel, the champion of merit staffing, recently engaged in what many people in Personnel are now calling "merit shafting." In essence, Personnel selected a new team leader, GS-14, for its Operations Division who is totally unfamiliar with the work of that Division. More experienced hands were given a song and dance when they questioned the selection.

One candidate, for instance, was told that he was passed over because he didn't like classification. Apparently, the important thing is to "like" classification regardless of whether you know it. Another got the shaft for being emotional--feelings being taboo in Personnel, since they indicate human sensitivity. A third, who was acting team leader for quite a while, got no answer other than that Personnel bigwigs wanted someone with a management background. No one has yet been able to figure out what that means.

Everyone in Personnel freely admits that the individual selected is an intelligent woman--but brains alone are not enough when Personnel pulls out its qualification standards.

Well, it's good to know that Personnel is not immune to the kind of "shafting" that is known in other parts of the Agency.

(Quest is looking foward to see how equitably Personnel handles a grievance within its own area.)

NFFE DRIVES TO WIN OVER HUD EMPLOYEES

The belated drive by NFFE to represent HUD employees raises several questions:

1. Where has NFFE been all this time, and what have they done for the employees? and,
2. What were their organizers trying to suggest when, in attempting to get one of Quest's staff to sign the NFFE petition, they explained that the AFGE was "racist" because it was led by Blacks?

WATKINS GLEN AND THE "NEW FEDERALISM"

We all know now that when push comes to shove local option and the decentralized authority of "The New Federalism" take second place to the Administration's strident and racist cries against "forced integration" and Central Office power.

The Montgomery County (Md.) Housing Authority had decided to undertake a valorous social experiment in leasing, for public housing, newly constructed upper middle income townhouses in the suburbs. This was done despite some local outcry.

The Philadelphia Regional Office was in the process of determining whether the project was viable in order to put up the funds necessary to convert the Watkins Glen subdivision into public housing. This despite reported calls from Central Office officials who, living nearby, feared for property values over human values.

Quest has been informed that Watkins Glen was indeed economically feasible under a unit-cost averaging agreement worked out between the Regional Office and the Housing Authority.

But George Romney stepped in and had the last word. Claiming economic infeasibility, he interposed himself, as did George Wallace years ago on schoolhouse steps, and provided yet another example of our Nation's disgrace--that wide gap which public leaders are willing to see between America's promise and its fulfillment.

"HOW DO YOU ASK A MAN TO BE THE LAST MAN TO DIE FOR A MISTAKE?"

Excerts from the Congressional testimony of John Forbes Kerry

Mr. Kerry, 27 years old, is a former Navy Lieutenant j.g. and Vietnam Veteran, and winner of the Silver Star, Bronze Star, and three Purple Hearts.

...We could come back to this country, we could be quiet, we could hold our silence, we could not tell what went on in Vietnam, but we feel because of what threatens this country, not the reds, but the crimes which we are commiting that threaten it, that we have to speak out.

...The country doesn't know it yet but it has created a monster, a monster in the form of millions of men who have been taught to deal and to trade in violence and who are given a chance to die for the biggest nothing in history; men who have returned with a sense of anger and a sense of betrayal which no one has yet grasped.

...We are angry because we feel we have been used in the worst fashion by the administration of this country.

In 1970 at West Point Vice President Agnew said " some glamorize the criminal misfits of society while our best men die in Asian rice paddies to preserve the freedom which most of those misfits abuse,"

...his statement is a terrible distortion from which we can only draw a very deep sense of revulsion, and hence the anger of some of the men who are here in Washington today. It is a distortion because we in no way consider ourselves the best men of this country; because those he calls misfits were standing up for us in a way that nobody else in this country dared to; because so many who have died would have returned to this country to join the misfits in their efforts to ask for an immediate withdrawal from South Vietnam; because so many of those best men have returned as quadruplegics and amputees--and they lie forgotten in Veterans Administration Hospitals in this country...

...from our experience, there is nothing in South Vietnam which could happen that realistically threatens the United States of America. And to attempt to justify the loss of one American life in Vietnam, Cambodia, or Laos by linking such loss to the preservation of freedom, which those misfits supposedly abuse, is to us the height of criminal hypocrisy,...

...We saw America lose her sense of morality as she accepted very cooly a My Lai and refused to give up the image of American soldiers who hand out chocolate bars and chewing gum.

We learned the meaning of free fire zones, shooting anything that moves, and we watched while America placed a cheapness on the lives of orientals.

We watched the United States falsification of body counts, in fact the glorification of body counts....

Now we are told that the men who fought there must watch quietly while American lives are lost so that we can exercise the incredible arrogance of Vietnamizing the Vietnamese.

Each day to facilitate the process by which the United States washes her hands of Vietnam someone has to give up his life so that the United States doesn't have to admit something that the entire world already knows, so that we can't say that we have made a mistake. Someone has to die so that President Nixon won't be, and these are his words, "the first President to lose a war."

We are asking Americans to think about that because how do you ask a man to be the last man to die in Vietnam? How do you ask a man to be the last man to die for a mistake?

I understand that 57 percent of all those entering the VA hospitals talk about suicide. Some 27 percent have tried, and they try because they come back to this country and they have to face what they did in Vietnam, and then they come back and find the indiffernce of a country that doesn't really care....

Americans seem to have accepted the idea that the war is winding down, at least for Americans,...

We veterans can only look with amazement on the fact that this country has been unable to see that there is absolutely no difference between ground troops and a helicopter crew, and yet people have accepted a differentiation fed them by the administration.

No ground troops are in Laos so it is all right to kill Laotians by remote control. But believe me the helicopter crews fill the same body bags and they wreak the same kind of damage on the Vietnamese and Laotian countryside as anybody else, and the President is talking about allowing that to go on for many years to come.

We are here in Washington also to say that the problem of this war is not just a question of war and diplomacy. It is part and parcel of everything that we are trying as human beings to communicate to people in this country--the question of racism, which is rampant in the military, and so many other questions such as the use of weapons; the hypocrisy of our taking umbrage in the Geneva Conventions and using that as justification for a continuation of this war when we are more guilty than any other body of violations of those Geneva Conventions; in the use of free fire zones, harassment interdiction fire, search and destroy missions, the bombings, the torture of prisoners, the killing of prisoners, all accepted policy by many units in South Vietnam.

We are also here to ask, and we are here to ask vehemently, where are the leaders of our country? Where is the leadership? ...Where are they now that we, the men whom they sent off to war, have returned?...These men have left all the casualties and retreated behind a pious shield of public rectitude. They have left the real stuff of their reputations bleaching behind them in the sun of this country.

Finally, this administration has done us the ultimate dishonor. They have attempted to disown us and the sacrifices that we made for this country. In their blindness and fear they have tried to deny that we are veterans or that we served in Nam....

We wish that a merciful God could wipe away our own memories of that service as easily as this administration has wiped away their memories of us. But all they have done and all that they can do by this denial is to make it more clear than ever our own determination to undertake one last mission--to search out and destroy the last vestige of this barbaric war, to pacify our hearts, to conquer the hate and the fear that have driven this country these last ten years and more, so when 30 years from now our brothers go down the street without a leg, without an arm, or a face, and small boys ask why, we will be able to say "Vietnam" and not mean a desert, not a filthy obscene memory, but mean instead the place where America finally turned and where soldiers like us helped it in the turning.

A PROPOSAL: A SLIDING INTEREST RATE FOR ALL FAMILIES - - Al Aiken

"Announcement was made....., that the maximum interest rate on home mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration would be reduced to 4-1/4 percent effective with respect to all applications received in FHA field offices...."[1]

I guess you don't believe the announcement made by FHA above. But it is actually accurate! It was made on April 21, 1950; the year 1950 has the record for the most housing units built in the immediate post war period---1,396,000 units. A large part of our present housing shortage could be relieved if our present interest rates on home mortgages were more in line with FHA's 1950 interest rate.

The Housing Act of 1968 provides subsidized housing under Sections 235 and 236 for families with incomes 135 percent of public housing income limits. The families with incomes higher than the limits under Sections 235 and 236, families with incomes from $6,000 to $11,000 are being totally ignored by the present housing act. Referring to Table I, most of the average annual incomes of workers in private, nonagricultural industries fall within this category:

Manufacturing - $6,950; Mining - $8,500; Construction - $10,150; Transportation - $8,100 and Wholesale Trade - $7,150. The average annual income for all private nonagricultural industrial workers is only $6,200, which puts many of the workers just above the income limits for housing under Sections 235 and 236.

The monthly payment (principal and interest) for a $30,000 home with a 25 year mortgage with ten percent down is $202, which with another $60 added for taxes and insurance totals $262. This is substantially more than 25 percent of the monthly income of any of the nonagricultural workers listed in Table I, which can be seen by comparing their weekly earnings. This monthly payment of $262 is over 50 percent of the monthly income of the average nonagricultural worker who earns $119.78 a week or $479 a month.

Attempts at the integration of suburban communities have been almost complete failures because of the lack of a comprehensive housing act taking into account families with minimal incomes up to families with annual incomes of $12,000. Many of the suburban families earning $8,000 to $12,000 would be less likely to oppose integration in suburban communities if they were also helped by the federal government with an interest subsidy on their mortgages. What I am proposing is a sliding interest rate from 1 percent to 6-3/4 percent which will take into account families with incomes from around $6,000 to $12,000. The federal government would continue providing interest subsidies under Sections 235 and 236. The Federal Reserve would reduce reserve requirements to member banks who would loan money for mortgages at rates from 3 percent to 6-3/4 percent, the rate depending upon the family's income (the upper limit could be adjusted to be ½ percent lower than the prevailing interest rate set by the Federal Housing Administration).

A sliding interest rate would 1) act as a lever in integrating the suburbs, 2) expand housing production, 3) reduce the friction between the lower middle class and people qualifying for Section 235 and 236 housing, and 4) help to reduce the present unemployment rate of 5.9 percent.

DISCRIMINATORY EMPLOYMENT REVISITED

In our last issue the article "What's Sauce for the Goose Should be.." called upon the Under Secretary to rectify an apparent double standard in pay and training for certain employees. That is, a prep school student was being treated differently than inner-city youth.

Since that article we have addressed a letter to the Under Secretary requesting that he present his plan to rectify the situation to Quest for publication. An attempt was also made to gain a personal interview with him, but to no avail.

We have been told by Assistant Secretary Condon that he is looking into the situation and that a report was to be ready on April 30. We have yet to see that report.

Time, we should remind the administration, will not make this question moot. Even if this young man leaves the Department to return to school over 100 other youth will remain and should not be discriminated against.

LILLBURN W. BOGGS?

Several people have inquired as to who was the Lillburn W. Boggs we alluded to, along with several other luminaries, in our March issue.

He was the Governor of Missouri who, bowing to public sentiment and his own prejudices, ordered the summary execution of Mormon leaders and the expulsion of members of the Church of the Latter Day Saints from the state.

It is interesting to note that the order was given to Major General Alexander Doniphan of the State's militia who refused to carry out the illegal and immoral order to murder innocents. Doniphan was neither "brainwashed" by his superiors, nor was his career damaged by his refusal, and he went on to serve his state and nation with valor during the Civil War.

HUD librarians rejected the following Book of the Week review on the grounds that it was "shocking," "radical," and takes a "youthful point of view" in which members of "top staff are not particularly interested." It might be noted that both author and reviewer are in their late thirties. Publication of the review here is an expression of Quest's unswerving faith in the acumen and emotional stamina of "top staff."

The Uses of Disorder, Personal Identity and City Life, by Richard Sennett. New York, Alfred P. Knopf, 1970. 198p., $5.95 (Library No.: 711.4 S25u)

by Barbara Hogan

Imagine a diversified community of blacks, whites, Puerto Ricans, orientals, Indians, poor, rich, middle class, upperclass, union laborers, radical students, bankers and brick layers--all with differing life styles and disparate moral commitments, all actually involved with one another --where the reigning positive values are DISORDER, CHAOS, ANARCHY, constant unremitting TENSION, the pain of sudden CHANGE, and CHANCE.

Envision this community with a pre-planned high density (and no "behavioral sink" phenomena), without bureaucracies to excercise an impersonal objective power over its services or its political activities, and without police to control the expression of hostilities that arise naturally, and perhaps daily, in a community of blacks who hate whites, and visa versa, or white, blue collar workers who dislike and distrust everyone else: black, brown, middleclass, prosperous.

Picture this Utopia where people would actually know each other and must deal with each other on a daily basis in order to survive. Here there would be no central ultimate Authority to whom an outraged neighbor could turn for help if a radio were being played too loud next door or if a local builder were constructing his new store where neighborhood children like to gather to play.

Here people would have to talk with one another, to argue, to picket, or to bring some other kind of social pressure to bear when they had grievances against neighbors. This would be a "survival community," where deviations and differences are either ignored or encouraged, and where the open, verbal expression of anger is paramount to maintaining a community where physical violence does not take place.

Sociologist Sennett sees this, only partially described, as the ideal city. And if all this "sounds as though anarchy were being brought into the city as a positive principle." he says, "That is exactly what I intend."

As he sees things, "precisely because the people had to deal with each other in order to survive, some kind of uneasy truce between these hostile camps would have to be arranged between the people themselves. And the act of participating in some sort of truce would force people to look at each other, if only to find areas in which some tenuous, unloving bond could be forged."

His ideas catapult from Marx, Freud, Erikson, Malraux, Jane Jacobs (with whom he take exception) and from a long line of writers, philosophers, psychiatrists, as well as urban planners. His concept is very much in line with current trends in psychotherapy, such as encounter groups or confrontation therapy. He has come up with a life style for future cities that any urban planner with a "God Complex" or just the normal amount of human repellence to sudden pain might shudder to contemplate.

His thesis is that "there appears in adolescence a set of strengths and desires which can lead in themselves to a self-imposed slavery; that the current organization of city communities encourages men to enslave themselves in adolescent ways; (but) that it is possible to break through this framework to achieve an adulthood whose freedom lies in its acceptance of disorder and painful dislocation...

"The threat of being overwhelmed by difficult social interaction" that occurs in adolescence, Sennett believes, "is dealt with by fixing a self-image in advance (of adulthood) by making oneself a fixed object rather than an open person liable to be touched by a social situation." This "purification mechanism" (as in "defense mechanism") is what makes people seek "purity" in their sexual relationships or the sameness and deadness of the suburbs in their community relationships. It is what makes city planners think they can create a future that does not allow for change. It is what makes the planner feel he has "failed" when a natural evolution of life style occurs.

Sennett plainly feels, however, that "the idea that the 'people' are straining at the bit against the 'system' is much too naive." More realistically, he sees that "the people and the system are in conspiracy with each other to establish a comfortable slavery to the known and the routine."

So, why should people want to make over their lives and dwell in those disordered cities? And how could it be accomplished economically? He answers. Beautifully! But, to paraphrase Gertrude Stein, What is the next question?

"BROWN BAG" SESSIONS

The MPD weekly brown bag session is a winner. It happens every Tuesday noon, usually in Room 7202. Sample of recent guest speakers: a Colonel from Blackman's Development Center; a psychiatrist talking about self-destructive children; Mary McGrory of the Star; three people from D.C. Women's Liberation; a rep from Americans for Indian Opportunity; a New York Times urban reporter.

Especially noteworthy was Dr. Frances Welsing, a Black psychiatrist speaking on the psychological origins of white supremacy. She has a thesis that envy of color is the basis of the racism practiced by whites against Blacks, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Indians and other people of color all over the world. (Even Jews, she noted, were originally dark-skinned.)

The doctor noted that people of color make up 7/8 of the world population. The other 1/8 (whites) tries to assert its superiority because of a feeling of "inadequacy" or "inferiority" based on a "genetic deficiency"--the inability to produce color. In other words, whites can't produce skin pigmentation and this makes them feel inferior. So....they act superior and try to mess up the minds of people with color.

Dr. Welsing cites certain sociological phenomena to buttress her theory: the quest for a suntan; colored makeup; sexual attraction of whites to people with color.

Several people (mostly white) in both the brown bag audience and a later discussion group challenged the theory and evidence given to support it. They cited economic and class discrimination, and examples of oppression by whites against whites (e.g., Ireland). And they said the suntan fad was too recent a phenomenon to carry much weight as evidence.

Verrrrrry interesting.....and a rather warm topic for discussion. Kudos to Brown Bag organizer Doris Kidder Johnson!

First the administration put up air raid shelter signs in the hallways. Next they sealed the fire exits against provocators. Since May 5 the North lobby has been closed against peaceniks and freaks. Doesn't it all make you feel more secure?

QUEST, MOST OF ALL, NEEDS INFORMATION AND ARTICLES

ANGEL OF MERCY?

Witnesses were somewhat appalled to see one of HUD's security guards, Officer Chocolo, being chewed out by the Health Unit's Chief Nurse, on April 5.

His crime? He assisted a woman employee who had injured herself in front of the building, up to the Health Unit. Unfortunately, Officer Chocolo did this at 8:40 a.m., five minutes before the Unit is scheduled to open.

Moral: don't become sick or injured before 8:45 a.m.

APRIL 22 PEACE RALLY

The administration of HUD deserves to be complemented, not for allowing, but, for facilitating the anti-war rally in front of the building on April 22.

The Committee on Urban Priorities and Peace, as well as AFGE Local 476 which co-sponsored the event, welcomed the turn around in institutional attitude.

Key speakers at the rally were Congressman Ronald V. Dellums and several Vietnam Veterans for Peace.

FNMA SCREWS THE CONSUMER

Unfortunately, this will probably not be the last time someone will need to remind HUD that we're here to serve the general populace not the mortgage bankers. The April issue of Consumer Reports lists some of the anti-consumer provisions in the new FNMA mortgage.

Examples are: 1.a pre-payment penalty clause; 2. prohibitions on the mortgagee from paying interest on escrow accounts; 3. proceeds from fire insurance go to the lender to apply to the mortgage while forcing the homeowner to finance repairs; and 4. it provides the homeowner no protection against faulty construction.

CU calls for people with expertise in mortgage matters to advise Mr. Romney and FNMA on how to write a pro-consumer mortgage. We suggest you send carbon copies of any advice to CU also.

AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE

For we who live in Washington, O. Roy Chalk is an enemy of the people. Chalk, who runs the bus company, has steadily increased fares while services decline and he apparently separates the company's more lucrative properties into separate holding companies.

The Superior Court has recently held that the city has no power to enforce full payment of fares under existing ordinances.

Based upon that decision, Quest hopes that some group takes the leadership in paying only 25 cents for transportation. We advocate this because we feel it best that Chalk be driven out of town (economicaly that is) and that the company be taken over as a city owned service.

In the interim we hope that any city city council action to protect Chalk by establishing new ordinances be strongly opposed.

FAKE TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES

Among many notices and announcements on Personnel's bulletin boards are several advertising training and employment exchange opportunities that the Department apparently has no intention of allowing any employee to take advantage of.

One such program is the Congressional Intern Program sponsored by the Civil Service Commission and the American Political Science Association. While both the Commission and APSA feel that it is worthwhile for academic persons to have the benefit of working on Capitol Hill, HUD doesn't seem to recognize the program's value.

HUD has not chosen to participate in the program for at least two years. If HUD does not plan to allow participation why advertise it; why let employees waste their time filling in forms and resumes; and why act surprised when no one from HUD participates?

The employees at the Forrestal Building (Navy Department) are notified weekly, via staff bulletin, of their cafeteria's menu. That seems like a more useful expenditure of paper than some of the garbage we receive in our staff bulletins.

JOIN THE ADMEN AND SEE THE ARMY

(excerpts)

As you know, the Army's spending $10.6 million of our money telling us what a great Army it is and how we ought to join it.

* * * * * *

Scene: The Pentagon offices of Gen. Sydney (Old Blood 'n' Guts) Zapp, one of the toughest campaigners in the Army Advertising Corps. Enter Nattering & Snith, bearing portfolios.

Nattering: I think we've put together just what you want general. See? Here's this sexy babe with a come-hither look and the slogan on which we center the whole campaign:"Hey, There, Killer,You Want the Army!"

Gen. Zapp (surprised): Killer?

Snith: Right! We appeal to the killer instinct. You'll get the kind of recruits you want-- instinctive killers.

The general (frowning): Look here, boys, I've served in a hundred campaigns and never once did we use words like "kill," "killer" or "killed."

* * * * * * *

Nattering: Granted. But that was before the FTC started cracking down on truth in advertising. The truth is, general, that the prime function of any army is to kill people when the need arises--the more the better.

Snith (eagerly): Listen to this jingle we've whipped up. sir. We'll get the Andrew Sisters to sing it:

"It's so thrilling.
So spine chilling,
So deeply self-fulfilling
To legally go killing--
Join today's killer Army today!"

Nattering (pouring it on): Or this general:

"Get yourself some bullets,
Get yourself a gun,
Join our killer Army
For unrestricted fun"

The General (angrily): Now, hold on! We're thinking more along the lines of educational opportunity. A slogan like:"The Army Can Take Your Hobby and Turn It into A Career!"

Snith: Right! We've got a 30-second TV spot. Shows this Jack-the-Ripper type with a big knife prowling these dark alleys. Then we hit 'em with your slogan: "The Army Can Take Your Hobby and..."

UNION RECOGNITION ELECTION SET - JUNE 24

HUD EMPLOYEES VOTE FOR A VOICE

George Thornton

John F. Kennedy gave us the right, as workers, to "collective bargaining," to enforce our rights through a union contract, to have each lone voice among us heard in the actions of a strong, viable union.

The present administration has rewritten Kennedy's order, forcing federal workers to go for all or nothing in order to have any protection. A union can have either exclusive recognition or no real status at all. We at HUD are going for all on June 24th, with a secret ballot election for union representation by our own AFGE Local #476.

By winning "exclusive recognition" we can negotiate a union contract calling for:

1. Real educational opportunities aimed at promotions.
2. An end to all discrimination in hiring and promotions.
3. An active program of career advancement.
4. Equality in parking arrangements.
5. A day care program that employees of all levels can afford.
6. A real grievance procedure with third party arbitration, and many other protections and improvements.

All HUD employees should vote (you don't have to be a member) for AFGE Local #476.

THE SETTING UP OF STRAW MEN

The scenario appears to be right out of the biblical tale of Jacob and Esau with HUD expecting the workers to trade their birthright for a bowl of porridge.

Since Sam Simmons and Lester Condon issued their joint eight-page report on April 9 on actions taken to rectify employee discontent we have been rereading it in disbelief. Either they view the employees as stupid (and still submissive) or they themselves are that way. The report is but another example of self-serving bull.

Instead of speaking to the issues exposed by the Task Force Against Racism, HUD identified its own issues, dreamed up its own answers, and set its own target dates for completion.

Where the Task Force identified rampant racism and asked for remedies and opportunities HUD's administration patted itself on the back for things like placing "forty colorful chairs...in the (40) ladies rest rooms." Other examples include taking the car-pool information rack off of a stand and hanging it on the wall, and providing approximately 1,600 nameplates for employees. In possibly their greatest coup, administration has placed park benches on the west side of the building facing upon

PARTICULARS ON VOTING

Polls will be open from 8:30 to 4:30

There will be a polling place on each floor of the HUD building. Each organizational unit will have its own polling place. Virtually every HUD employee is eligible to vote. Trained workers at the polls will have a list of eligible voters and will be able to explain the ballot.

Staff bulletins are out with a list of the polls and instructions for voting. Check the employee bulletin boards for information.

All ballots will be secret.

With your vote on June 24, you can decide whether there will be an employees' union here at HUD, and whether that union will speak out strongly for the interests of all HUD employees.

the noisy heavy construction going on next door--the benches are relatively inaccessible since for the last nine months all of the fire-doors to the building have been kept locked.

Is there then any wonder as to why, after Condon failed to respond to a May 4 request to clarify the Department's stand against racism, over 400 employees gathered at his office to ask when their grievances would be resolved. Thinking that he was still running a plantation, Condon's sole response was to order the aggrieved people back to work.

Over 150 of those employees were suspended for demanding action of the person delegated to rectify the situation. Fortunately, the workers have secured a temporary injunction against the suspensions and unfair labor practices may be yet another charge for the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission to look into at their June 28 hearing on problems at HUD.

LET US NOW PRAISE THE NEW YORK TIMES

Neil Sheehan and the New York Times have provided us with a fine example of investigative reporting in their breaking of the story behind our nation's incredible involvment in S.E. Asia. This valuable service may well win them the Pulitzer.

Equally incredible is the Nixon Administration's latest attempt at suppressing First Amendment freedoms by taking legal action against the Times. Not since the early days of this republic when the government jailed critical newspaper editors under the Alien and Sedition Acts has the threat to basic liberties been as high. All this not because of a breach of national security but because the exposure strikes at the heart of our avowed purpose and is politically embarrassing.

Breached is the wall of deceit. No longer should a citizen be a true believer relying on a President to keep him informed. Assumption that the administration has more, and more reliable, information available to it cannot be a reason for the average citizen to abrogate his responsibility to keep informed.

Brushed aside is the veil. Vietnam was not just the case of a President lying in a moment of embarrassment (and all of us knowing it) as Eisenhower did when our U-2 overflight was shot down over the Soviet Union. Rather this was a case of an administration deceiving the populace for political reasons, maliciously lying while it dug a grave for 50,000 Americans (and perhaps a million Asians) and called it a tunnel.

Today the political shuffle is done to the tune of the POW question and one cannot foresee the day of total disengagement.

So many of us were amazed at the Nazis and how they not only methodically killed innocents but how they kept such accurate records of each gold filling extracted and each body shoveled into the crematoria. Such detail is difficult from 40,000 feet, and the close-in photographs of Mylai 4 tell only a fraction of the story. One may only guess the appalling statistics from our callous body counts, bomb tonnage, and acres defoliated.

Bureaucracies are comparable however, and as the Nazis did so did our military in recording in detail our poli-military plans and deeds in S.E. Asia. This is what the Times' exposé is revealing to us.

Yet as this information is revealed, information that the Nixon Administration claims it has never seen, we see the President drawing back. Here when the golden opportunity appears to reassess, to see the conniving, the initial mistake, the stupidity, the present administration tries to suppress the report.

Can their be doubt any longer as to whether or not Nixon has a plan (or the desire) for total withdrawal from Vietnam?

INCREASING OUR MINIMUM WAGE

On June 11 the D.C. Government announced that effective August 9 the minimum they will pay their employees will be $2.00 per hour. While even this is an incredibly low salary-- and one which will not aid anyone in the General Schedule-- there are some in the Department who earn far less ($1.60 per hour)--namely our part-timers and student-aides. Quest feels that their salaries should be raised to a comparable level.

FUNNY PRIORITIES

In the mad dance of public affairs policy this past year some interesting if not fancy footwork has resulted in the May issue of HUD CHALLENGE. Last December, perhaps anticipating CBS's The Selling of the Pentagon, the White House issued a memorandum to public affairs heads directing them to "curtail sharply your agency's FY 1971 plans for promoting the agency's programs and attempting to obtain support of special interest groups." In his memo, covered by the Washington Post, the President particularly cited "public relations promotions, fancy publications and exhibits aimed at a limited audience and similar extravagances". In light of the memorandum, it is interesting that HUD published the May issue of CHALLENGE which looks remarkably like a hand-out for the NATO Conference on Cities. The issue on "The International Scene" even includes an article on Indianapolis Conference sites "Unigov". Whether or not CHALLENGE is a "fancy publication", this issue was certainly aimed at a limited audience.

In this vein there is another interesting discrepancy in the federal public relations policy, above HUD public affairs control. The same presidential memo that spoke out against public relations extravagance warned against "reallocation of resources intended for other purposes" in attempt to circumvent the cutback. OMB's release of $100,000 in Model Cities funds to the Indianapolis convention comes close to just such ill intended reallocation.

Quest has also discovered that the department is making a movie on the history of housing, funds for which came from a proposed open communities public affairs budget. The absence of public information on open communities is not surprising. But the use of the funds for a politically safe subject like the history of housing is certainly the opposite extreme. In our flight from the sore toes and shaking fists in Warren, Michigan we have run into the arms of an"extravagance" that should, as the President said, "affront many of our citizens". Unless the White House memo is just so much more paper.

A PROPOSAL: AN URBAN HOMESTEADING ACT -- Jay Thal

On December 2, 1970, an article in the Wall Street Journal reported that more dwelling units have been lost in New York through abandonment in the last three years than to slum clearance in the last twenty years. The New York City situation is not especially unique in city cores.

There are many reasons for the increasing abandonment of urban real property--inadequate tax shelter, rent control, high maintenance costs, poor income potential, housing code enforcement, to name just a few.

The same day, as the article, a redevelopment official told me that stringent enforcement of housing codes would only exacerbate the abandonment problem leaving more people homeless.

This leaves us with an apparent dilemma--accelerate abandonment and displacement through code enforcement or forestall displacement problems by not enforcing codes, until the properties are dilapidated beyond redemption.

It need not be a dilemma. In order to answer the problem, I would propose drafting what could be called the "Urban Homestead Act of 197-".

Firstly, let me state that both properties abandoned by their owners (though still tenanted) and vacated properties should be treated in a similar fashion.

What is needed is the establishment of at least two legal fictions, the first being that an abandoned property may be treated like an abandoned child; i.e., that it be recognized as a ward of the state. Secondly, that irrespective of fact that a person does not possess title on a declared abandoned property that any improvement he makes on the property would be viewed as giving him a constructive title to the property similar to that of a mechanics lien.

1. A city, or its agent, would determine whether a property is abandoned or severely neglected based upon:
   a) failure of the title owner to pay taxes on the property
   b) persistent failure to keep the property substantially up to code standards, to such a degree as to make it an imminent health and safety hazard.
2. The city would declare the property abandoned and take it over by eminent domain and establish a non-profit corporation to handle it.
3. Existent tenants, relocatees, or others certified on an "urban homestead list" could then individually or on a cooperative or condominium basis rehabilitate the property. Loans and/or grants could be made available through the City's agent/LPA.
4. The signing of the construction/rehabilitation contract would be enough to establish - "Homestead" and a constructive lien on the property and against any other claimants.
5. Title would be transferred after a reasonable period of occupancy by the "Homesteader".

The affects would be numerous:

1. It might stimulate existent owners to restorative activity instead of having the property declared abandoned or become vacant.
2. It would prevent further deteriorating of abandoned or vacant structures due to vandalization or occupancy by undesirable persons since the homesteaders would have an interest in protecting the property.
3. It would, after rehabilitation, return the property to the tax roles--possibly at a higher valuation.
4. It would retard the loss of dwelling units into the lists of those unsafe for habitation.
5. It would provide another vehicle for homeownership and concomitant tax relief for an expanding group of homeowners.
6. It would provide housing at lower cost because of the lower (or nonexistent)acquisition costs.
7. It could provide the basis for a massive experiment in modules and rehabilitative housing systems technology where there are numerous and similar structures needing rehabilitation.
8. It would provide a mechanism for reintegrating the center city, which has been relegated to the rich or the extremely poor, with the middle class.

QUEST NEEDS WORKERS

Excerpts from Address by Mary D. Pinkard
Director, Program Analysis and Standards
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development
Before
The Mayor's All-City Conference on Women
Denver, Colorado
May 7-8, 1971

There are those, including some in the field of civil rights, who would have us believe that racism is the number one issue in human relations in the United States. And that this should take priority over all other issues. This is not my view. I think the struggle against sexism is just as urgent as the struggle against racism. I do not wish to choose one struggle over another.

I am a member of an oppressed minority and an oppressed majority at the same time--because I am both a Negro and a woman. I know first hand that there is no difference between Jim Crow and Jane Crow.

Both Negroes and women have been confined to traditional jobs, barred from supervisory positions, deprived of political importance, and subjected to social and professional segregation.

Any black woman in this country must be outraged. Outraged because many, including some black militants, would have us black women believe that the fight for equal rights for women is not our bag--it is the thing of the middle-class white woman; that the black woman has a duty first to fight for the human dynamic of self-respect for the black male; that because of the conditions of slavery, the black woman became a matriarch and Mr. Charlie's tool in the systematic emasculation and castration of the black male. This is a purely racist theory.

Strength on the part of the black woman was considered different from the same virtue in her white counterpart. When it was found in the white pioneer woman who crossed this country in a wagon train, or in an Irish woman who stole and connived that her family might be among the small percent that survived the steerage flight from potato blight and famine, it was called bravery and spunk. But when the same kind of strength was exhibited by the black woman she was called a matriarch and accused of emasculating and castrating her men.

We are told that the black woman historically has been able to find employment while the black man has been chronically unemployed and underemployed. The trouble with this is that it just is not so. The fact is that black women are at the very bottom of the totem pole when it comes to earning money. Consider these facts.

According to the Department of Labor, the average income of full-time year-round workers in 1970 was as follows:

White men	-	$8,104
Negro men	-	5,603
White women	-	4,700
Negro women	-	3,677

Women generally are the responsible heads of 5.2 million families--that's 11% of the families in this country. About 28% of the black families are headed by a woman and over half of them live in poverty.

Look at unemployment--nonwhite females have four times the unemployment rate of white men and twice the unemployment rate of black men. Among teenagers, one out of every three nonwhite girls is unemployed--one out of every five nonwhite boys is unemployed--one out of every 10 white boys is unemployed.

In my own agency--HUD--in our central office in Washington black women have an average grade of GS-5. White women are somewhat better off with an average grade of GS-7. Black men have an average grade of GS-7. White men have an average grade of GS-13.

The point I would make is that the degrading, dehumanizing and outrageous discrimination practiced against women is exactly the same in its effect upon human life as the degrading, dehumanizing and outrageous discrimination practiced against minority groups. I am old enough at the gamesmanship of civil rights to observe that the movement for women's rights is just about at the place where the movement for the rights of blacks was in the 40's and early 50's. I can recall in the early days of my intergroup relations work at HUD, when the subject of a staff meeting turned on the question of racial discrimination, the introduction of the subject was greeted by a few snickers of ridicule, a certain amount of impatience at what was considered by most to be irrelevant to more important business. That is exactly how the subject of women's rights is greeted today, even among those who make their living at this great game of equal opportunity.

Two hundred years ago Abigail Adams said to her husband, "If particular care and attention is not paid to the ladies, we are determined to foment a rebellion, and will not hold ourselves bound by any laws in which we have no voice or representation."

So the word Sisters, is Right On.

FEDS RALLY TO SUPPORT HUD TASK FORCE AGAINST RACISM

It was too long in coming, the numbers yet too few, but when Federal workers formed a moving circle of protest outside the HUD building on June 9, their convictions were deep, their anger was real.

They had come to show their support of the HUD Task Force Against Racism. They had come to display their anger that more than 150 members of the Task Force (most of them Black women) had been notified of suspensions from their jobs.

Some had already been suspended. Others were awaiting results of a court case against HUD's action. Their offense: seeking audience with Assistant Secretary Lester Condon to air grievances.

The Task Force supporters came knowing that the problem was also theirs, and they came from many areas: Department of Justice, Internal Revenue Service, Federal Reserve Board, Health Education and Welfare, Office of Economic Opportunity, Civil Rights Commission, American Federation of Government Employees, General Services Administration, National Institutes of Mental Health, Treasury, Lawyers Committee to End the War and HUD.

QUEST is not dishing out medals. No victory is apparent.

What is apparent is that the Complacent Bureaucrat is dying and the Impatient Revolutionary is being reborn. Which is, if one remembers, where it all began.

PROGRESS (?) IN OPEN HOUSING

On August 10, 1970, Secretary Romney stated that, "The Department has established as its goal the creation of open communities which will provide an opportunity for individuals to live within a reasonable distance of their job and daily activities by increasing housing options for low-income and minority families."

An admirable goal, but one the U.S. Civil Rights Commission suggests HUD is not meeting.

Under the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968 and the Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Housing, HUD is principally responsible for enforcement and administration of fair housing. Of late , there has been much discussion of the Department's position and practice with regard to all civil rights. As far as fair housing is concerned, the Civil Rights Commission has provided useful materials to inform us all about HUD's performance.

The Commission produced a report titled Federal Civil Rights Enforcement Effort in September, 1970. This report detailed the structure within HUD for dealing with civil rights and noted that "HUD is the only Federal department or agency apart from the Department of Justice whose chief civil rights office is at the Assistant Secretary level in the agency hierarchy." The Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity is on the same footing as all program assistant secretaries. HUD has legislation and it has a strong structure for implementing it. What has the Department done?

According to the Commission report, "effective administration and enforcement of the various civil rights laws relating to fair housing have not yet been achieved...HUD has barely begun to use the variety of available enforcement techniques and strategies at its command."

As an example, an FHA survey found that between the 1962 Executive Order and 1967 only 3.5% of FHA subdivision housing had been sold to blacks, .2% to American Indians, 2.0% to orientals and 3.1% to Spanish surnamed Americans. Of the 8,500 subdivisions reporting, more than half (4,800) were all white. Three hundred were all black and contained 70% of all black purchasers. FHA decided not to repeat the survey. Some people think it's better not to know how badly they're doing or how illegal governmental action can be. The Secretary has overruled FHA on this one. Racial and ethnic data regarding all HUD housing programs is now being collected. Let's keep our eyes open to see what is going to be done with this information in the future.

On May 10, 1971, the Commission published a second detailing the "progress" agencies had made in civil rights activities in the seven months since the original report. Of HUD the Commission said:

> "By April 1971, however, the Department had retreated from (its open communities) stance and now states that it is opposed to use of Federal leverage to promote economic integration. The hard facts of housing economics, however, suggest that racial integration cannot be achieved unless economic integration also is achieved. Thus the change in HUD's "open communities" policy may not only represent a narrowing of that agency's view of its fair housing responsibilities, but also may mark the beginning of the Federal Government's withdrawal from active participation in the effort to eliminate residential segregation.

HUD is in favor of housing desegregation so long as the "right" kind of "qualified" minority people can be found to move into the suburbs. Sounds familiar doesn't it? In the seven months between reports, the Commission says, "HUD has failed to improve its performance" and has even "regressed in the vigor with which it approaches its fair housing responsibilities."

To those who might hold that to expect change in a "mere" seven months is unrealistic the Commission retorts "time is running out".

The report continues,

> The legitimate expectations of minority group members that they finally were to realize the full promise of equality have been frustrated. Many have lost faith that the Government has the will or the capacity to redeem its pledge as contained in the laws it has enacted to fulfill the provisions of our Constitution and Bill of Rights. For the future well-being of this Nation, it is essential that this faith be restored; that the pledge of equality be redeemed. It is too late for promises. What is needed is action...comprehensive and total action that will achieve results, not the mere palliative of tinkering and promises.

How does HUD view this situation? On May 9, 1971, the day before the second report, Secretary Romney was interviewed on Meet the Press. He stated

> "We are making more progress on the basis that we are administering the housing laws and increasing the housing opportunities for minority families than ever before in the history of this country, and I expect to see us make more in the future than we have made in the last two or three years." (let's hope so)

The Secretary further pointed out that HUD "encourages local organizations to locate HUD-supported housing outside areas of minority concentration, although he didn't say how. There was further mention of the fact that the fair housing statutes require that there be no discrimination in housing. The Secretary repeatedly stressed the importance of HUD meeting all statutory requirements. But, HUD has never fully utilized its statutory authority to refuse to fund any water and sewer, urban renewal, or other project in a community which practices housing discrimination. This approach Romney called "forced integration," and he announced his opposition to it. He said:

> "I do not believe there is anything in the statutes or anything in the Constitution that requires every community in this country to provide housing for families of every income level and every racial background."

Further:

> "it will be counter-productive to undertake to force low and moderate income housing and integration into every suburb in this country. And I don't believe that the Constitution calls for it, and I don't believe the statutes call for it."

This is a far cry from the earlier promises of "open communities!" Where does the Secretary really stand?

On June 11, the President finally announced his policy on equal housing opportunity. The policy states:

1. Denial of equal housing opportunity to a person because of race is wrong, and will not be tolerated.

2. Such denial will not be tolerated whether practiced directly or overtly or under cover of subterfuges, or indirectly through such practices as price and credit discrimination.

3. A municipality that does not want Federally assisted housing should not have it imposed from Washington by bureaucratic fiat; this is not a proper Federal role.

Throughout the policy statement an effort is made to separate racial integration from economic integration. In other words, for those members of racial minorities who have attained a certain status, housing should be made available just as it would be for whites of a similar status. This argument may sound reasonable on the surface, but when one fully looks at it and sees the total condition of racial minorities in America today, it becomes apparent that as long as economic discrimination in housing is legitimized by the Government the chain of racial segregation and economic deprivation cannot be broken. As an example, in the Washington, D.C. area many jobs, both public and private, are being moved to suburban areas such as Montgomery County and Northern Virginia. The supply of low and moderate income housing in these areas is "limited," and residents have been fighting against increasing the supply of such housing. Their arguments have been economic. For a black in D.C. who has been working as a clerk, secretary or at some low paying professional position there are few choices. Her or she can:

1. Try to find housing in an area close to the new office where there is no affordable housing to find.

2. Try to figure out a way to get a bus to the new office when the bus services is expensive and inadequate. (There are too few parking spaces at the new office and they are reserved for the higher paid people anyway)

3. Try to find a new job in a shrinking job market in the city.

That's what happens when economic but not racial segregation is allowed. The question is, What's the difference? As the Civil Rights Commission makes clear, minority people are disproportionately represented among the Nation's lower-income families. As long as economic arguments against the placement of HUD-subsidized housing are allowed to stand this fact will be perpetuated.

The Justice Department has filed suit against Black Jack, Mo., a suburban area of St. Louis. This is a positive move that Secretary Romney recommended to the Justice Department seven months ago. The suit alleges that the white citizens of Black Jack incorporated their area and passed zoning codes in a blatant attempt to keep out low and moderate income housing which would have provided shelter for some minority families. Even in this blatant situation the remedy may not be available for years.

If the Government wins its case initially, the appeals process could go on for years. If the suit is finally decided in favor of the Government, the decision may be directed at such a unique situation that no precedent applicable to other situations may be available. The case by case approach utilized in the Black Jack situation, and in eight others soon to be announced is not enough. Furthermore, the seven months delay carries grave implications that the administration is reluctantly taking these steps.

Other efforts are needed. Secretary Romney alluded to these methods when he spoke of providing incentives by granting preference for federal funding to communities with adequate low-and moderate-income housing. And by declaring a community ineligible for urban renewal or water and sewer funds if it has made no effort to provide low and moderate income housing. These latter methods will reach more people more quickly than the case by case approach. In combination, all of these efforts could provide results.

Nagging doubts linger why has all of this activity by the Administration in support of open housing occured at this time? Why was the Presidential policy statement so long in coming? Why did the Justice Department avoid acting on Secretary Romney's request for action against Black Jack for seven months? Why is everything happening now?

Why not? It might be a coincidence, but the Civil Rights Commission is now holding additional hearings on open-housing. Secretary Romney and other Administration officials were scheduled to testify. Could it be they wanted to have a few tidbits to feed to the Commission and thus take some of the bite out of the inquiry?

Whatever happened to open communities? Whatever happened to Romney's goal?

THE WAR--POLITICS AND PRIORITIES

AS NEGOTIATIONS, DISCUSSIONS, AND BATTLES CONTINUE, the Nixon Administration continues to cry that we cannot leave Indochina until our prisoners are returned. Some people agree that such return will never occur until the war is ended and we withdraw. That position makes sense. Why should North Vietnam release our prisoners when they serve as a shield to protect against even wider and heavier bombing and give the NLF a bargaining chip in the Paris talks?

We must constantly remember that there are prisoners in Indochina and we must do all we can--letter writing to Congress, to the NLF and North Vietnamese delegates at Paris, to Hanoi, to the UN--to secure their adequate treatment and prompt release. But we must not allow them to become a bloody shirt which is waved by the Administration as a justification for an immoral, unjust, and plain stupid continuation of a calculated, imperialistic intrusion into the life of the people of Indochina.

It is estimated that there are between 300 and 400 American prisoners in North Vietnam. They are our sons, brothers, husbands, and friends. We must have them returned to us. However, at present kill rates, we lose that many American men every 8-10 weeks. These men are also our sons, brothers, husbands, and friends. They can never be returned to us.

For every two months that we delay in leaving Indochina, we permanently lose as many men as are currently held prisoner. What is our real priority in our supposed policy of withdrawal? If we are concerned about American lives, why don't we leave now and bring back our prisoners through political negotiations or economic grants? Surely the cost to us all, now and in the future, will be less than if we continue the war for another year or more. During that time we could lose well over 1,500 of our soldiers, and our prisoners would not have had their sufferings alleviated one bit.

Why are we staying in Indochina? What political motivations are there? We have admitted that the war cannot be "won" in any conventional sense. There are even ways we could help stabilize all of Indochina through economic assistance. Why then do we persist in military adventurism? Ask yourselves these questions. But better yet, ask the Senate, the House, and, more importantly, the President why they don't do the things necessary to bring all Americans home now.

TOWARD A FOUR DAY WEEK

Recently, like many businesses in the private sector, the City of Atlanta (Ga.) announced that they were planning to experiment with the four day, 40 hour week for all municipal employees. Quest feels that with both a Regional and an Area office in Atlanta HUD is provided with a golden opportunity to take the leadership position among federal agencies and test employee acceptance of the four day week.

THE WHITE HOUSE

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT ON FEDERAL POLICIES RELATIVE TO EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Of all the services, facilities and other amenities a community provides, few matter more to the individual and his family than the kind of housing he lives in -- and the kind of neighborhood of which that housing is a part. Through the ages, men have fought to defend their homes; they have struggled, and often dared the wilderness, in order to secure better homes.

It is not surprising, therefore, that public policies affecting the kind and location of homes available should be the subject of intense and widespread interest, and also of intense, far-ranging and sometimes passionate debate.

One of the achievements of this administration of which I am most proud has been the dramatic progress we have made in increasing the supply of housing, including particularly low- and moderate-income housing, so as to expand the range of housing opportunities for Americans in search of a decent home. Housing starts are currently at the highest levels in 20 years. While our primary emphasis is on stimulating private construction, the number of federally assisted low- and moderate-income housing starts planned for fiscal year 1972 will be more than four times what it was as recently as fiscal 1968 -- an increase from some 150,000 to some 650,000. The remaining needs are still enormous. But this represents a giant step toward fulfilling the goal set forth in the Housing Act of 1949, of "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family."

The very fact that so much progress is being made, however, has sharpened the focus on what has come to be called "fair housing" -- a term employed, but not defined, in the Civil Rights Act of 1968, and to which many persons and groups have ascribed their own often widely varied meanings.

In this statement, I shall set forth the policies, as they have been developed in this administration, that will guide our efforts to eliminate racial discrimination in housing, to enlarge housing opportunities for all Americans and to assist in stable and orderly community development. It is important to understand the laws that govern those policies, the limits within which they operate, the complexities they seek to address, and the goals they seek to achieve.

My purpose is not to announce new policies, but to define and explain the policies we have -- setting forth what we will do and what we will not. The factors determining patterns of housing and community development are immensely complex and intricately balanced, many are uniquely local in nature, and the Federal Government operates in important but limited ways and under limited authorities. Within those limits, we intend to continue to move vigorously -- not to restrict free choice, but to expand and protect it.

Underlying our housing policies -- and embodied in our laws and our Constitution -- are certain basic principles:

more

-- Denial of equal housing opportunity to a person because of race is wrong, and will not be tolerated.

-- Such denial will not be tolerated whether practiced directly and overtly, or under cover of subterfuges, or indirectly through such practices as price and credit discrimination.

-- To qualify for Federal assistance, the law requires a local housing or community development project to be part of a plan that expands the supply of low- and moderate-income housing in a racially nondiscriminatory way.

-- In terms of site selection for a housing development, the Federal role is one of agreeing or not agreeing to provide Federal subsidies for projects proposed by local authorities or other developers.

-- A municipality that does not want federally assisted housing should not have it imposed from Washington by bureaucratic fiat; this is not a proper Federal role.

-- Local communities should be encouraged in their own voluntary efforts to make more housing more widely available, and to reduce the extent of racial concentration.

-- Putting an end to racial discrimination, and building toward the goal of free and open communities, is a responsibility shared by Federal, State and local governments, by business and private institutions, by civic leaders and by individual people everywhere.

A HISTORY OF HARDSHIP

The history of racial discrimination in housing in America runs deep; but, to the Nation's credit, so do efforts to correct it.

In earlier years, some local ordinances actually forbade minority group members to purchase property in blocks where they did not constitute a majority. Such ordinances were invalidated by the Supreme Court in 1917.

Covenants running with the land were widely used to restrict minority citizens in their access to housing. The efficacy of these covenants rested on their possible enforcement by courts and the awarding of damages for their breach. Judicial enforcement was invalidated by the Supreme Court in 1948.

Federal policy itself, quite unsurprisingly, in past eras reflected what then were widespread public attitudes. Policies which governed FHA mortgage insurance activities for more than a decade between the middle thirties and the late forties recognized and accepted restrictive covenants designed to maintain the racial homogeneity of neighborhoods.

Compounding the plight of minority Americans, locked as many of them were in deteriorating central cities, was the Federal urban renewal program. It was designed to help clear out blighted areas and rejuvenate urban neighborhoods. All too often, it cleared out but did not replace housing which, although substandard, was the only housing available to minorities. Thus it typically left minorities even more ill-housed and crowded than before.

more

Historically, then, the Federal Government was not blameless in contributing to housing shortages and to the impairment of equal housing opportunity for minority Americans. Much has been done to remedy past shortcomings of Federal policy, and active opposition to discrimination is now solidly established in Federal law. But despite the efforts and emphasis of recent years, widespread patterns of residential separation by race and of unequal housing opportunity persist.

RACIAL CONCENTRATION TODAY

In terms of racial concentration, the facts on housing occupancy revealed by the 1970 Census are compelling. In our 66 largest metropolitan areas, accounting for more than half the U.S. population -- of which 49 are in the North and West -- the central city white population declined during the decade of the sixties by about 2 million (5%) -- while the black population increased almost 3 million (35%). This meant overall black population in central cities increased from 18% in 1960 to 24% in 1970.

In the suburban areas of these cities, however, the story was different. White population increased by 12.5 million (30%) and black population increased by less than 1 million (44%). The result was that the total black proportion of suburban population increased only from 4.2% in 1960 to 4.5% in 1970.

In city after city the figures tell the same story. In New York City the white population declined by 617,000 while the black population rose by 579,000. In St. Louis whites declined by 169,000; blacks rose by 40,000. Thus the central cities grow ever more black, while the surrounding areas, for the most part, remain overwhelmingly white.

It is important to remember, of course, that simple divisions into "central city" and "suburban" can be misleading in this context. It makes a great deal of difference how large the city is, and what the patterns of distribution within the metropolitan area are in terms not only of housing, but of business, industry, recreational facilities, transportation, and all the many factors that enter into its internal dynamics as a functioning community.

One thing this points to is that no single set of rigid criteria can be laid down that will fit a wide variety of local situations. To speak of "opening up the suburbs," for example, may have widely differing implications in different metropolitan areas, just as the term "central city" means something quite different in New York or Chicago than it does in New Haven or Fresno.

To some extent, the persistence of racially separate housing patterns reflects the free choice of individuals and families in both the majority and minority communities. Economic factors have also played a part, since average income levels -- even though the disparity is being narrowed -- remain lower for minority Americans than for the Caucasian majority.

It also is inescapable, however, that continuing, often covert housing discrimination is thwarting or discouraging the efforts of many minority citizens to find better housing in better neighborhoods. This is wrong, constitutionally indefensible, and pragmatically unwise.

THE COSTS OF RACIAL SEPARATION

Separation of the races, particularly when it is involuntary, has damaging consequences. One is racial isolation -- the social isolation of the races from each other -- an estrangement that all too readily engenders unwarranted mistrust, hostility and fear.

Another consequence of involuntary racial separation is the waste of human resources through the denial of human opportunity. No nation is rich enough and strong enough to afford the price which dehumanizing living environments extract in the form of wasted human potential and stunted human lives -- and many of those living environments in which black and other minority Americans are trapped are dehumanizing.

Another price of racial segregation is being paid each day in dollars: in wages lost because minority Americans are unable to find housing near the suburban jobs for which they could qualify. Industry and jobs are leaving central cities for the surrounding areas. Unless minority workers can move along with the jobs, the jobs that go to the suburbs will be denied to the minorities -- and more persons who want to work will be added to the cities' unemployment and welfare rolls.

Clearly, both outright racial discrimination and persisting patterns of racial concentration combine to create a serious set of problems that public policy must seek to meet. These problems are human, they are economic, they are social -- and they pose a challenge of the first magnitude to the community of the metropolitan area that tries to meet them in a way most nearly fair to all those affected. It is encouraging that many communities are meeting this challenge, and meeting it successfully.

THE FEDERAL ROLE

The Law

The Federal Government's responsibilities for eliminating racial discrimination in housing derive partly from the Constitution, partly from the Government's own extensive involvement in housing and community development programs, and partly from a number of statutes and Executive orders.

The broad outlines of the law are contained in our Constitution, which in its 5th, 13th and 14th amendments guarantees basic civil rights, including the right to seek shelter free from any racial discrimination fostered by Federal, State or local governments.

Executive Order 11063, issued in 1962, expressly states that housing discrimination and segregation prevent the Nation from attaining the housing goals declared by the 1949 Housing Act. It further directs all Federal departments and agencies "to take all action necessary and appropriate to prevent discrimination" as to race, color, religion or national origin in federally assisted housing and related projects.

more

Congress followed up this initiative two years later with the Civil Rights Act of 1964. A critical provision of that law, Title VI, provides that no person shall, "on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance." As a penalty for such discrimination, it provides for a cutoff of Federal funds to the program in which the discrimination occurs. The clear intent of the Congress in enacting this legislation was to insure that no program utilizing Federal financial aid should be tainted by racial, ethnic, or religious discrimination. A careful review of the legislative history indicates that the Congress intended that the cutoff of Federal funds resulting from a violation should apply only to the particular activity in which the unlawful racial discrimination took place, and not to all activities undertaken by the violater.

In the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the Congress declared that "It is the policy of the United States to provide, within constitutional limitations, for fair housing throughout the United States."

Title VIII of the 1968 act goes beyond the previous statutes (which in terms of housing, had dealt only with that which was federally assisted) to prohibit discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin in most private real estate actions, whether sale or rental and regardless of whether Federal assistance is involved or not. In addition, this title also makes it the responsibility of "all executive departments and agencies" and the specific responsibility of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, to "administer their programs and activities relating to housing and urban development in a manner affirmatively to further the purpose of this title."

Antidiscrimination Enforcement

The provisions of the law aimed at barring racial discrimination in housing are administered primarily by the Departments of Justice and of Housing and Urban Development.

HUD's role under Title VI in the 1964 act is to guard against racial discrimination in any program or activity to which HUD gives financial assistance. Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act requires HUD to investigate complaints of housing discrimination and, where appropriate, to attempt to resolve such complaints through persuasion or conciliation. In calendar year 1970, HUD completed processing of 169 complaints; in 89 of these cases conciliation was successful. In the same year, HUD referred 19 of these cases where conciliation failed to the Department of Justice.

Under the terms of Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act, the Attorney General is empowered to bring suits in Federal court where he finds that racial discrimination in housing constitutes a "pattern or practice," or where housing discrimination cases raise issues of general public importance. Since January 1969, the Attorney General has brought or participated in 85 such suits against more than 250 defendants in 22 States and the District of Columbia. In addition, the Justice Department has negotiated out of court with several hundred other persons and companies and brought them into voluntary compliance.

These cases have involved not only outright racial discrimination in the sale or rental of homes, but also such practices as discriminatory real estate advertising and exclusion of minorities from multiple listing services. Several of the suits have been against municipal authorities. Several others have been against major companies controlling tens of thousands of dwelling units, and have resulted in orders that they take dramatic remedial efforts to attract minority families into buildings from which they have previously been barred or discouraged.

Not only have these suits directly opened to nonwhites a great deal of housing previously available only to whites; they also have had a significant wider impact in stimulating others to come into voluntary compliance with the antidiscrimination laws. This vigorous enforcement as required by law will continue.

Unlawful racial discrimination in housing extends beyond the barring of individuals from particular buildings or neighborhoods because of race. The courts have also held that, when its reasons for doing so are racial, a community may not rezone in order to exclude a federally assisted housing development. In such cases, where changes in land use regulations are made for what turns out to be a racially discriminatory purpose, the Attorney General, in appropriate circumstances, will also bring legal proceedings.

How Federal Programs Operate

In order to understand the way in which the broad "fair housing" mandates translate into specific actions, it is important to understand what some of the Federal housing programs are and how they operate.

HUD provides direct financial assistance in three broad areas:

-- Housing for low- and moderate-income families. This includes the Home Ownership and Rental Housing Assistance subsidy programs ("Section 235" and "Section 236" housing, respectively), the rent supplement program enacted in 1965, and assistance to low-rent public housing.

-- Grants for State, areawide and local planning.

-- Aid for community development activities, such as urban renewal and water and sewer grants.

In addition, of course, HUD plays a major role in providing mortgage insurance and in facilitating the overall flow of mortgage funds.

In each of these areas, the Federal program role -- as the governing statutes make clear -- is essentially one of responding to local or private initiatives, rather than one of imposing its programs on State and local governments.

In none of HUD's grant programs does the Department act directly. The Department builds no housing, develops no land use plans, clears no slums and constructs no sewers. Instead, HUD provides, within its statutory and regulatory framework, financial assistance to local developers and agencies, both public and private, who build and manage housing, and engage in planning and community development activities.

The extent to which HUD program activity is dependent on local initiative and execution is frequently overlooked, but is an important element in considering policy issues. Sites for HUD-assisted housing must be selected and acquired by local sponsors -- public or private -- and housing developed on those sites must conform to local zoning and local building codes. Planning performed with HUD assistance is done by State and local governmental bodies. Community development activities -- urban renewal, water and sewer, or open space projects, for example -- are initiated and executed by local government.

In short, HUD's role in the location of assisted housing is one not of site selection, but of ultimate site approval. It does not initiate local housing projects. With more applications than it can fund, it must select those for funding which it determines most fully satisfy the purposes of the enabling legislation -- and in doing so it says "yes" or "no" to local requests for financial assistance for projects that have been locally planned and will be locally executed.

In responding to local and private initiatives, of course, the Department must follow the statutory mandates. For example:

-- As noted earlier, HUD may not make a grant under any of its programs if the recipient will discriminate or otherwise deny the benefits of the assisted activity or project to persons on account of race.

-- Where the "workable program" requirement -- imposed on local communities by the Housing Act of 1949, as amended in 1954, in connection with urban renewal and related programs -- is a condition of eligibility, HUD may not make a grant in the absence of a HUD-certified workable program for community improvement. The program must make reasonable provision for low- and moderate-income housing, which must of course be available on a non-discriminatory basis.

-- Where comprehensive planning is supported by a Federal grant under the 1954 Housing Act, as amended in 1968, the plan must include a "housing element" to insure that "the housing needs of both the region and the local communities studied in the planning will be adequately covered in terms of existing and prospective in-migrant population growth." This provision has broad application, since such planning grants are often used to prepare the areawide plans which are a prerequisite for Federal financial assistance under the water and sewer, open space, and new communities programs.

Similarly, the statutory requirement of "fair housing" applies in the area of private housing construction, where the Federal role is substantial. The Federal Government provides billions of dollars in assistance and guarantees of mortgage credit for housing financing. The Federal Government sets standards widely used by industry, such as minimum property standards, credit standards, appraisal standards, and construction standards. The Federal Government makes market analyses which materially influence the private sector. The Federal Government approves mortgagees, builders, developers and brokers with respect to their doing business with HUD. Local government and private initiative and Federal standards work together to produce new housing. And under the law, that new housing -- like all the Nation's housing stock -- must be open equally to all Americans regardless of race, religion or national origin.

In approaching questions of "fair housing" for low- and moderate-income persons, it is important to remember that we are dealing with a rather imprecise term and with two separate matters.

One is the elimination of racial discrimination in housing. On this, the Constitution and the laws are clear and unequivocal: racial discrimination in housing will not be tolerated.

In public discussions of "fair housing" or "open housing," however, another issue has often become confused with that of racial discrimination. This is sometimes referred to as "economic integration." Frequently it arises in debates over whether subsidized low-rent public housing should be placed in the suburbs as a means of moving poor people out of the inner city and, if so, where, to what extent, and by what means.

One of the arguments frequently advanced is that poor people are often disadvantaged by living in low-income neighborhoods; that poverty thus perpetuates itself; and that the remedy therefore is to scatter the poor among the more affluent. Another argument often heard is that blacks and other minorities tend to be disproportionately poor, and that "economic segregation" is therefore equivalent to racial segregation.

It is important to remember, however, that the terms "poor" and "black" are not interchangeable. A higher percentage of blacks than of whites lives below the poverty line -- but there are far more poor whites in America than there are poor blacks. Much of the Nation's most dismally inadequate housing is occupied by blacks; much of it is occupied by whites. Many of the worst slums are black; many are white. And by the same token, the skilled trades, the businesses and professions increasingly are populated by affluent blacks whose children go to the best schools and colleges and who themselves have taken their deserved place in the leadership, not simply of inner-city neighborhoods, but of urban, suburban and rural communities all across America.

To cite only one statistic, a recent special census study showed that in the North and West, black husband-wife families headed by persons under 25 had a median income equal to that of their white contemporaries. Although the income disparities among other ages and categories is still far too wide, this is one measure of how far we have come; also, because these young families represent the future, it is an indication of where we are heading. To equate "poor" with "black" does a disservice to the truth, and it blinks the fact -- fundamental to anything so intensely personal as housing -- that we are dealing with the needs not of an undifferentiated mass, but of millions of individual human beings, each separate and unique.

In many cases -- when dealing with poor people who happen to be members of a racial minority -- questions of where to locate housing for poor people and where to locate housing for members of the minority are related. But the issues involved are separate, and those who would treat effectively with race and poverty must take care to maintain the distinction. What is true of blacks in this regard is also true of Mexican-Americans, Indians and members of other minorities.

When predominantly poor members of a racial minority are concentrated heavily in one particular area of a central city, the question of where to build housing designed to accommodate some but not all of them is often not easily answered. On the one hand, for example, concentrating the subsidized housing in the predominantly black area could have the effect of reinforcing the racial separation that already exists. On the other hand, failure to build at least a portion of it there could be unfair to the people who choose to live there, as well as reinforcing the housing blight that often prevails in such areas. Quite apart from racial considerations, residents of outlying areas may and often do object to the building in their communities of subsidized housing which they fear may have the effect of lowering property values and bringing in large numbers of persons who will contribute less in taxes than they consume in services. Beyond this, and whether rightly or wrongly, as they view the social conditions of urban slum life many residents of the outlying areas are fearful that moving large numbers of persons -- of whatever race -- from the slums to their communities would bring a contagion of crime, violence, drugs, and the other conditions from which so many of those who are trapped in the slums themselves want to escape.

In many other respects, the balances to be struck are often close and the considerations complex: for example, how are the interests of one part of a metropolitan area to be weighed against those of the area as a whole? What other housing opportunities are available? How do transportation patterns, job patterns, school locations, enter into the choice? What related efforts are being made to expand opportunity and end racial discrimination? And how and by whom are the determinations to be made?

By establishing "fair housing" as a policy but leaving the term undefined, Title VIII of the 1968 act added a complexity of its own: a lively debate about just what it means, and especially about the meaning of its requirement that Federal officials take "affirmative action" to promote it.

This and the other laws make abundantly clear that the Federal Government has an active, affirmative role to play in eliminating racial discrimination in either the sale or rental of housing. They also make it clear that those communities which seek Federal assistance for most housing and community development programs must work honestly and constructively to meet the housing needs of their low- and moderate-income families. The debate has arisen over the extent to which Federal agencies are either required or authorized to go beyond anti-discrimination efforts, and to use their program money leverage as a means of requiring local communities to subordinate their land use policies to the goal either of breaking up racial concentrations or of promoting "economic integration."

POLICIES OF THIS ADMINISTRATION

It will be the firm purpose of this administration to carry out all the requirements of the law fully and fairly.

Racial discrimination in housing is illegal, and will not be tolerated. In order to fulfill their responsibility for eliminating this discrimination, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Justice Department have been developing and elaborating a wide-ranging program aimed at creating equal housing opportunity.

By "equal housing opportunity," I mean the achievement of a condition in which individuals of similar income levels in the same housing market area have a like range of housing choices available to them regardless of their race, color, religion or national origin.

At the outset, we set three basic requirements for our program to achieve equal housing opportunity: It must be aimed at correcting the effects of past discrimination; it must contain safeguards to ensure against future discrimination; and it must be results-oriented so its progress toward the overall goal of increasing housing opportunities can be evaluated.

The administration is embarked upon this course. It must and will press forward firmly.

The chief components of such a program include the firm enforcement of laws relating to equal housing opportunity; the development of appropriate equal housing opportunity criteria for participation in programs affecting housing; the development of information programs; and the development of policies relating to housing marketing practices.

It is obvious that not all individuals will exercise the full range of choices made available to them. Those are matters for individual decision.

What is essential is that all citizens be able to choose among reasonable locational alternatives within their economic means, and that racial nondiscrimination be scrupulously and rigorously enforced.

We will not seek to impose economic integration upon an existing local jurisdiction; at the same time, we will not countenance any use of economic measures as a subterfuge for racial discrimination.

When such an action is called into question, we will study its effect. If the effect of the action is to exclude Americans from equal housing opportunity on the basis of their race, religion or ethnic background, we will vigorously oppose it by whatever means are most appropriate -- regardless of the rationale which may have cloaked the discriminatory act.

Access to federally assisted housing, like access to all housing, must be nondiscriminatory as to race. But simply to apply this principle will not answer all the practical problems raised by our national commitment to expanded and equal housing opportunity.

Pressures for the construction of new housing and the rehabilitation of existing housing are growing all across the Nation -- in central cities, in suburbs, in small towns, in rural America. Demand for housing at all income levels is increasing dramatically.

As a major part of our national effort to meet these housing needs -- an effort which is both private and governmental -- federally assisted housing is being built at a rate approaching 3/4 of a million units a year. These units are needed. They are being built. And they must be built someplace. The question is where.

If all the federally assisted units are packed together in one type of community or one kind of location, we will only exacerbate the social and, in all probability, the racial isolation of our people from each other.

If we build federally assisted instant ghettos, we fail both our communities and the people we are trying to help.

more

If we impact or tip the balance of an established community with a flood of low-income families, we do a disservice to all concerned.

The answers to these practical considerations are not simple -- but they are of great importance.

Based on a careful review of the legislative history of the 1964 and 1968 Civil Rights Acts, and also of the program context within which the law has developed. I interpret the "affirmative action" mandate of the 1968 act to mean that the administrator of a housing program should include, among the various criteria by which applications for assistance are judged, the extent to which a proposed project, or the overall development plan of which it is a part, will in fact open up new, nonsegregated housing opportunities that will contribute to decreasing the effects of past housing discrimination. This does not mean that no federally assisted low- and moderate-income housing may be built within areas of minority concentration. It does not mean that housing officials in Federal agencies should dictate local land use policies. It does mean that in choosing among the various applications for Federal aid, consideration should be given to their impact on patterns of racial concentration.

In furtherance of this policy, not only the Department of Housing and Urban Development but also the other departments and agencies administering housing programs -- the Veterans Administration, the Farmers Home Administration and the Department of Defense -- will administer their programs in a way which will advance equal housing opportunity for people of all income levels on a metropolitan areawide basis.

This administration will not attempt to impose federally assisted housing upon any community.

We will encourage communities to discharge their responsibility for helping to provide decent housing opportunities to the Americans of low- and moderate-income who live or work within their boundaries.

We will encourage communities to seek and accept well-conceived, well-designed, well-managed housing developments -- always within the community's capacity to assimilate the families who will live in them.

We will carry out our programs in a way that will be as helpful as possible to communities which are receptive to the expansion of housing opportunities for all of our people.

In these efforts we will be aided by a change that already is taking place in the way subsidized low- and moderate-income housing is planned, built and managed: in terms of new construction, the old-style, massively concentrated high-rise public housing "project" is largely a thing of the past; the trend now is strongly toward low-rise dwellings, many of them one-, two-, three- or four-family, on scattered sites, so that they can blend in with the community without detracting from nearby properties. Under the newer Federal programs of financial assistance to low- and moderate-income housing of other sorts, the pattern has been one of variety, enabling the community to fit the development to its own needs.

By approaching local questions of land-use planning in a creative and sophisticated manner, local authorities should in most cases by able to work out site-selection problems in ways that provide adequate housing opportunities for those who need them without disrupting the community.

In other ways as well, we are and will be working to promote better and more open housing opportunities. For example:

-- By Executive Order 11512, issued in February 1970, I ordered that in the selection of sites for Federal facilities consideration should be given to the availability of adequate low- and moderate-income housing -- and I have ordered that all agencies take specifically into account whether this housing is in fact available on a nondiscriminatory basis.

-- Guidelines have recently been issued by the Office of Management and Budget under the provisions of the Uniform Relocation Assistance Act of 1970, to assure that adequate housing is provided on a nondiscriminatory basis and within the financial means of persons displaced by federally financed projects.

-- The Department of Housing and Urban Development has been actively pressing the major Federal agencies regulating lending institutions to establish effective, affirmative measures against racial discrimination in home mortgage financing. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates savings and loan institutions, has been the first to undertake the development of new rules and procedural safeguards The Board is also working closely with industry leaders to improve financial services offered to members of minority groups.

-- HUD also engages in a number of other Title VIII activities intended to eliminate racial discrimination in housing. It publishes advisory guidelines to aid those subject to the jurisdiction of the law in understanding their responsibilities; it undertakes studies of housing practices and collects racial data on all of its housing programs in order to determine areas of noncompliance; it conducts continuing community education programs to inform individuals of their rights under law; it encourages national, State and local private organizations in undertaking programs designed to expand housing options for minority group and low-income individuals; it works closely with State and local agencies having fair housing laws substantially equivalent to Title VIII and refers complaints to these agencies.

A FREE AND OPEN SOCIETY

On March 24, 1970, I issued a statement setting forth in detail the administration's policies on school desegregation. In a portion of that statement that applies equally to housing, I said the goal of this administration is "a free and open society" -- and I added:

> In saying this, I use the words "free" and "open" quite precisely.
>
> Freedom has two essential elements: the right to choose, and the ability to choose. The right to move out of a mid-city slum, for example, means little without the means of doing so. The right to apply for a good job means little without access to the skills that make it attainable. By the same token, those skills are of little use if arbitrary policies exclude the person who has them because of race or other distinction.
>
> Similarly, an "open" society is one of open choices -- and one in which the individual has the mobility to take advantage of those choices.

more

In speaking of "desegregation" or "integration," we often lose sight of what these mean within the context of a free, open, pluralistic society. We cannot be free, and at the same time be required to fit our lives into prescribed places on a racial grid -- whether segregated or integrated, and whether by some mathematical formula or by automatic assignment. Neither can we be free, and at the same time be denied -- because of race -- the right to associate with our fellow-citizens on a basis of human equality.

An open society does not have to be homogeneous, or even fully integrated. There is room within it for many communities. Especially in a nation like America, it is natural that people with a common heritage retain special ties; it is natural and right that we have Italian or Irish or Negro or Norwegian neighborhoods; it is natural and right that members of those communities feel a sense of group identity and group pride. In terms of an open society, what matters is mobility: the right and the ability of each person to decide for himself where and how he wants to live, whether as part of the ethnic enclave or as part of the larger society -- or, as many do, share the life of both.

We are richer for our cultural diversity; mobility is what allows us to enjoy it.

Economic, educational, social mobility -- all these, too, are essential elements of the open society. When we speak of equal opportunity we mean just that: that each person should have an equal chance at the starting line, and an equal chance to go just as high and as far as his talents and energies will take him.

The Federal Government bears an important share of responsibility for achieving fair housing for all Americans. But fair housing is not the responsibility of the Federal Government alone, and not of government alone. Its achievement depends on all of us -- on the States and localities, on business and industry, on civic and professional leadership, and on each of us in his daily life.

For its part, the Federal Government will discharge fully its own particular responsibilities and offer example and leadership for others in the discharge of their responsibilities. We will be vigorous in enforcing both the constitutional mandate and the statutory requirements that there not be housing discrimination on grounds of race. In the more complex and difficult area of providing subsidized housing in areas where it is needed, we will encourage communities and local developers to take into account the broad needs of the various groups within the community and of the metropolitan area.

But we all must recognize that the kinds of land use questions involved in housing site selection are essentially local in nature: they represent the kind of basic choices about the future shape of a community, or of a metropolitan area, that should be chiefly for the people of that community or that area to determine. The challenge of how to provide fair, open and adequate housing is one that they must meet; and they must live with their success or failure.

To local officials are entrusted the initial, and often the final, determinations as to how much low- and moderate-income housing is to be built, how well it is to be built and where it is to be built. They operate under the same antidiscrimination strictures that apply to Federal officials. And in terms of site selection and residential zoning -- both sensitive and complex matters, and yet both central to the goal of truly open housing in truly open communities -- they operate in an area little charted by the Supreme Court but increasingly being navigated by the lower courts, as land use restrictions come under mounting challenge on constitutional grounds.

Two recent court cases suggest the boundaries within which other courts will be wrestling with these questions in the months and years just ahead. In one of these cases (James v. Valtierra), the U. S. Supreme Court decided that, absent any evidence of racially discriminatory intent, a State law requiring prior approval of low-rent housing projects by community referendum does not, on its face, violate the Constitution. Noting California's long tradition of using referenda on a wide range of issues of public policy and the factual finding in the lower courts that legitimate economic considerations were involved in the referendum in question, the court concluded that there was no factual basis for a claim that the California law was "aimed at a racial minority." On the other hand, in another case presenting sharply contrasting circumstances (Kennedy Park Homes Association v. City of Lackawanna, N.Y.), a Circuit Court of Appeals recently held illegal certain zoning and other municipal restrictions used to block a subsidized low-income housing development in an all-white neighborhood. In that case the municipal practices were determined to be subterfuges and part of a pattern of racially motivated discrimination by municipal officials; the Supreme Court denied certiorari. In short, the one case did not present evidence of racially discriminatory intent; the other did.

If these cases define the outer limits, they also indicate the broad range within which cases will be pressed in the courts by those who would seek the mandate of judicial decree in setting aside local restrictions to achieve social purposes: for example, the right of a community to impose large-lot zoning, even in the absence of any racial discrimination, has lately been under court challenge.

If the infinitely varied individual questions that arise as our thousands of local governments hammer out their individual local land use policies are not appropriate for Federal determination -- and they are not -- neither would it be wise to allow a situation to develop in which they have to be hammered out in the courts. But they no doubt will end up in the courts if they are not satisfactorily dealt with outside the courts through timely and enlightened local action.

This administration will offer leadership in encouraging local and State governments and housing authorities to address this question creatively and imaginatively, and to address it with a keen understanding of the needs of those persons for whom the housing is being provided as well as the needs of the community at large.

Local and State authorities, for their part, should continue to respond constructively, pressing forward with innovative and positive approaches of their own. For it is they -- and beyond them, it is millions of Americans individually -- with whom the challenge primarily rests. We are dealing here in a realm in which Federal authority, while substantial in terms of enforcement, is very limited in terms of the many choices that must be made in each community.

There are some who assume that the Federal Government has the power to do anything it wants -- or that they want. But we have maintained our freedom for nearly two centuries by insisting that the Federal Government's exercise of power not exceed its authority.

I believe in that principle. And because the authority of the Federal agencies is limited -- quite properly, I believe -- with respect to the essentially local and individual choices involved in local community planning, their power will be used in only limited ways.

This does not reduce the challenge to the States, the localities and the people; it heightens it. For the task of making our communities livable, not for some but for all -- of achieving our goals of decent homes and of open communities in a free and open society -- this task summons the best that is in each and every one of us, in a cause that touches our soul as a Nation. We cannot afford to fail. I believe that together we can succeed.

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY GEORGE ROMNEY

AT PRESS CONFERENCE

ON

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Washington, D.C.
June 14, 1971

As you know, my Department and the Department of Justice have been working closely together for over a year on policy questions relating to equal opportunity in housing.

Now that the President has issued his statement on this subject, the Attorney General, the General Services Administration, Robert Kunzig, and I are pleased to be able to discuss with you actions which our respective organizations will be taking to implement the President's statement.

It has been agreed that I will lead off. Mr. Kunzig and the Attorney General will then follow with statements, after which we will all be available for questions.

First, I am delighted with the President's statement and decisions. He has forthrightly faced our most complex, emotionally sensitive and explosive domestic situation. That situation arises from the combination of the nation's long overdue racial revolution, the crisis in our metropolitan areas, and our desperate need for a greater supply of less costly housing for American families -- particularly the poor and those of below average income. The President's policy statement is a positive meshing of two inalienable constitutional rights -- equal opportunity for all and freedom of choice for all. In pointing the way toward what ought to be it is a timely and superior example of statesmanship in defining what can be. I will always be proud of the part our Department played in its development.

I want to emphasize my enthusiasm for the President's very positive statement, because some of the early reports suggested that it was at variance with my earlier views and actions, and represented a retrenchment of this Department's policies or activities. Such reports are not based on accurate knowledge and could not have been based on a careful reading of the Presidential statement.

I hope one product of this conference may be to prompt some of those who rushed to judgment to check the record and read the statement with care.

As the President said, the statement does not announce new policies, but seeks to define and explain those we have.

Let me cite three short, but critical paragraphs of the President's statement:

> "At the outset, we set three basic requirements for our program to achieve equal housing opportunity: It must be aimed at correcting the effects of past discrimination; it must contain safeguards to ensure against future discrimination; and it must be results-oriented so its progress toward the overall goal of increasing housing opportunities can be evaluated."

"The Administration is embarked upon this course. It must and will press forward firmly."
